MANDRILL
We Are One
(Artista)

Mandrill continues to deliver the word (or should I say music in their own inimitable style. Mandrill is as powerful as the name implies. Ever since their first LP-simply entitled, Mandrill -they have rendered a sound that can only be effectively described -as strong. This pure strength and energy has been appreciated by audiences all over the world as their music makes use of many different syles.

Just what is Mandrill's sound? To start off with, there's a base of Latin and African which makes for alot of percussive activity. Add to this base some carribean style vocals, a little boogie, some basic New York street funk, reggae and at times, a little hard rock (all in good taste of course, never any clutter) and there you have it. The group has picked up these various elements from their origins in Panama and their move to New York. Their diverse forms of expression are paralleled by their diverse talents and the two are combined to make some very together music.

Since their first LP in 1970, the group has been known as mostly an album group, but they have had two singles of some note; "Peck Ya' Neck" caused some tremors in the R&B scene as did "Ali Bom Baye" which they did for the soundtrack of the movie, THE GREATEST. Most of their fame (both here and in the rest of the world) has come from such LP's as Composite Truth, Solid and Beast From the East.

Their latest LP, We Are One is what I feel is not only their best but the one which will broaden their audience here in the states. The appeal ranges from Latin to African to disco and they add a touch of reggae to keep things interesting (remember, they have an international following to please, also).

We Are One is all Mandrill in that there's the power, strength, and excitement that has knocked us all out before. The force is especially evident in the cuts, "Can You Get It" and "Funky Monkey." In these numbers the group goes off and boogies just like old times and "Peck Ya' Neck". On the same side, but somewhat slower and more subdued is "Happy People." These cuts are solid Mandrill music with the emphasis on solid. They're seemingly all over the place, but the sound remains amazingly tight.

On the flipside we have some material that may not be their typical sound, but it's certainly a good vehicle for the group's talents. My favorite here is the mournful ballad "Gilly Hines." They do this ballad with a sensitivity that lets the listener know that they mean it. Also more evident on this side than in the past is a strong reggae vein that the smart listener should definitely tap.

As I said, this LP should really bring the group into the limelite where they belong. AS I write this I realize that there are many folks out there who have been into Mandrill for quite some time and have been groovin' right along; well now you won't be a happy minority. We Are One is gonna break the monkey out of the cage and beleive me, he "sho' is funky!

RINGO STARR
Ringo the 4th
(Atlantic)

Ringo the 4th (actually his seventh album) is Ringo's newest release and he recorded this one "without a little help from his friends." In the past, a Ringo album was the closest thing to a Beatle reunion that any diehard fan could hope for, as John, Paul, and George would each come through with a couple of songs per album. But The 4th marks a change for Ringo, as he co-writes with old friend Vini Poncia six of the album's ten songs.

Ringo's vocals never did exhibit the brilliance of other rock singers such as Roger Daltrey, nor has he been blessed with a natural gift for melody such as has been aptly demonstrated throughout Paul McCartney's long career. But, in acknowledgement of these weaknesses, Ringo does surround himself with strong arrangements, a fine producer (Arif Mardin), and talented musicians. The result is an album which is a basically solid work.

The album opens with an old hit, "Drowning In The Sea Of Love," aimed right at Top 40 with its disco-like orchestration (making it the album's weakest song). As with Rotogravure's "Las Brisas," Ringo seems infatuated with the Latin beat, and so this time he gives us "Tango All Night," sounding like a Brazilian dance number. "Gypsies In Flight" is more of a spinoff from Beaucoups of Blues or Sentimental Journey, with country-western style and flavor. The most promising song on the album is "Wings" (no connection with McCartney), complete with Lennon-like brass arrangement and fine guitar. Other songs fit more into the mold of Rotogravure.

Granted, Ringo isn't a vast reservoir of musical talent, but be uses what he's got in order to come up with an album that isn't half bad.

Paul "Whizz"

SMALL FACES
Playmates

A Small Facves reunion may not be quite as awe-inspiring as a Beatles reunion, but before Steve Marriott split to form Humble Pie and Ronnie Lane, Ian McLagan and Kenny Jones found Rod Stewart, the Small Faces were one of Europe's most beloved bands. However, the band never quite made it above cult status here, although they did hit it big with the single "Itchycoo Park."

Back then, they were ahead of their time. Now, unfortunately, they're behind the times, a directionless anachronism reformed when Marriott's solo career fizzled and Stewart ditched his Faces. Bassist Lane refused the reunion offer (he was busy completing a collabarative album with Peter Townshend), so his spot has been taken by ex-Framptonite Rick Willis. Too bad, for Lane was as instrumental to the quartet as was Marriott. (Since this album's release, it has been announced that Wings guitarist Jimmy McCullough has joined the Small Faces as a fifth member.)

Playmates reveals the new Small Faces as little more than great pretenders. The group's original spirit is sorely lacking, as is any basic purpose for this album's issuance other than to make money. Cuts such as "High and Happy" and "Saylarvee" (a nifty Jerry Lee Lewis parody) are enjoyable, but all in all, this is a recording which never rises above mediocrity. It should be of sufficient worth to the group's early fans as a then/now perspective, but the average listener will found it only that -- average. Summing up Playmates crawls along with an "about as welcome as a carton of cigarettes in a cancer ward" C.

BETWEEN THE 19TH AND THE 20TH

When heaven and earth building new structures on time the CONcorde appears magically making time for the capitalists because they need it.

It is the 19th
when 2 + 2 = 4
when $E = MC^2$ and when introductions are correct:
when chapters are built like pyramids-- masses move each impossible tonnage of passivity into place as clandestinely as the throes of a warrior volcano or as a glacier heading south biting through altitudes of granite-hard rigidity.

It is between the 19th and the 20th and this century, like leg irons, traps or leaves scars:
Fanon pondered how "allied forces" countered the predatory armed talons riding the wheel of a swastika of usurped design:
Did a Roosevelt stop the motion of that swastika?
How is it that a Cyclopian multi-headed slaver sits in the cockpit of this same swastika and rides over Nkrumah, Cabral and Biko?

Nazis squander their everyday disguises--
Storm troopers restoring plane service on behalf of the imperial court making the world open its eyes; an alliance asphyxiating the ghosts of Auschwitz
jumps any border;
who deals the futile bans and proclamations to stop a children's march surging out from a maggoty white hell in reach of Biko's dream?
Who pumps bullets
in the back or in the head from the "privacy" of a maximum security joint or a ghetto bed?

Who watches from above or from similar footing
the "gang" of four, or the Baader-Meinhoff "gang" or the "gangs" in Sharpesville or Soweto?
Monitors or plainclothesmen surround statue steeds to watch those ready to dismount.

It is the year of the serpent.
Snakes move out from their pits smelling the approaching water line.
After molting and shedding several skins victuals are eating their own tails.

I tumble and leap like leaves speeding ahead of gravity.
Flurries of talking eyes catch sight of this before they fix in diatribe again.
Yes, watch the tree.
Yes, it dies if the cycle and sequence is interupted.
Yes, compressed or deformed seasons bring on cancers.
Yes, patience like the concentric rings in the core and heart of a distinguished tree must bear height.
Oh male and female night
Oh night of forceful winds
Oh night, "I'm still learning"
Oh night, I'm looking for your lips.

A quizzical lizard hibernates under the belly of an Israeli tank.

From within the palm of a hand I know,
I time the arrival of sweet morning-- blood has evaporated and fallen over the horizon of the night before.
Between the 19th and 20th
it's arriving,
not because it's waited for or wanted, but because it's arriving
already!

LYNYRD SKYNYRD
"Street Survivors"

Lynyrd Skynyrd

The following review was written a scant few hours before word was received concerning the catastrophic plane crash which all too suddenly and tragically claimed the lives of Ronnie Van Zant, Steve Gaines, and Steve's sister Cassie (backup vocalist). Not a single word below has been added, dropped, or in any way changed. The final sentence was meant to be merely a reference back to the album title, not an ironic omen to a disaster which at the time I knew nothing about. Goodbye Ronnie, Steve and Cassie. Time won't let us forget you. -R.N.

LYNYRD SKYNYRD
Street Survivors
(MCA)

Lynyrd Skynyrd's follow-up to their immensely successful live effort, One More From The Road, is their fifth studio album. It marks the debut (studiowise, at least) of Steve Gaines as one-third of Skynyrd's guitar team; Gary Rossington and Allen Collins remain the other two. The addition of Gaines is a fine move, as his writing skils are used to advantage on songs such as "I Know A Little," "You Got That Right," "I Never Dreamed" and "Ain't No Good Life." His only bad moment comes when he attempts to sing lead on the latter tune, for his voice lacks the distinctive punch which is so much in evidence on everything that lead vocalist Ronnie Van Zant sings. Van Zant is the voice of Lynyrd Skynyrd and he is in extremely fine form throughout this disc. His best efforts come forth on "One More Time," a ballad he co-authored along with Rossington, and the Allman-like version of "Honky Tonk Night Time Man" (written by the ol' Okie from Muskogee, Merle Haggard). Interestingly enough, Collins, who prior to Gaines joining the group had written much of the band's material, has a hand in only one of the songs here, "That Smell," on which he collaborated with Van Zant.

Once again, Skynyrd has shown that its place in the forefront of country-rock is well justified. The entire effort is "myghty fyne," including the nifty album cover for which a complete set at the Universal Movie Studios was set ablaze. Give Street Survivors a listen, or better yet, see the group in concert (they're great). I may be just a wee bit prejudiced in Skynyrd's behalf, but I can't help stop myself from giving this new one a "they've survived just fine" A-.

WISHBONE ASH
(MCA)

One of the best things about Wishbone Ash is that their music defies easy classification, and their latest album Front Page News is no exception. I suppose the group can be described as "heavy progressive;" they don't play the more commercial heavy rock of Aerosmith or Boston, yet they certainly aren't "progressive" in the sense of Yes or ELP. This album serves as a fine example of the difference between "heavy" and "screaming" rock. Although it is loud, the music is rather laid back and the vocals almost mellow. The cuts are testaments to the guitar as the ultimate rock instrument, with virtually no keyboards and very little orchestration. Whereas the exclusivity of guitars proved disastrous to such groups as Grand Funk, Wishbone Ash manages to pull it of with style and grace. The best songs are "Diamond Jack," "Midnight Dancer," and "Surface to Air," with its fine vocal harmonies. Front Page News is "heavy progressive" indeed-a very listenable and very likeable blend of metal and class.

-Tom Anderson

THE MOTORS
(Virgin)

Some decent heavy metal riffing from some former members of the lamented pub band Ducks Deluxe plus new cohorts. Album would be a lot better if vocals weren't so absent in the balls department. "Phoney Heaven," however, hits hard and with fine lyrics and hook, to boot. Rates a "Ross Nerenberg would dig it more" B-.

Philip Milstein

CHRIS DeBURGH
At The End Of A Perfect Day
(A&M)

British balladeer Chris DeBurgh has a fine talent for creating stories and imagery with his lyrics. In the songs on this album, he presents pictures of weddings taking place amid the serenity of a country churchyard, of revelry at a Brazilian carnival and of a group of friends sharing good times and music with each other. Such songs are immediately appealing and a welcome relief from some of the self-pitying ponderings that lesser songwriters have been coming up with. My favorite song here is one called "Summer Rain" in which, against an old-timey honky tonk piano arrangement, deBurgh tells a tale of a couple strolling through a London park on a Sunday afternoon. It has all of the charm which I find in shows like "Upstairs Downstairs", and the scene which the song envisions is an inviting one.

For the most part, the songs here are presented in a gentle folk syle, reminiscent of the earlier Cat Stevens albums (which isn't surprising, since both the producer and guitarist from the Cat's first few albums make their contributions here). There are also some fine musicians from such aggregations as Fairport Convention and Brand X. DeBurgh's raspy voice doesn't have the melodic quality of Steven's, but is still an effective instrument for getting the lyrics across. His talent is worth discovering, and this album is a good place to start.

BOOKS:

"Benign Neglect's" Death Blow

THE BLACK FAMILY IN SLAVERY AND FREEDOM: 1750-1925
by Herbert G. Gutman
$6.95 664 pp.

In 1967, the historians George Frederickson and Christopher Lasch wrote a probing essay which looked into and analyzed some of the limitations in works dealing with the African-American slave. They concluded that excessive attention had been paid to slave "treatment" in examining the social and psychological effects of slavery on African-Americans. Frederickson and Lasch showed how such historians as U. B. Phillips had defined "treatment" as the central issue, but also how his most severe critics had failed in defining what the core issue was. By collecting data from the "kindness and benevolence" of masters, U. B. Phillips proved to his satisfaction that slavery was a "mild and permissive institution," whose primary function was not so much to produce profit as to "ease the accomodation of the lower race into the higher culture." The critics of Phillips, unfortunately, have tried to meet him on his ground. Where he collected a list of benefactions, his critics compiled one of atrocities. According to Herbert Gutman both methods suffer from the same defect for they attempt to solve a conceptual problem (ie; what did slavery do to the slaves) by accumulating quantitative evidence. In assessing this debate, Gutman contends that the only legitimate conclusion one can make from the quantitative approach is that great variations in treatment existed from plantation to plantation.

Gutman's book is therefore a qualitative analysis of the slave experience primarily from the point of view of the culture, the folklore, the intergenerational continuities of similar slave experiences irrespective of the differences in demography and treatment by different masters. Gutman shows in his wealth of data, that despite variations in their treatment, slaves acted on common beliefs. Such behavior then means that the question posed by Lasch and Frederickson (What did slavery do to the slaves?) requires first knowing who the slave was. He contends that owner treatment of slaves affected how the latter behaved as individuals. However their collective behavior depended upon much more than their treatment. Slave naming practices and marital rules (as well as slave marriages in settings where slaves could re-marry) are irrefutable evidence of "the importance of interior slave beliefs and experiences in shaping their behavior."

For instance, the author goes into painstaking detail to show that contrary to the persuasive "scholarly" belief that Black families were generally headed by females which resulted in a certain "patholgy," most slave families were double-headed. Even the families that were headed by women named their sons after either the absentee father or a male kin, such as uncle or grandfather. This shows the importance of the male presence and pre-eminence in the kin and social structure of slave societies. Those women without husbands could always reclaim the respect accorded her then by society by getting married. There were also such extended family system arrangements as surrogate or quasi-fathers, aunts, uncles, etc. which mitigated the destruction provoked by slavery.

According to Gutman, these beliefs and the developing culture that sustained them could not have regularly revealed themselves over time and in diverse circumstances if they were merely free floating slave beliefs. Institutional arrangements-especially among slaves-had to exist for such beliefs to be acted upon over time and that is why inter and intragenerational linkages between slaves and families are so important. Although the immediate family and the extended kin group were among the central binding institutions within developing slave communities -in themselves, however, these familial linkages do not explain the full spectrum of slave beliefs and behavior or their origins. In other words, the context which shaped slave behavior was far more subtle than setting explained by those primarily concerned with slave treatment. It is clear from Gutman's examination of the slave family and extended kin groups that the persistence of such institutional arrangements had "a coherent social and cultural repertoire (a past) to draw back upon."

Such evidence as Gutman uncovers deals a death blow to the Moynihan-Frazier argument that uses scant and limited evidence cementing together the lie about the "decadently mimetic syndrome" of African-American culture and about the "pathological weakness" of the African-American family. Such doctrines have greatly contributed to the attitude that because of the inherent structural "weakness" of the African-American family, any social, economic, or political programs designed to redress past injustices are doomed to failure. The only solution, according to Moynihan, is "benign neglect."

Gutman's book is in paperback and is 664 pages long including notes, appendices, and indecies. It is worthwhile reading not only for its remarkable contribution to the literature of the African-American culture, but also for the reading of some of the racist and perverted statements about Black people, many of which read like contemporary racist utterences.

MUSIC:

RORY BLOCK/STUFF
October 21

Boston finally has the club that it has needed for so long. Don Law's Paradise Theatre is a perfect place to have a few drinks while seeing a good band perform. On October 21, Rory Block and Stuff were the attractions.

Rory Block, a woman with a good voice and a funk-oriented band played first. She did material from her newest Chrysalis album, Intoxication, as well as older songs including "I'm in Love," the title track of her album released on Blue Goose Records. Rory's strong voice won the crowd over, especially on "Intoxication" and "You Can Lie with a Straight Face." Her voice sometimes brings Bonnie Raitt to mind, but her music is much more funky.

Stuff played an all instrumental set of laid-back, funk jazz which also met with the crowd's approval. They performed some of their own material but concentrated mainly on rearranging other people's tunes, (Earth, Wind ® Fire, Stevie Wonder, etc.), creating a very distinctive sound. Eric Gale is the guitarist extrodinaire of the band. The man is a true master of jazz guitar techniques. The band was very tight, despite the fact that most of the songs were spontaneous and unstructured. Everyone left satisfied after a couple of pleasant sets of music.

-Tom Aversa

PETE TOWNSHEND AND RONNIE LANE
Rough Mix

I am pious rock fan. But Pete Townsend is not God. And Ronnie Lane is not the Avatar. And this is not an album of religious music, though the inspiration for a couple of the songs lies in spiritual thought. Townsend (the Who) and Lane (the Faces) are two men of British popular music, and they have put out the most pleasant and varied album to come along in a punk's age. Long after the 'New Wave' of rock has died and the new albums by today's hot and heavies have become nostalgic, this music will still be timely and enjoyable.

Though no deity, Townshend is the master of basic rock and roll. His songs are the first here to turn heads and tap feet. 'My Baby (Gives it Away)' has several moments of the kind of rock that makes you jump and howl. 'Keep Me Turning' bounces along on a catchy melody into the powerful chaos choruses that have become the trademark of the Who. 'Misunderstood' sounds like the old Kinks, run through, as are the others, with the humor of Townshend's introspective nature. A duet on 'Street in the City' between Townshend, narrating and playing accoustic guitar, and an orchestra brings to mind a Broadway musical.

After several listenings, Lane's songs, sounding at first uninteresting and common, start to emit a warmth and simple beauty uncommon in contemporary music. He moves easily between gentle accoustic tunes ('Annie', 'April Fool') and those famous barroom brawl inspiring rockers ('Catmelody').

With one exception the album is really two solo albums interwoven into one, each song coming across as either Ronnie Lane with Pete Townshend sitting in or vice versa. Only on Townshend's ballad 'Heart to Hang Onto' do the two sing on the same song. Lane croaks through the verses singing of people who pretend to have everything they want. Townshend then seethes in with the chorus, explaining that inside they are crying for a love. This vocal tradeoff is powerful and moving and brings a unique quality to this song. One wishes it had been used in other songs.

After two verses, the song turns into a rave-up from the Who catalogue replete with Townshend's smashed chords and John Entwistle's (WHO else?, asks the liner notes) horns.

'Heart to Hang Onto' is a masterpiece. The album as a whole is masterful.

POLITICS

The Middle East

Middle East Analysis
by Habib Mouallem

For over a month now, an enormous amount of publicity has been given to statements made by U.S., Arab, and Israeli government officials concerning their efforts at overcoming the obstacles that continue to block a resumption of the Geneva peace talks. Many of these statements have been nothing more than the ambiguous, overly-optimistic rhetoric that accompanies any matter of diplomatic urgency. But, with regard to the United States' dual role as mediator between the Arabs and the Israelis and as advocate of its ally Israel, an interesting pattern has emerged.

Two examples will illustrate.

On September 12, the State Department issued a statement to the effect that Palestinian representatives would have to be at Geneva for the Palestinian question to be solved. This came just prior to the arrival of Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan in Washington. There was an immediate reaction among Israeli and American Jews. They charged the Carter Administration with being insensitive, with delivering an ultimatum that smacked of the imposed settlement that Israel has always sought to avoid. They viewed the statement as contradictory to a 1975 agreement between the U.S. and Israel stating that any change in composition of participants in the Geneva conference must be agreed to by all original participants.

On September 13, a spokesman for the State Department dismissed these allegations, saying that the Palestinians had been central to the Carter Administration's policy all along. He reiterated that all participants at Geneva would have to recognize the applicability of U.N. Resolution 242 (and therefore, Israel's right to exist). He added that no Palestinian representatives had yet been chosen. No mention whatsoever was made of the PLO.

On October 1, a U.S. joint Soviet declaration was issued at the U.N. It called for the establishment of "normal peaceful relations" in the Middle East, as well as the need to insure "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people".

Again, Israeli and American Jews were put on the defensive, this time far more dramatically than in the previous example. The Israeli government flatly rejected it. American Jewish leaders were incensed. When President Carter arrived to address the U.N. two days later, he was greeted by New York City Mayoral Candidate Edward Koch, who handed him a letter denouncing the declaration. Carter's speech at the U.N. was carefully designed to assuage Israeli fears. He emphasized the importance of U.N. Resolutions 242 and 338 and said the Soviet-American document was not binding. Later he commented that he'd rather commit "political suicide" that hurt Israel.

But the Israelis were not mollified until President Carter, Secretary Vance, and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan engaged in the intense discussions that resulted in the U.S.-Israeli "working paper". These discussions occurred the same evening, following Carter's address to the U.N. It is reported that Dayan went to this meeting fully prepared to break off Israel's participation in further plans for the Geneva conference if the U.S. was not willing to assure Israel that she would neither have to negotiate with the PLO nor negotiate the concept of a "Palestinian state".

Israel was given her assurances.

And so we see the United States rushing to smoothe the feathers of its ruffled ally. Again and again.

The pattern that has recently been established concerns the uproar made by Israel whenever the U.S., in its mediating role between Israel and the Arabs, makes a statement concerning Palestinian representation at Geneva. And this uproar is invariably responded to by flustered State Department officials (or even President Carter himself) who must clarify, rearrange, or contradict whatever was initially said that upset the pouting ally.

Consider the fact that President Carter is the first U.S. president to acknowledge Israel's right to "an entity" of their own. Consider the fact that the Arab confrontation states refuse to go to Geneva unless they are accompanied by Palestinians. In 1974, Arab leaders recognized the PLO as the sole representative of the Palestinian people. It follows that these same leaders would demand a PLO presence at Geneva.

The U.S. has not catered to this Arab demand. Nor has it catered to the Israeli demand that only Palestinians from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (who do not represent the PLO) be at Geneva. But the U.S. is the only country in a position to forge a compromise on this thorny issue. And it must do so in a fair-minded mediating capacity.

The U.S. must not risk alienating the Arabs by publicly backing down on its suggestions in order to appease outraged Israelis. The Palestinians have been outraged for almost 30 years and finally an attempt is being made diplomatically to appease them in conjunction with the existence of a secure Israel. Without this diplomacy, the Palestinians will have no alternative but to continue to resort to terrorism in their efforts to be recognized.

Israel would do well to feel secure in its relationship with the United States. Th U.S. has repeatedly proven that it will not abandon its ally. Right now its priority must be to concentrate on its role as mediator.

FILM: Numero Deux

Jean-Luc Godard's Numero Deux

Last Saturday night, the main lecture room in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College was filled to capacity for the New England premiere of Jean-Luc Godard's Numero Deux. Considering Godard's history of filmmaking, I'm sure that all were expectting a highly critical look at contemporary society and a film which would disregard most restraints of traditional cinema. And of course as expected, Godard did not let them down, Numero Deux was a unique film.

If there's a narrative plot to Numero Deux, then Goddard is the main character. The film opens with him talking, he discuses everything from financial difficulties in making the film, to himself as a factory producing for consumption. In these sequences, Goddard is personally communicating with the audience. He's telling them that Numero Deux is a film about a filmmaker trying to construct a visual essay concerning the family in modern society.

The film then goes on to present Godard's essay on the nuclear family. This portion is called a visual essay because it is entirely made up of filmed video images. These were shot in a manner so they would appear to be filmed images of television screens. The viewer saw anywhere from one to three of these screens simultaneously (obviously not traditional cinema). This technique set up a simulttaneous look at the family members without the use of the edit. In this way Goddard creates something very similar to montage. Both methods create a meaning from relating two separate images, but Godard's is constant and surprisingly effective considering how unusual and foreign this style is to the audience. For instance, in a scene which implements this dual image, a little girl sees her parents having brutal intercourse. The scene gains emotion because the audience simultaneuosly views the girl's facial expressions and the action that is causing them.

The whole section about the family is made up of events which are related, rather than ordered into a traditional story line. These events clearly show a family structure which is fragmented and dying. Godard often shows the separate family members totally misunderstanding each other and never realizing it. Each member is so wrapped up by their own existence, that their lives never are integrated into a family unit.

Godard suggests that the problems come from our own industrialized, modern societal habits. The father for example, is so involved in his work, that when his wife complains about not seening him enough he calls her asessment bullshit. He also is periodically impotent, this problem again work related. When he finds out that his wife had been to bed with another man,(probably due to his lack of time with her and his impotence) he brutally rapes her. This makes sense in the context of events, for Godard pictures the male as being objectified and battered by this twisted patriarchal mentality. Numero Deux in this sense, and others, concentrates on the social roles and relations which encourage people to behave in a particular way.

The film ends with Goddard again appearing on the screen, he's tired and worn from witnessing his film about the family. He wants his audience to know that he's just a filmmaker, but the intensity of the subject has overwhelmed him. He's depicted something which he can't order, and he knows that the solutions won't come easy. His socialist inuendos, throughout the film, lead this reviewer to believe that he certainly has a clear perspective for action which he wishes his audience would adopt.

Jean Luc Godard is an innovator, like most innovators in the arts he will lose popularity for it. His audience tends to be small, a cult so to speak, but he never fails to present them with something new and interesting. (Numero Deux is an example of this) Although Godard will probably never reach the large audience he deserves, he undoubtedly will continue to generate new cinematic techniques which the industry will follow. (His use of the jump cut for example) It seems to me that for a filmmaker whose technique is so closely watched by others, Godard's powerful, personal, expression has been overlooked. But then again what can we expect, he's appealing to people who have the time and patience to decipher his ever changing technique, and these tend to be people interested in the formative structure of his art.

Further Film Facts

Examining the Exorcist

One of the most widely-advertised and popular, but least-understood films to reach mass audiences in several years is THE EXORCIST, based on a novel by William Blatty. Some background on the author and his techniques in the book and film tend to explain the effect of Blatty's work on a mass audience.

After graduating from Georgetown University (where the campus scenes in the movie were shot), Blatty worked for the Central Intelligence Agency in Lebanon in the 1950's, under US Information Agency cover. Later, he returned to Washington to become Policy Branch Chief of the Psychological Warfare Division of the US Air Force. As such, his job involved the military's promotion of popular anti-communist sentiment around McCarthyism at home and Cold War foreign policy abroad.

An example of the work carried out by psychological warfare in US foreign policy is the orchestrated exodus of Catholics from North to South Vietnam in the mid-fifties. In collaboration with Dr. Tom Dooley (whom Blatty quotes in his book) and others, an extensive campaign was carried out by the Catholic Relief Service, local Catholic leaders and an American psychological warfare team to drive peasants south of the DMZ by telling them "the Virgin Mary has departed from the north" and Christ has gone to the south." Amateur as this appears now, "The mass flight was admittedly the result of an extensive, well-conducted, and in terms of its objective, very successful American psychological warfare operation." (quote in The Indochina Story, Bantam, 1970).

In this post-60's era of return to political passivity, when the majority of youth on and off campus display a frustration with or an abandonment of political consciousness, movie-going has enjoyed a sharp rise. This atmosphere has created a mass audience, one without specific political or spiritual direction and ripe for the suggestions which THE EXORCIST carries.

The techniques used by Blatty in his EXORCIST were well-honed by years of practice in the above government business. While in the fifties crude psychological warfare could be foisted on naive groups, Mr. Blatty's sophisticated talents have several messages in the mid-70's:

•Social conscience and faith in our own identity is eclipsed by the threat of infestation by demonic forces (the devil). Or to quote Father Merrin in his central role as the priest-exorciser, "...I think the demon's target is not the possessed; it is us... the observers... every person in this house. And I think the point is to make us despair; to reject our own humanity... to see ourselves as ultimately bestial; as ultimately vile and putrescent; without dignity; ugly; unworthy. And there lies the heart of it, perhaps: in worthlessness. For I think belief in God is not a matter of reason at all; I think it finally is a matter of love; of accepting the possibility that God could love us..."

• •Political activism is attacked by one of the main characters, Chris MacNeil, who condemns a campus demonstration by saying, "It's dumb! This scene is absolutely dumb! Her mind, though untutored, never mistook slogans for truth... And so the rebel cause, to her, was 'dumb'. It didn't make sense. How come? she wondered. Generation gap? That's a crock; I'm thirty-two. It's just plain dumb, that's all...!"

It is Blatty's message, then, that spiritual fixation and religious orthodoxy are, in the final analysis, at the service of political reaction. For religion, activated as a mass response to an externally conceived threat, can be a powerful ideological cement to keep the masses spellbound in a time of profound social crisis. For Blatty, the lessons of the 1955 Vietnam campaign have not been forgotten. Only the place and time have changed. (Old Mole, No. 10, Mar. 1974)

★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★ Harlan County ★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★

Harlan County. Bloody Harlan its known by, the locals who remember. The 30's. Depression. Hard Times. A time of unrest and intense labor strife. The blood flowed as thick as the Monogahalia and feudin' was as real as the corpses which littered the county side.

Organize! Strike! These are the catchwords in dramatic struggles of mineworkers and rural poor in the Appalachian heartlands.

Harlan County U.S.A.
Produced and Directed by Barbra Kopple
Edited by Nancy Baker
Primary Cinematography: Hart Perry

Harlan County, Kentucky has been the scene of labor battles several times this century. There was a major coal strike there in 1937. In 1973, Harlan County was again beset by labor troubles, This time the miners of Eastover Coal Co., a subsidiary of Duke power, voted to join the U.M.W.A. and Duke refused to recognize the union. This movie is a documentary depicting this strike and the events surrounding it.

The women who made this film demonstrated truely amazing ability to deal with this difficult subject. Quite often films of this nature are patronistic or are too brutal to be effective. This film focused on all aspects of the strike. Duke power's public statements appeared with footage taken on the picket line. Most interesting was the treatment of the roles women played in the strike. To supplement the raw on location footage there were films of U.M.W.A. president Arnold Miller; his predecessor murderer, Tony Boyle, and the late Joseph Yablonski. Interspersed with this original footage comes news reel film clips and stills concerning the history of coal miners, a brief film taken at a black lung clinic in Va., and some terrifying statistics. This extremely well edited visual montage is complemented by a sound track of country music. This music is of the variety found on front porches and at work sites, not studio slick Nashville recordings.

This film brought the viewer right into the strike. You became an eyewitness to the head on confrontations between workers, scabs and law enforcement officials. At the woman's support meetings in jail, and on the line the feeling was never shattered. You were part of the movement. In this strike a 19 year old worker was murdered by one of the company's gunmen. It took this shameful incident to bring the strike to a head. Ms. Kopple is to be congratulated in here careful handling of this delicate matter.

Harlan County U.S.A. is a powerful, moving and educating masterpiece. It must be noted that a film of this nature has never been made before at this high level of quality. Harlan County educates and raises viewer awareness so well that this reviewer will unequivocally reccomend it to all.

Gerard Hallaren

"Which side are you on"? was heard in the Valley this summer during the Amherst premier of Barbara Kopple's award winning documentary film "Harlan County". As much an inspiration of the Brookside strikers as the result of four years dedicated work and personal sacrifice, Kopple and company stunningly reveal the humility and pride of 'other Americans', not unlike ourselves, trying to survive. In a particularly moving scene as a meeting of the UMW local, Florence Reese now in her seventies stepped forward to address the disheartened but still determined strikers. A chorus of song which filled the union hall was also taken up by the audience itself. We remember. We are learning.

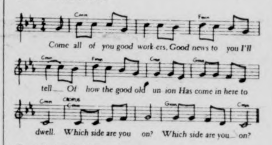
WORDS: FLORENCE REECE
MUSIC: "LAY THE LILY LOW"



Come all of you good work-ers, Good news to you I'll tell___ Of how the good old un-ion Has come in here to dwell. Which side are you on? Which side are you__ on?

© 1947 by Stormking Music, Inc.

Come all of you good workers,
Good news to you I'll tell
Of how the good old union
Has come in here to dwell.
Which side are you on?
Which side are you on?
Which side are you on?
Which side are you on?

My daddy was a miner
And I'm a miner's son,
And I'll stick with the union
Till ev'ry battle's won.
Which side are you on? etc.

They say in Harlan County
There are no neutrals there:
You'll either be a union man
Or a thug for J. H. Blair.
Which side are you on? etc.

Oh, workers, can you stand it?
Oh, tell me how you can.
Will you be a lousy scab
Or will you be a man?
Which side are you on? etc.

Don't scab for the bosses,
Don't listen to their lies.
Us poor folks haven't got a chance
Unless we organize.
Which side are you on? etc.

The Academy of Music

Ticket prices: 2.50-adults, 1.00-seniors and children; Dollar nite on selected films.

Located on 274 Main St., Northampton, at the gates of Smith College, The Academy of Music is the most interesting of all the area theaters. Built in 1890, the Academy is one of the six oldest theaters in the country. Shortly after its opening, Edward H.R. Lyman, businessman, philanthropist, and builder of the Academy, gave the theater to the city. This gift established the first municipal theater in America. The theater is controlled by a non-salaried self-perpetuating board. This board of trustees appoints a director and the theater is controlled much in the same manner as that of a municipal library.

Originally the Academy was established for live performances and the theater attracted many major touring companies as well as housing its own permanent company. Unfortunately the depression and worn stage equipment brought a temporary end to live theater in Northampton. From about 1934 to 1976 the Academy was open only to films. Recent refurbishings however have brought live entertainment back to the theater.

The Academy has won an award for its fine restoration and a visit clearly shows it was well deserved. As well as being beautifully decorated the house which seats 850 was obviously designed for comfort rather than capacity. This creates a very relaxed atmosphere in which to view a film. The theater fare runs from well-known foreign films to only high quality domestic ones. It is not often you will see a blatantly commercial film playing this house. These attributes combined with nearly perfect accoustics make the Academy of Music a fine place to enjoy either a concert or film.

Hatch dives into GOP gubernatorial race

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — With an angry snipe at a governor he says delivers little more than "inflated promises" House Minority Leader Francis Hatch opened his campaign for the Republican nomination for governor Thursday.

Before a crowd of about 100 supporters, the Beverly lawmaker, said, "I am here today for one reason — to tell you that Michael Dukakis should not be governor."

Hatch described the Democratic governor as "as rigid as this podium. He just doesn't listen to people."

Hatch, 52, a member of the House since 1963, has been minority leader for the past six years. Among those lending support at the Thursday news conference was former Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge.

The minority leader criticized Dukakis for failing "to provide the bold leadership he promised.

"We are being taxed to death and talked to death by this governor, and we're all disillusioned," he said. "Disillusioned by his glib rhetoric which promised us 'the best government Massachusetts has ever known' and then gave us the worst automobile insurance fiasco in the state's history."

State government costs $600 million more a year to run than it did three years ago, Hatch said.

"We are still losing jobs by the thousands and businesses by the score," he added. "State government is dead in the water."

Hatch said Massachusetts citizens are tired of "ripoffs" whether in welfare or in no-show state jobs.

Hatch said he is in the GOP race to stay, even if he goes away from an informal party convention May 6 without its endorsement. He is expected to be opposed for the Republican nomination by Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley and Edward F. King, head of Citizens for Limited Taxation.

One of the state's leading Republicans, former Ambassador to Great Britain, Eliott Richardson, has ruled himself out of the contest.

Edward J. King, former director of the Massachusetts Port Authority, announced Tuesday for the Democratic nomination.

Hatch said he will stand on his voting record on the issues of capital punishment and abortion. He has consistently opposed capital punishment and supports the rights of poor women to have "the same options" on abortion as women who can afford them.

Hatch became the second gubernatorial hopeful to make an official announcement this week.

Advice sought on presidential selection

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Presidential Search Committee will be on campus today to hear suggestions from members of the University community concerning ideas about a new president. Current President Robert C. Wood will resign as of January, 1978.

According to Lewis C. Mainzer of the political science department, who has been promoting the committee's visit by setting up appointments, about seven of the 11 committee members will be present to obtain opinions from various people today from 2:30 p.m. until 4 p.m. in room 903 of the Campus Center.

The committee is composed of six University trustees, three faculty members (one from each UMass campus), and two student trustees. The chairman of the committee is Trustee Stephen G. Breyer, who will be present today.

Mainzer said, "A few individuals have made appointments to see the committee, and also a few groups, including a student group, a union group, a faculty consultative committee from the faculty senate, and a group of deans." He said that drop-ins are welcome, yet the schedule today is "somewhat tight."

Daniel M. Melley, director of public affairs for UMass-Amherst, said the committee "wants to get input from others on criteria" for presidential candidates. The members, according to Melley, "are interested in what people on this campus think is needed at this time in terms of qualifications of a president."

At the last board of trustees meeting in Boston on Oct. 5, there was much discussion on the subject of criteria to be used in deciding on a new president.

Many members of the board argued that criteria should be settled before applications are accepted; the search committee felt that it should go ahead and accept applications because, according to Breyer, much time would be wasted in not considerating nominations. Mainzer said the committee has met "a couple of times" since the last board meeting.

The committee will not only visit this campus, but will also take suggestions from people at the Boston and Worcester campuses. Breyer said the members will then compile the suggestions and take them to the trustees at the Nov. 2 board meeting here.

Fac Senate won't yield responsibilities to union

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

Terrence Burke, secretary of the Faculty Senate, said yesterday no items or responsibilities handled by the faculty senate will be yielded to the Faculty Union (MSP) unless collective bargaining should require them to do so.

The senate also passed a motion to allow the Committee on Reorganization to make an interim report on the problems of higher education and outlined the progress and future intentions of the rhetoric program yesterday in its bimonthly meeting.

Burke replied to a written question as to the role of the senate since faculty unionization, saying that discretionary items such as salary increases, academic calendar, grievances and budget advice, previously handled by the faculty senate, may be affected by collective bargaining.

"The administration has refused to talk with any other organization group but the faculty union," Burke said, "so all the faculty senate can do is sit back, speculate and wait."

Chairman of MSP, Larry Roberts, said the union would like to see the faculty senate strengthened, particularly in academic matters, but reminded the senate that the Union was given a mandate to see that certain things ought to be done differently. "There are discretionary items the union would want to bargain for," he said.

Stanley Young, chairman of the committee on Centralization Reorganization, said the committee will make its own considerations on reorganization of public higher education having found the proposal by Secretary of Educational Affairs, Paul Parks, to be unacceptable. A copy of the committee's report will be sent to the Legislative Commission on Reorganization which is currently being established in the hopes of a liaison with the commission.

Professor John Hunt, in an oral report said the backlog in the rhetoric program will not be eliminated in one year as previously anticipated and will require $140,000 more per year in funding. "Next semester there will be 4,150 students enrolled in rhetoric classes creating 166 sections explained Hunt. "Only 105 sections are currently being funded leaving 46 sections without any funds for staffing."

Hunt said the eventual goal is to have an all-freshman rhetoric program but over one-third of entering transfer students have a rhetoric deficiency. "We can't make rhetoric a transfer requirement because the University would lose too many students," Hunt said. "In the meantime we will encourage transfer students to take rhetoric before they come and try to get the Deans to take care of their own seniors."

The committee to evaluate the Chancellor completed its 27-page report, however nobody knows what it says because the report is confidential. Professor Rothberg commented the report is really an exercise in futility unless its information is shared.

A timely reminder...

The days are growing shorter, the sunlight's on the run, tho' it seems like only yesterday we were basking in the sun.
The winter's chill is soon ahead, you know it won't be long before we're trudging thru the snow and singing winter's song.
So remember as you gaze once more at summertime's last flower, to turn your clocks BACK this Saturday eve, and sleep one extra hour.

Inside...

---A former UMass student was arrested on drug charges stemming from yesterday's cancelled "Smoke-in" on Amherst Common. See details on Page 3.

---The Dean, Associate Dean, and Assistant Dean of Students are all out of town. So who's minding the Dean's store? See Page 2 to find out.

Weather...

Skies will be largely witchy. A storm will be brewing over the scarecrow's head. Black cats expected to cross the road. Chances of clouds most likely. Trick or treat weather expected.

Green serves as Acting Dean of Students

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

The Dean of Students, William Field, is out of town today, and he was not in his office yesterday. Robert Daniels, Associate Dean of Students is also out of town. And Janice Wertz, Assistant Dean of Students, is out of town too.

The chair in which Field normally sits is being occupied by an attractive blond woman who is under thirty years of age. Her clothes could be worn by any stylish female undergraduate. Rumors attesting to a student take-over of one of the most important administrative offices on campus remain unfounded as the Collegian learned yesterday that Ruth Green, assistant to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Woodbury, has been appointed acting Dean of Students for yesterday and today.

Field, who is currently attending the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators in Windsor Locks, Connecticut is expected back on Monday.

"This has never happened before," said Green yesterday in reference to Field's absence. "I'm only filling in because I offered to help out for the two days," she added modestly.

Green said her actions in the office were not an "accurate reflection" of a typical day for the Dean of Students. She said she feels her foremost priority lies in "picking up things that have to have immediate attention given to them."

Although Green will concentrate primarily on "matters requiring immediate attention until Monday, she will also be responsible for the countless phone calls directed to the Dean of Students daily. "Sometimes parents call and want some reassurance or information." Green said.

Most students with problems in areas such as housing or academics are first referred to the specific deans who may best attend to student needs. Green must also receive those students, who because of their off-campus residence, must see the Dean of Students to officially withdraw from the University.

As Dean of Students, Green will also be responsible for students with discipline problems.

"There are incidents of grade forging or acts of endangering behavior," Green said. "I'm concerned with acts that jeopardize the safety of other students."

Staff members could not estimate the number of students who enter the Dean of Students office during the course of a day. "Some come in when they are at the end of their rope," Lillian Fishman, secretary to the Dean of Students commented, "and others come in here figuring they should start at the top in solving their problems, and there are also some who just wander in here by accident or some other reason." Fishman said the office was "constantly busy" and that some days there were "30 or 40 phone calls alone."

Green's temporary position makes her the highest ranking female official on campus according to Jon Hite, Student Government Association co-president. A Dean of Women was though necessary during the days of the sexually segregated residence halls. However, in recent times, the positions of Dean of Men and Dean of Women were discarded in favor of a Dean of Students responsible for the coordinated resident hall system that incorporated within its framework the dormitories, sororities, and fraternities.

Off-campus residents with student problems relevant to the University are also under the guidance of the Dean of Students office.

As Assistant to Vice-Chancellor Robert Woodbury, Green said she "did not get a chance to see many students" from her office located on the third floor of Whitmore. "I am learning a lot on the second floor" she commented.

The woman with the soft voice and sparkling eyes then rose from her chair to receive a student who requested counseling. As she closed the door behind herself and the student, the phone rang in the office. A student's mother called to ask that the dean inform her son's teachers that he was in the hospital in critical condition from a car accident. The caller was reassured of prompt action. "And we will keep in touch," Fishman added.

She then wrote out a relating message for the acting Dean of Students.

CC director concerned with co-op services

By JAMES A. BARBIERI
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center director yesterday expressed concern that growth of the student co-op system might conflict with existing Campus Center services in the future.

William Harris said, "I don't see, at this time, any conflicts between the CC (Campus Center) activities and the co-ops. What I do worry about though, is if the co-ops try to expand their services and a conflict develops."

At least some co-op members say they feel the administration is already anticipating that day and has been harrassing them, most recently with the possibility of charging them rent for their Campus Center offices. Harris, however, said, "I cannot foresee the charging of rent to any of the RSO groups."

"Since the co-ops are doing such a good business, the CC administration is worried about the possibility of the co-ops conflicting with the center's profits from the (University) store and other CC services," said Debbie Herrick, director of the stereo co-op on the first floor on the Campus Center.

Herrick helped sponsor a petition that was signed by more than 3,000 students this week calling for a written agreement between the co-ops and the Campus Center administration that would eliminate the possibility of rent being charged to the co-ops.

Such an agreement is not needed, according to Harris, "as long as there is a mutual trust between the students, the Board of Governors, the co-ops and the CC administration."

But "a mutual trust is not sufficient evidence," said Herrick, "that the co-ops won't be pressured by the administration in other way besides rent."

Armand "Bud" Demers, coordinator of all Recognized Student Organizations, signed the petition this week and said he feels that charging rent to student co-ops would defeat their purpose.

"It just wouldn't be right," he said, "since the co-ops are student-run and work on a break-even level." Making them pay rent would force the co-ops to increase their prices "and the whole idea or purpose of the co-ops would be defeated."

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night voted to return all rent money not approved by the board to the UMass Student Federal Credit Union (UMSFCU) within two weeks. This will result in a rebate of no more than $3 to the UMSFCU.

Second policeman charged with larceny

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. [AP] — A nine-year veteran of the police force has become the second Northampton officer charged with larceny in six weeks.

Luke J. Scanlon pleaded innocent yesterday in Hampshire District Court to charges that he stole $36,000 from Caldor's Department Store late last December.

He was accused of breaking and entering in the nighttime and larceny in a building. Judge Luke Ryan set bail at $5,000 and continued the case to Nov. 10.

In an apparently unrelated incident earlier this fall, police officer Donald Roy was charged with larceny and illegal sale of weapons.

McBee addresses PAUMA on union

By DAN MONTUORI
Collegian Staff

An address by Vice-Chancellor of Administration and Finance James L. McBee was the highlight of the second general meeting of the Professional Association of UMass-Amherst (PAUMA) yesterday. McBee's speech included a discussion regarding the newly formed Union of Professional Employees. (UPE)

In addition to McBee's address, Don Lisnerski of PAUMA's Personnel Policy Committee submitted general guidelines on annual personnel evaluation procedures, prepared by the University Personnel Policy Committee. Lisnerski explained that each UMass campus is expected to draft specific guidelines based on general guidelines, and asked anyone with any imput concerning the evaluation procedures to contact him.

Speaking on the topic of professional unionization, McBee said he could work with a union, or without one.

"There really isn't much of a difference between the effectiveness of a union and the effectiveness of a governance group," McBee said.

McBee expressed concern that the creation of the Union of Professional Employees may have an unfavorable effect on the review of the trustee's professional non-academic staff policy currently being carried on by the University Personnel Policy Committee.

"The Union of Professional Employees 'muddies the water' in regards to the trustee policy review," McBee said.

An area of major importance according to PAUMA members is employee benefits, particularly in the areas of employment security, health care, and retirement plans. One PAUMA member questioned the legality of the state's current retirement plan, which is now in financial trouble.

Federal law stipulates that states must put aside money for state retirement plans, but Massachusetts lacks the necessary funds to do this.

McBee said he did not understand the legal machinery involved, but said that he was sure the state was handling the matter legitimately.

Former student held for pot possession

By JOAN FEENEY

A 28-year old former UMass student is being arraigned this morning at Northampton District Court on drug charges after he was arrested yesterday at the Amherst Common where the canceled "smoke-in" had been scheduled.

Another demonstration to protest the state marijuana laws is scheduled for Sunday afternoon, Nov. 13.

Amherst police yesterday said Jonathan Nelms of West Hartford, Conn., was arrested on charges of possession of a controlled substance — a marijuana cigarette. Bail was set for $50. Nelms withdrew from UMass last spring.

Nelms was one of the few demonstrators to show up at the common for the canceled smoke-in, which was sponsored by the Youth International Party (Yippies). The Yippies had planned to distribute five pounds of marijuana in 3,000 rolled cigarettes to protesters at the common.

Yippie Russ Swan, of 326 Pierpont dormitory, Wednesday withdrew his application for the Yippies to assemble on the common after being advised by an attorney of legal implications involved with distributing marijuana at a demonstration.

Swan originally applied for an assembly at the common for a "great pumpkin party" with live music.

Amherst police and Yippie volunteers yesterday at noon were at the common to disperse any would-be protesters who had not heard the smoke-in had been canceled. About 35 people, including TV media from Springfield, came to the common and left.

No incidents, other than the arrest, occurred, police said. Swan said he does not know if Nelms is connected with the Yippies.

UMass freshman Joseph Gould, of 421 Patterson dormitory, yesterday applied to the town for a protest assembly with speakers and music at the common on Nov. 13.

The November assembly is being sponsored by the Five College Marijuana Protest Committee, in which Gould is a member.

Gould last night declined to say whether the committee plans to distribute marijuana at the November assembly.

Gould said he is acquainted with Swan, but declined to say if Swan is involved with the November protest.

Swan, who earlier yesterday said he is attending a "smoke-in" in New York City this weekend, could not be reached for comment last night.

Gould also declined to say who the speakers, or what kind of music, would be at the protest assembly.

University first level to stop energy waste

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

A meeting on energy and its conservation last night drew representation from the Student Center for Educational Research and the Coalition for Environmental Quality as the problem of energy as relates to federal, state, local, and University organizations was discussed.

Participants decided by general consensus that the most practical way to attack energy waste was to start with the students. If the students themselves did not wish to cut down on energy waste, then University or governmental organizations would be unable to handle the problem at the University level.

There were many alternatives introduced, on the student level, to cut down on the excess use of energy. Among these were: that meters be placed on residence halls and all other University buildings in order to establish which of these are the worst energy wasters; that insufficient or unworkable thermostats, evidently abundant in number, be fixed; that all light switches be changed to time switches; and that students become aware of the "real" and "pressing" problem of energy and do something about it.

To many students, simple actions such as turning off lights when leaving a room, are too much to be contended with, both organizations indicated. However, the excess use of energy involves the students directly.

While conventional energy is running out, students do not seem to realize that as energy is wasted, tuition rises accordingly, the participants said.

SCER and CEQ representatives said it seemed strange that students were ready to sympathize with issues which did not touch them personally, but were hesitant to act when the issue is close at hand.

Credit Union lines result of growth

By LAURIE WOOD
Collegian Staff

If you have ever stood in line at the UMass Student Federal Credit Union (UMSFCU) and become distraught because it takes longer to reach the teller than you have time to wait — don't place the blame entirely on the Credit Union staff. The lines are partially your fault, too.

The long lines, especially on Friday, can be attributed to the fact that the Credit Union is the busiest bank in the Amherst area for over-the-counter transactions, according to Peter L. Bloom, UMSFCU president. Since there are at least 2000 transactions per week, with a minimum of 500 taking place on Fridays, Bloom suggests that members stop by on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday when lines are shortest.

Bloom says it is unusual for a credit union to have as many small deposit and withdrawal transactions as the UMSFCU does, since the purpose of most thrift institutions of this type is to accumulate a large pool of deposits whose total will not fluctuate over a given period of time.

"The members of a credit union are brought together through an idea or a common bond," says Bloom. Generally, most credit union depositors elect to build up their accounts and not withdraw large amounts of money from them. But, since most members of the UMSFCU are UMass students, who do not have appreciable incomes, it is not possible for them to maintain a constant balance.

Despite the relatively small balances of depositors, the UMSFCU has been able to award, ".... almost $0.5 million in loans to over 800 members in less than three years," according to Bloom.

"Right now there are 260 loans outstanding which amount to $145,000, and most of these loans were given to members who could not obtain a loan elsewhere due to the fact that they were students.

"One hundred of the loans awarded throughout the past three years have been new car loans averaging about $4000 each," Bloom added.

Bloom stressed that individuality is a key in the process of considering loan applications. The Credit Committee, whose function is to study loan applications and award loans to those deserving members, does so on a case to case basis.

UNIVERSITY OF MASS.

Student Federal Credit Union

The seven-member committee must reach a unanimous decision in granting or denying a loan for each application that it reviews.

In addition to granting loans to its members and allowing $50 cash withdrawals, the UMSFCU issues Travelers Checks and sells money orders to both members and non-members on savings accounts, 5½ per cent interest is compounded quarterly.

The UMSFCU is indirectly funded through the Student Senate. For fiscal year 1976, the UMSFCU's first year of operation, about $10,000 was received from the senate. The amount was increased to $21,000 for FY 1977, but this year only $1000 was requested. Bloom says,"The Credit Union is making a conscious effort to be autonomous of any outside funding within the next couple of years.

In a document submitted to the Board of Trustees in March 1975 by Peter Birnbaum, the first UMSFCU president, it is stated that "Credit unions are usually supported by corporations or other groups with a common bond.... In our case we set up the University Federal Credit Union Association... which is a Recognized Student Organization. The Credit Union Association became the sponsoring agency. This was done so that the credit would not be tied to or subjected to any form of university wide political gamesmanship."

The UMSFCU received its charter from the National Credit Union Administration in March of 1975, and began operations soon after in Campus Center 166.

The UMSFCU began with 18 members, a staff of 30 and only two teller windows. The room was not large enough to accommodate any more tellers at one time. Cash was accepted from members, but none was distributed to them; transactions took the form of checks and loans. There were also no computer hookups which the UMSFCU had access to, so all transactions had to be recorded by hand.

Despite this difficult beginning, 800 people joined the Credit Union that first year, with assets amounting to $135,000.

In August of 1976, the Credit Union moved upstairs to its present location in the Student Union Building, and at the same time introduced an on-line computer system from Intercontinental Computer, Inc. based in Albany, New York.

As I look back, I recall with regret and disdain the coldness and unfeeling that many of us showed and are still showing towards one another.

Everytime I get into a serious conversation with someone (male and female), one of the main subjects is the UMass grapevine. Now we all know that the grapevine operates anywhere, but it seems that the UMass grapevine not only spreads rumors but serves to create distant or non-existant relationships among the brothers and sisters here.

I'm not placing the blame on anyone in particular, but there are those people who besides spreading rumors help to create them. Some people have decided that if they don't know your business, they will then make up something about you. All of these, he said, she said, and-or he's messing with, she's messing with cliches have become everyday occurrences!

People dislike each other without any concrete reasons. Between so many of the sisters and brothers there are tensions caused by the grapevine.

We have enough problems and pressures without having to worry about a back-stabbing brother or sister. The situation has become ridiculous!

I can't offer any explanations on why a person would like on someone else but I hope this article will make you aware of the problems arising as a result of these lies.

With all sincerity, I hope that we can and will bring an end to this problem soon, for our own sakes.

A male perspective: Women's Rights

By JAMES LEWIS
Assistant Editor of Black Affairs

In response, to the responses I received about my article "Female Expression', I have decided to furnish a clearer sense of what I was talking about.

First, the point of my article was not to suggest that women are the ones responsible for this sick-sexist authority. It is men and the male willed, male dominated society that encourages the male supremacy ethic. If there is to be any proper, true shaping of the women's course, and place of being in this society, it has to come primarily from women. Men should help, but ultimately, and initially, and essentially, it is women who will direct the moves, and their status.

To the reply that women won't get power unless men give it to them, I feel strongly that women have much more power than they realize, and with the right kinds of steps, they could create the society that has their ethic and protection laws. What's to prevent sisterhood? Women have over half the vote! They could vote women into office as well as men. Women should hold the highest offices in government. They should also get into business, although that would be a little harder to accomplish.

I doubt if I have racists, oppressive attitudes and I doubt if I would propagandize anything sexist. If anything, my story was exactly the opposite. Sexism thrive on male dominancy. Is it sexist for me to believe that women should define themselves in society and in their relationships? The only way to keep man from messing up on women and exploiting them is for women (as well as men) to create an environment where men know how serious rape is, wife beating is, and how everything else is screwed up as dictated by men about women. I get tired of listening to male authorities on the women's movement. In any relationship, the women should never allow the man to control her life so much that she keeps hidden her disgust for the situation she feels stuck in. If a man first thinks he can beat a woman, it will be harder later to convince him of his fault.

I don't believe women have an "inherent defect" which allows them to be treated in a sexist way and I never even slightly suggested that in my article. I see that it is through the oppressive manipulation of the male-willed society that women are subjugated the way they are, and it is by unifying and demanding their change will they get their change.

I do believe women should express themselves. I don't believe they should feel they have to express themselves to "every bastion of male supremacy" they encounter.

Third World women meet at 'X'

The Third World Women's Center sponsored an informal social hour last Sunday. The gathering, which was in the Malcolm X Center was designed to acquaint the Third World women of UMass to each other.

The social hour served as a rap session for ideas concerning Third World women. Those who attended the gathering gave suggestions on programs, workshops, and activities they would like to see implemented on and off the campus.

The social hour may not have been a success in terms of attendance, there were 200 invitations sent out, but only 20-25 women were present. The Women's Center feels that more active members are needed in order to make the Center successful. Though invitations were extended to all Third World women, only black women attended.

Those who attended the social hour seemed to enjoy themselves. Everyone there agreed that a lot of beneficial things could happen for the Third World community with more participation.

Woody Shaw in concert at UMass

Woody Shaw, noted jazz trumpeter and recording artist will perform at the UMass Student Union Ballroom Friday, October 28th.

Appearing with Woody Shaw will be his concert ensemble featuring Cater Jefferson on tenor, Jimmy Vass on alto, Steve Turre on trombone, Onaje Allan Gumbs on piano, Cliff Houston on bass and Victor Lewis on drums.

A veteran of the European jazz scene, Woody Shaw's latest album, Live at the Berliner Jazztage, reflects Europe's encouragement of the avant-garde.

Strengthened and more creative because of this influence, Woody Shaw and his ensemble should provide an exciting example of the kind of adventurous jazz being experimented with by Shaw and his other young contemporaries: Steve Lacey and Anthony Braxton.

Tickets are $2.50 (general admission).

They are available at TIX (UMass Student Union — across from Post Office). Also, they are available in Amherst at Faces of Earth, Backroom Records, and Sun Music, and the Sound Room in Northampton.

This event is being sponsored by Union Program Council in association with WMUA. Future events will include: A Halloween party featuring Widespread Depression on October 31, and Bobby Hutchinson on November 19.

Third World news media gets grants

MIAMI (UPI) — The executive board of the World Press Freedom Committee announced Thursday approval of five grants totaling $51,000 for Third World news media projects.

The program, funded by private non-governmental media contributions, also has additional grant requests under consideration, according to the program's executive director, George Beebe of the Miami Herald.

The fundraising effort is headed by Jack R. Howard, chairman of the board of Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

The grants, approved by the committee's executive board, were:

— $20,000 to the University of Nairobi Kenya School of Journalism for equipment for a weekly laboratory newspaper and for scholarships.

— $10,000 for organizing and conducting a training school for print and broadcast reporters in Trinidad.

— $10,000 to the International Press Institute to help underwrite an African Seminar on economic and financial reporting in Nairobi.

— $6,000 to the Partners of the Americas journalist exchange, a program now in its 12th year.

— $5,000 to the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy of Medford, Mass., toward holding a media conference at the University of Cairo next April.

Beebe said additional requests under consideration include those of the International Press Institute, the Inter American Press Association and the Press Foundation of Asia.

Beebe also said a half-dozen American newspapers have offered to donate used equipment to Third World media. Several newspapers which have asked for such equipment are still handsetting type, he said.

Heterosexual women left in bind

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

The "sexual revolution" has left heterosexual women in a bind. If they overcame their socialization and demand sexual satisfaction, they run the risk of being labeled "nymphomaniacs." If they act in accordance with society's concept of women and don't express the desire for sexual satisfaction, they usually don't get it. Then they are labeled "frigid."

The model of the "sexually liberated" woman shows her engaging uninhibitedly in a wide variety of sexual activities, keeping emotional ties with partners to a minimum. In other words, she is now expected to adopt traditional male sexual behaviors.

A nationwide study of female sexuality, The Hite Report, Shere Hite, Dell, '76) indicates this sexual model is neither realistic nor physically and emotionally satisfying for many women. The socialization of American men has left many unable to fully participate in close, loving relationships. Encouraging women to become similarly crippled is not an act of liberation.

The time has come for us to develop a view of female sexuality based not on myth, not on media images...but on the reality of women's sexual experiences and feelings.

Shere Hite asked 3,000 women, ages 14 to 78, about their sexual lives. Overwhelmingly, women wanted sex with emotion, not just physical satisfaction. The worst sexual experiences women reported were those in which they felt they were being used as objects, solely for the sexual satisfaction of men.

Throughout The Hite Report, women report that they often experience embarrassment about sexual activities they are expected to engage in. They also report that even when they indicate to their partners what feels good to them, their preferences are often ignored. It seems that the myth persists that sexual satisfaction is less important to women then men.

Although the role of the orgasm in sex has been glorified, it remains the realistic symbol of physical satisfaction. Most women in The Hite Report said that they consider orgasm an important part of their sex experiences. Almost every woman who didn't orgasm wished she did for a variety of reasons including feeling "left out" or "cheated" and feeling "inadequate."

Many women said they stopped themselves from having orgasms because they were afraid they would look funny, so great is their concern about their physical appearance. Most women who didn't orgasm saw it as a defect in themselves they would overcome if they weren't so "hung-up."

It is a myth that orgasm is women's natural response to penetration by a penis. It is a fact that female orgasm is triggered by clitoral stimulation but experienced deeper in the body. There is no such thing as a "vaginal orgasm." Heterosexual intercourse alone does not usually provide enough clitoral stimulation to bring women to orgasm.

Only 30 per cent of the women participating in Hite's study could orgasm regularly from intercourse without more direct manual clitoral stimulation at the time of orgasm. 95 per cent of the women who said they masturbated (82 per cent of those taking part in the study) reported having orgasms easily and regularly through masturbation. For decades we have been labeling women who respond normally to inadequate stimulation "frigid."

More women orgasm regularly from oral or manual stimulation than from intercourse. Women report that their orgasms from these activities are more intense than those experienced through intercourse. Yet Americans consider to label these sexual behaviors "unnatural" and "perverse."

Many women report that if their partners engage in these activities at all, it is only to shorten the period of foreplay. If the only reason a man will engage in a sexual activity more pleasurable to his partner than intercourse is to "get in" sooner, we have to question whether mutual pleasure is really his goal.

Although most women have been brought up not to masturbate, masturbation seems to be the best way to learn orgasm. 94.5 per cent of the women who reported that they didn't masturbate never have orgasms at all. With masturbation, the problems of self-consciousness and sexual pressure are gone.

Women can concentrate on their own sensations and learn to please themselves. If they choose to have sexual relationships, they can teach their partners what feels good to them. Most of the women in Hite's study who had orgasms from intercourse played an active part in reaching orgasms and did not passively wait to receive them.

Most women who never masturbate or orgasm aren't comfortable with their bodies. Many of them won't even use tampons because they don't wont to touch themselves. Again, it is negative feelings and attitudes that are the problem. These women have no physical defect that acts as a barrier to orgasm.

These same negative attitudes women learn from society affect most women to a greater or lesser degree. Learning to like their physical and sexual selves is a major step towards the attainment of sexual satisfaction. Women can learn to have orgasms.

What are some of the things that happen in heterosexual sex relationships that contribute to women's dissatisfaction? Lack of open communication is a big problem.

Women are embarrassed to admit that they are sexual beings, and ashamed to indicate a preference for specific sexual activities. They express their desires too vaguely and their partners can't tell what they really want.

Some women are afraid that if they communicate their desires, their partners will take this as a criticism and become angry or hurt. Others fear that if they indicate a preference for sexual activities that are less enjoyable to their partners than other activities, their partners will think they are "demanding too much" and leave them.

(There is nothing too demanding about asking for sexual satisfaction. It is a woman's right; not something her partner gives her if he's feeling generous.)

Another problem created by the "sexual revolution" is that of "pressure to perform". For some couples, the woman's orgasm becomes the focus of their sex lives. Sometimes, because men have taken to using women's orgasms to measure their own sexual skill, this creates a "you're going to come whether you want to or not" atmosphere...which is usually enough to insure that the woman doesn't.

A woman's orgasm is for her own pleasure first; her partner's gains from it should be secondary. If this theory was already in practice, women wouldn't resort to faking orgasms.

Out of the 1664 women Hite asked about faking orgasms, 567 said they faked them currently. Another 318 said they "used to". Major reason's given? Not wanting to have sex but feeling pressured, wanting to "get it over with", protecting partners' ego and not wanting to appear "frigid."

It is important to note that many women who faked orgasms did so because although they thought they could enjoy sex with that person, communication wasn't open and their needs weren't being met.

Adequate sex education, open verbal and non-verbal communication between partners and a sincere mutual desire to please should eliminate most of the sexual problems described in The Hite Report.

While studies and generalizations about female sexuality can teach us a lot, every woman is an individual with her own special preferences and responses. The best answer to Freud's question, "what do women want?" is...ask them.

Halloween...

Things get freakier than normal

By TERRY COLUMBUS
Collegian Staff

Don't be alarmed this weekend if someone approaches you and asks if they may suck your blood.

No, it's not a typical inner-city sex deviant, nor is it a desperate vampire. It's Halloween! At UMass, there is a reason for being somewhat more freaky than normal this weekend. Werewolves, witches and chemistry majors will be among those at the Campus Center Saturday night. Escorting them will be invisible men, gila monsters, dodo birds and a special guest appearance by the ''nuns'' of Van Meter South (Central's all female dorm).

Asked the famous question, ''And what will you be for Halloween?'' Some of the various responses were: ''Wonder Woman'', ''A Pub Mug,''; I'm not going to be''; ''Margaret Mead''; ''Groucho''; ''A ride needed to New York''; and a ''jelly bean''.

Other means of merriment for this coming weekend include The Pub in Amherst, which will be holding its annual Halloween party on Sunday night. There will be a $25 cash reward to the person with the best costume and free t-shirts will be given to the first 50 people wearing costumes.

So listen all you introverts, dress up as something other than a turtle and have a good time!!!!

★ Faculty Senate

Professor Berlin, chairman of the committee, replied that although President Wood has received a copy of the report, the real influence is supposed to be on the person who is being evaluated. ''We are confident that Chancellor Bromery will take to heart what he has seen.''

Secretary Burke explained that the evaluation, which was compiled from questionnaries given to students, faculty and administrators and the observations of the committee, has the same type of privacy and limit to distribution as does faculty and administration evaluations.

Provost Paul Puryear has revoked the right of the faculty senate to continue its evaluation of administrators.

Associate Provost Vere Chappell, speaking for Puryear who was not present, told the senate that he expects that it will take 12 months to complete the development of his long-range plan. ''No further steps can be taken,'' said Chappell, ''until the Board of Trustees plans a timetable for the plan's framework.''

Chairman of the Program and Budget Council, Harvey Kline, who has been having trouble getting information on the budget, said he was informed by the Chancellor that certain kinds of information such as names and salaries of faculty are off-limits. ''However, we can ask for information sent by OBIS (Office of Budget and Institutional Studies) to the trustees and any information the Provost sends to the Denas,'' said Kline. ''The problem is, we don't know what information is sent.''

BOG has hard time getting CC audits

By PAULA L. QUEUILLON
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors has had a difficult time gaining access to the audit of the Campus Center for fiscal year 1976, completed July 8, 1977, according to Michael Pill, Co-chairperson of the board.

According to Pill, William L. Harris was reluctant to allow the BOG to review the audit because it would interfere with the privacy of the client. Pill said students pay for this auditing service.

The audit contains a qualified opinion which means the auditors cannot account or approve of all aspects of the financial records, and cannot pin down the ''cost of goods sold,'' said Pill.

''What happened to several thousand dollars of Campus Center Trust fund money?'' Pill asked.

The auditors cannot now determine whether the Campus Center has lost or made money for the fiscal year of 1976, Pill said.

The BOG indicated that it did not blame Harris for the audit results. ''Harris inherited a mess that he did not create,'' Pill said.

In other business, a position statement on promotions within the campus center, which states that two professional staff persons were given promotions in violation of affirmative action requirements, was unanimously approved by the BOG. The board agreed that ''both positions were granted unjustly'' and condemned this type of practice in the future.

The Campus Center assistant director and university conference services manager received promotions with new job descriptions, according to the position statement. This violates affirmative action requirements because there was no internal review to find qualified women and minorities for the position, according to the survey.

The move of the Student Video Project from Student Union 407-409 to the Commuter Lounge was also approved by the BOG. The typing room will be moved to Student Union 407-409.

A maximum of $770.00 will be allocated for the purchase of furniture for the Student Organizing Project, the bicycle co-op, and the stereo co-op.

NE dorms get $175

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area dorms will each be receiving $175, thanks to a vote by Northeast Area Government representatives.

NEAG Treasurer Jeffrey Shapiro said the allocation of funds to the dorms was traditional with previous Northeast and Sylvan area governments. Both Shapiro and Budget Committee member Bob Fraser strongly suggested the funds be used for area functions although they noted the dorms could not be forced to do so.

Prior to the vote, the question of alternatives to the flat allocations was brought up by NEAG Co-president Diane Lauircella. Among the alternatives mentioned were NEAG loans, a policy discussed earlier in the meeting. It was the consensus of most representatives that dorm residents wanted the allocation.

The representatives also discussed a proposal for a NEAG loan policy, presented by Budget Committee member Bill McElhiney.

Provisions of the policy include the requirement that loans granted not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated expenses for the event. McElhiney explained that this provision was to insure the dorm requesting the loan would pay at least half the costs of the event. McElhiney said, ''If we give you 75 per cent of the money, your collateral is less than the total cost.''

The policy is designed to insure that other group treasurers will work closely with the NEAG treasurer. One provision states the NEAG treasurer will at the end of the year, submit a list of those groups with unpaid loans to the new treasurer.

The policy states that loans will be granted to any group who will invest the loan in a money making proposal. Also, the loan must be paid back before the group receives any of the profits.

Co-president Dave Goodhue told the representatives that although groups cannot legally be forced to pay back the loans, those groups that do not would be considered bad risks for another loan.

Amtrak makes plans to sell used railroad cars

WASHINGTON [AP] — For a mere $4,000 or so, you can have your very own railroad car, and not a model size, either. But getting it home is your problem.

Amtrak plans a sale next month on used railroad cars. It's letting 170 of its vintage passenger cars of all types, including sleepers, coaches and diners go to the highest bidder.

The collection includes diners with wood-burning stoves, round-end observation cars and dome sightseeing cars. Most are more than 25 years old and have seen millions of miles of service on trains both famous and obscure.

The surplus cars are stored and will be sold at rail yards in Oakland; Seattle; New Orleans; Chicago; Los Angeles; St. Petersburg, Fla; Topeka, Kan.; New Haven, Conn.; and Minneapolis - St. Paul.

Most of the sale goods are in good condition. But a few were damaged in accidents, and probably will be bid by scrap dealers.

An Amtrak spokesman estimated yesterday that bids for most of the cars would average between $4,000 and $4,500, with the scrap cars going for much less.

"But for the real plus, the unique cars like the domed ones, the price might go as high as $25,000," he said.

Who buys old railroad cars? The spokesman said potential bidders include wealthy railroad buffs, collectors of train cars and owners of restaurants with a railroad motif.

He mentioned George Pins, a New York City attorney who has remodeled one old car and uses it to travel around the country by tagging on to regularly scheduled trains.

Larry Battley of Arlington, Va., a former Amtrak employee, rents out a plush railroad car for groups to ride to Florida, or wherever they desire.

"Some people fix them up and live in them or use them as a recreation home," the Amtrak spokesman said.

Anita Bryant claims to have been persecuted

MIAMI [UPI] — Anita Bryant said yesterday that if citrus officials are going to "persecute" and "crucify" her because of her anti-homosexual stand, they should get it over with and leave her in peace.

"I am clearly a victim of religious persecution, and this is another evidence of religious decay in America," Miss Bryant said in response to remarks by a citrus official that she would eventually be replaced as the chief promoter of Florida orange juice.

"There are those forces in this country who through boycotts and influencing of some of the staff of the Department of Citrus, want me fired only because I took a stand as a concerned citizen and for the protection of my four children," Miss Bryant said.

"I'm sick and tired of being put on the cross continually. If they want to fire me, let them do it now and give me peace."

Edward A. Taylor, executive director of the state Department of Citrus, had told a growers' meeting Wednesday night that the citrus message might be lost on television viewers who associate Miss Bryant with gay rights.

"That's no way to sell orange juice," Taylor said.

Miss Bryant's television commercials have been the Florida Citrus Commission's main promotion for 10 years, but Taylor said some changes will be needed in the "foreseeable future."

Taylor said a de-emphasis on Miss Bryant would bring some new faces to citrus commercials, includin conductor Arthur Fiedler and ice skater Peggy Fleming, both of whom have already prepared ads.

Taylor has no direct say over Miss Bryant's contract with the citrus commission, which runs through August, and Commission Chairman Dan Richardson said the group has no plans to curtail Miss Bryant's commercials.

He said her contract, which lasts through August 1978, won't be discussed until next year.

Florida Gov. Reubin Askew had supported Miss Bryant's drive against a county gay rights ordinance in the Miami area, but he refused to intercede yesterday.

"I have tremendous respect for Antia Bryant and think she is a fine person," Askew said. But he added that any decision on her future would be economic, not personal.

Marion family pays ransom

SHERBROOKE, Que. [UPI] — The family of kidnapped banker Charles Marion has paid a $50,000 ransom demanded for his release from 83 days captivity, but there was still no word yesterday on the fate of the missing executive.

Marion's son, Pierre, delivered the ransom in a transparent plastic bag crammed with used $10 and $20 bills about 9 p.m. EDT Wednesday on a lonely road 25 miles outside the city.

"I have absolutely no comment at this time," Pierre Marion told reporters who contacted him at the family home Thursday.

The kidnappers threatened to execute the banker if the ransom was not paid by midnight Tuesday, but sources said the Marion family was not overly concerned by the delay in his release. His captors said he would be freed anywhere between three and 24 hours after the ransom payment.

A recent letter from the 57-year-old credit manager with the Caisse Populaire de Sherbrooke Est advised his family not to worry if he were not released immediately.

"I will be placed in a spot where I can make a telephone call," he said.

At an early morning news conference, Quebec Police Force spokesman Andre Dugas said Marion made the drop along with an unidentified friend and police bodyguard Yvon Fourgeon.

He could not confirm reports that four men made the pickup.

Energy needs in N.E. cited as critical

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — New England's need for new energy sources is "the most critical in the nation" because the region's economy will be ruined if they are not developed, the regional head of the new U.S. Department of Energy said yesterday.

"We have to come up with the energy equivalent of roughly 210 million barrels of oil annually by 1985 to stay in place," Robert Mitchell said in a telephone interview from his Boston office. "Any action we do not take means incremental addition to our present dependence on oil."

"New England's need for developing these alternate sources is the most critical in the nation. If we don't take action our economic viability and competitive position in national and world markets will erode," he said. "We will remove ourselves from everything except service industries. I don't think we can fly that way. We have to take action."

Mitchell said his office has prepared a plan to come up with the 210 million barrel equivalency, but "it will take hard decisions and commitments in the public sector and private sector before action can be taken."

He said New England's economic viability depends on not becoming any more dependent upon petroleum products. The region is now 65 per cent dependent on petroleum for energy, and this is a major factor in New England's energy costs being 45 per cent higher than the rest of the nation, he said.

Mitchell said his department's plans for developing alternate energy sources include:

—Using conservation measures to save the equivalent of 97 million barrels of oil;

—Constructing six nuclear power plants to produce the equivalent of 66 million barrels of oil;

—Converting oil-fired electrical generating plants to coal where it wouldn't produce air pollution problems to generate the equivalent of 25 million barrels of oil;

—Developing the use of wood as an energy source to produce the equivalent of 21 million barrels of oil and,

—Installing 200,000 solar heating units in new and older homes to generate the equivalent of 1.4 million barrels of oil.

"What we have planned is achievable if we take action," Mitchell said. "But we don't have the luxury of sitting down and taking choices on which alternatives we will use. New England has to take action on all fronts."

He said his department is waiting for the passage of a national energy policy before attempting to involve the region in alternate energy source development.

"The first thing we need is a national energy policy. Right now it is confusing as to what the policy will be," he said.

"We are holding off until a national energy plan is adopted so potential investors will know the environment they are investing in."

Harvard scientists study 'laughing gas' in rivers

BOSTON [UPI] — A team of scientists are studying the polluted Merrimack and Potomac Rivers to see how much nitrous oxide or laughing gas is rising from the waters.

The team — Drs. Michael McElroy and Stephen Wofsy from Harvard University and Dr. Charles Kolb from Aerodyne Research in Bedford, Mass., chose the two rivers for study because they are large rivers, downstream from sewage plants.

It is believed that the amount of nitrous oxide released into the atmosphere plays an important part in controlling how much ozone gas remains afloat in the stratosphere. The ozone layer screens out many of the sun's deadly ultra-violet rays.

They have found the Merrimack River is producing two to four times as much laughing gas from the sewage than it would, if it dissolved the oxide from the air.

A more severe case is the Potomac River in Washington where the treated sewage from more than 2 million people is being dumped into the river at one place. "Down stream we find as much as ten times more nitrous oxide than would be there if it were merely dissolved from the air," Kolb said.

It's still too soon to say something definite about the danger to the ozone layer, but over the years, scientists have warned that man may be destroying this shield.

The doctors say if the ozone layer is significantly thinned out, with the increase in use of nitrogen — rich fertilizers a factor, it could cause a skin cancer threat, especially to Caucasians.

Kolb says there is no real danger that people will go around giggling or laughing. The danger is when the nitrous oxide moves to the upper atmosphere and a small percentage undergoes a chemical reaction that turns it into nitric oxide, the chemical that destroys the ozone.

'Stepping Out Gang' jailed after capture

PRICHARD, Ala. [AP] — Three young men took up the names — and traveling habits — of such Depression-era gangsters as Clyde Barrow and C.W. Moss in pulling off some 50 robberies in a dozen states, police said yesterday. They planned to put their exploits in a book.

A.G. Hildreth, police chief in this southwestern Alabama town, said the three were taken into custody near the Florida state line earlier this week. Unlike their Depression-era gangster idols, the young men surrendered peacefully and used only a pellet gun and fake rifle in their robberies, Hildreth said.

The men — along with two Mississippi girls still being sought known as "Ma Barker" and "Bonnie Parker" — referred to themselves collectively as "The Stepping-Out Gang," Hildreth said.

The men, arrested Monday night, were identified as Howard Patrick Hagan, 17, of Kissimmee, Fla.; Anthony Artimus Sullivan of Columbus, Miss., 21; and a 16-year-old from Kissimmee whose name was withheld.

Hildreth said the men had a diary in their possession when captured which referred to Sullivan as "Clyde Barrow," Hagan as "C.W. Moss," one of the girls as "Bonnie Parker" and the other as "Ma Barker", and the juvenile male as "Pretty Boy Floyd."

Hildreth said a diary told of robberies in about a dozen states, mostly in the Southeast and Midwest, creating a traveling crime wave similar to that of Bonnie and Clyde. "We are verifying them," he said. "We've probably verified 50 robberies."

He declined to give specifics of the individual crimes, but said one was the robbery of a church congregation.

The three intended to write a book about their experiences, Hildreth said. "That was the purpose of keeping the log," he said.

He said Hagan and Sullivan were charged with robbery and were being held in the Prichard City jail pending bond hearings Friday. The juvenile was in a youth detention center without bond, he said.

All three, he said, "look like normal appearing teen-agers." He said it wasn't clear why they adopted such names as Bonnie and Clyde, robbers whose cross-country crime wave has been portrayed in movies.

J. Earl Ray again claims his innocence

WARTBURG, Tenn. [UPI] — James Earl Ray told a jury yesterday he escaped from a Tennessee prison June 10 because he thought that was the only way he could win a new trial in the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr.

Ray testified in his own defense at his trial on escape charges that could add up to five years to the 99-year sentence he received after pleading guilty to the 1968 sniper slaying of King.

"It was my intention after I was out a couple of months to get in touch with the U.S. Attorney General, Griffin Bell, to arrange for a trial in the King case," the 49-year-old Ray said.

Defense and prosecuting attorneys concluded final arguments yesterday afternoon, and the case was expected to go to the nine-man, three-women jury later in the day.

Circuit Judge Lee Asbury earlier refused a bid by Ray's lawyers to turn the escape trial into a full-blown hearing on the King assassination. Asbury said the issues must be confined to Ray's escape from Brushy Mountain State Prison at nearby Petros.

Ghostly warning to 'Almond Joy'

kevin knobloch

Almond Joy turned his padded swivel chair to face his confectionary foreman.

"Your children's dentist bills are the least of my concerns, Puckers," Joy spat in disgust. "This is a candy factory, not a children's health center. Request for a raise denied."

Puckers turned towards the door in silence.

"One more thing, Puckers," Joy stopped him. "I want you to work tomorrow evening."

"B-b-but, sir," the young foreman said. "Tomorrow is Halloween ... the children, sir!"

"I'll have none of this whining in my shop," Joy said. "Now get out of here before I send you back to counting rat hairs!"

Almond Joy left for home, as always, by the side door. This time, however, a sharp chill ran up his spine, causing him to pause in his steps. A transparent ghostly figure, glowing softly against the darkness of the evening, floated to Joy's side.

"Who ... who are you?" the candy executive stammered.

"I am the ghost of Halloween past," the spirit said, forcing a smile that revealed a toothless grin. "Halloween is not as it was intended and you are to blame. Come with me and see."

Together, Joy and the ghost companion traveled backwards in time. They arrived at a large office building and entered a meeting room filled with middle-aged men in business suits. A small boy, sucking on a Sugar Daddy, sat quietly in a corner.

"Look carefully," the ghost instructed, "You were too young to remember this day when your father, Peter, and your uncle, Paul, planned the future of Halloween. Listen."

"I think you gentlemen from the American Dental Association will agree with my brother and our associates," Almond Sr. said as he mentioned towards executives from Nestles, Nepco and Beech-Nut, "that a holiday designed to distribute our confectionary products to young children once a year should provide a guaranteed annual revenue for us all."

As Joy and the ghost looked on unnoticed, the executives and dentists nodded their heads, smiled and shook hands. It was a deal. Joy wanted to shout congratulations to the enterprising capitalists, but he was led away to a new scene by yet another spirit.

"I am your new guide, the ghost of Halloween present," the acne-covered phantom said. "Look and see your son."

Joy turned to see his young son, Hershey, preparing for an evening of Halloween fun with his friends.

"Watch," the ghost said, "as your son, innocently disguised in a made - to - fall - apart - in - one - wearing Dracula costume treated with tris, schemes with his compatriots how to make Halloween a living hell for the unfortunates who cross his path this night."

"The pharmacist wouldn't sell me the rat poison," Hershey told his buddies. "Good thing my Dad had all those extra razor blades."

The boys were busily inserting the blades into apples for distribution later that evening. As Joey looked on, admiring his son's technique, Hershey began to fill plastic bags with hair remover. The neighborhood cry baby, Ruth, as all the boys knew, was the destined target of the Nair bombs.

Suddenly, the chilled feeling left Joy's body and he felt a warm hand on his shoulder.

"I am the ghost of Halloween future," the new apparition said cheerfully. "I will show you what this holiday will be like after your death. Come."

The pair entered the home of Pucker, the foreman at the candy plant. Viewing the scene before them, it was clear to Joy that Pucker was having the neighborhood children in for a party. The children were dressed in homemade costumes and clustered in giggling groups, playing games or eating home-made goodies laid out on the kitchen table. Absent from the scene, Joy noticed, was processed sweets of any type.

"B-but it's impossible," Joy said. "Why, their bobbing for apples with no fear of razor blades ... and all the children have perfect smiles!"

"See how it can be ... " the ghost began.

"Stop, stop!" Joy shouted. "Take me away from all this. I'll repent. I swear I'll repent. I don't want it to come to this!"

Joy buried his face in his hands and let out loud sobs. A moment later the ghost had disappeared and Joy found himself in his office at the plant. He quickly dialed Pucker's number.

"Puckers, the raise is yours!" Joy cried. "Please, buy your children anything they want ... just make their lives sweet again!"

Triage at UMass

bob melia

When Henry Kissinger was in power, he proposed that the US should halt all aid to the very poorest countries. He rationalized his decision by claiming that the US could not help all the underdeveloped nations and should therefore aid only those nations which appear to be improving their situation and which could benefit most from our assistance. The very poorest nations were not even developed enough to be able to use our aid properly, Kissinger said, so any help we might give them could be better applied elsewhere. This policy is called triage.

When the number of soldiers and civilians maimed and wounded in battle is so great that there are not enough medical personnel and supplies to treat them all, the doctors must decide who will be treated and live and who will be left to die. In this situation those most likely to benefit from treatment get it at the expense of everyone else, even if others are in more desperate need of attention. This policy is also called triage.

Triage, then, is a policy under which the rich and healthy justify ignoring the needs of some of the poor and sick. This shouldn't surprise anyone old enough to read a newspaper, but I must confess to being caught off-guard when I discovered that the UMass clinic has a triage department. I realize that the University has its share of problems, but I'm not quite ready to characterize this campus as a battlefield or an underdeveloped nation.

The term is quite appropriate, however, as I found out last week. Having felt progressively worse for several days I staggered into the clinic Tuesday evening, desiring to be assured that the miracles of modern pharmacology would have me feeling better in no time. But it seemed that because most of the staff had left at five o'clock, the supply of medical personnel could not meet the demand, and because others could benefit more from treatment than could I, I would have to wait until tomorrow.

I wondered why I couldn't get sick between nine and five like everyone else and left muttering deleriously about a student union. I remember thinking if I got much worse the only thing missing would be me.

On Friday I came back in the middle of the day, filled out the same forms as Thursday and made an appointment to be seen on Monday because I couldn't afford to wait two hours right then. I returned on Monday at the appointed time, filled out the same forms as on Thursday and Friday and was finally examined by a sympathetic and competent nurse.

Of course I was now feeling much better and was thrilled to be informed that although I had had a virus and fever, all that was gone now and only a mere cold was left. Like any self-respecting American should have, I had gotten better all by myself, with no help from a taxpayer-subsidized hospital. I was so proud of myself that I had an almost uncontrollable urge to rush out and join the Republican party.

If I were a cynic, I would be inclined to believe that the clinic treats people in this way in the hope that they will get discouraged and not return, or go elsewhere for attention, or get better while they are waiting.

Of course this is absurd, but the really absurd aspect to this whole situation is I can't really get mad at anybody. The people at the clinic are, I assume, as competent and dedicated as anyone else, but (surprise) they are underfinanced relative to the task they are asked to do.

Inadequate funding is a fact of life here, and I have isolated the clinic not because I want to attack it, but because it best highlights a University-wide ailment. We are so used to cramped living conditions, unappetizing meals, crowded courses and a feeling of powerlessness that we often tend to treat them as jokes. Laughing eases the pain, as long as the source of pain is outside of us.

But it is hard to laugh when the pain is inside. No one can deny that the state has limited resources and can't provide us with everything we might like. But it can be argued that the state shouldn't allocate its resources by the triage principle. When the wealthy and powerful decide who must go without, it is seldom their belts which get tightened.

When it is Michael Dukakis wielding the meat-cleaver, it follows logically that those whose necks get chopped are the sick, the old, the retarded, the unemployed and those students whose economic background impells them to seek public rather than private higher education.

When resources are scarce it is always those who have the least who are forced to suffer further. We all know how the triage principle has contributed in recent years to the deterioration of our University. And we can't prevent this principle from being applied to us unless we come up with some type of countervailing power.

So perhaps my delirious mumbling about a student union wasn't so crazy as I thought.

A Marxist point of view on capitalism

Stephen Mathieu's "I LOVE CAPITALISM" demands a reply from the other side. I am not talking about liberals, but about those of us he calls "socialists, commies, marxists," "anti-capitalists", "leftists", and yes, often "hypocrites" too. I speak for probably all of my Marxist colleagues on campus as being not only offended by Mathieu's distortions, but downright embarrassed that such an article appeared in a University paper. Mr. Mathieu's ideas about capitalism have not progressed much farther than Webster's Collegiate Dictionary and his fond childhood memories of being "bribed" by his parents to be a nice boy.

Mathieu's definition of capitalism avoids the driving force in the whole system: PROFIT. Profit and nothing else but profit keeps capitalism moving, and corporations produce and sell ONLY what makes a profit, and not what serves human needs. Capitalism wasn't all bad, though. Even old Karl Marx gave capitalism its dues: it did indeed develop society back in the 19th century. And yes, there WAS free competition of a sort, and firms did try to build a better mousetrap, but ONLY to make a profit. I'm sorry to give Mr. Mathieu the bad news, but those days are now over. In any major branch of our economy, only 3 or 4 firms dominate the market; you name it, from cars, to soap powder, to calculators, to blue jeans to hamburgers, and heaven forbid the goddamn phone company he is so proud of, which is a monopoly. And yes, I suppose that when I go into Stop-and-Shop and see not just one but five kinds of deodorant, or when Detroit can offer me a car with or without a vinyl top, I say to myself: "Isn't capitalism great. All this CHOICE!". No, Mr. Mathieu, not even Ralph Nader will bring back the Mom and Pop Candy Store days. That stuff will be left to the fellows selling the Gary Gilmore T-shirts.

However, the real crunch comes when profit takes preference over everything else in society: US Steel just laid off 5000 workers, Zenith moved to Taiwan, inflation goes up faster than wages; Blacks, white males, and women are competing with each other for the jobs "offered to them" by the capitalists. You and I and most of the readers of this newspaper are scared stiff about where (or if!) we will get jobs when we leave UMass. Some of us have been made so sick that instead of helping each other we are cheating on exams just to "get ahead". When students don't trust each other, when you fear the person next to you cause he-she might get a higher grade than you, THIS IS ALSO CAPITALISM.

Mr. Mathieu's article makes some mistaken assumptions about human nature and the history of capitalism. Any student who passed Introductory Anthropology or Introductory Economics will tell you that capitalism is not human nature, that in fact, for 99 per cent of human history, we have existed without dog-eat-dog competition. Hunting and gathering or growing our food, we shared the wealth. If one starved we all starved. Mass starvation, disease, racism, slums, unemployment, and poverty (in the midst of wealth] are not age old, but brought on by capitalism. Take a look at all these underdeveloped countries you condemn, Mr. Mathieu, and notice that they are all former (or current) colonies of European or American powers, and that these poverty stricken countries supplied us with gold, with slaves, with tie, copper, you name it, until we bled them dry. Our "good life" is built on THEIR BACKS, and the struggles in Asia, Africa and Latin America, and in our own country, are making us realize the fact, whether we want to or not. Why are all these countries so underdeveloped? Why the poverty, the slums, the overpopulation? Why is India, or for that matter, Puerto-Rico with its oil refineries and mineral deposits and tax free havens for US corporations, a basket case? Is it just laziness, is that it? Or bad luck? Or climate? Or lack of the "free enterprise spirit?" No it isn't, the conditions in these underdeveloped countries are part and parcel of capitalism too; they are the dark side.

I suggest that Mr. Mathieu forget about commies for a minute and take a good luck (and a critical look) at the socialist countries. What have Cuba, China, the East European states, and the USSR done to alleviate the problems of capitalism? Most authors, even the most conservative, will admit that in these countries there is virtually NO inflation, NO unemployment, NO Beggars, NO crime in the streets, CHEAP public housing, FREE medical care, and FREE education (including University). Aren't these the REAL human rights. Only after this can you really talk about life, liberty and "pursuit of happiness". Also, believe it or not, you'll find more political debate going on than you think. (You're right, it's far from utopia, as any honest Marxist must admit).

In the meantime, we are educating students who will join the ranks of the unemployed. Steel factories in Ohio sit idle while steel workers want to work. Why aren't they working? Don't we need steel? Profit. The steel companies can't make enough profit. Well, that's too bad, so Carter gives the workers 13 weeks extra food stamps. There just might be another solution to this — just nationalize the factories from the corporations, put the steel workers back to work and they will produce what's necessary and not just what's profitable. After that, we might even produce a nonpolluting car that lasts 20 years! GM could never do that, they would go bankrupt, but a socialist society could.

All this sounds like propoganda, right? Well it is, just like the "I Love Capitalism" column. I would ask Mr. Mathieu (or you the reader) to just walk into some of the courses being taught right under your very nose, and step up and argue it out with your professors and fellow students. Any good socialist supports free debate, and I'll vouch for you, Mr. Mathieu. There are several courses in the Economics Department on Marxism and Underdevelopment, Anthropology has courses in Problems of Socialist Countries and in Eastern Europe, as does Political Science. AfroAm offers a course in African socialism. I'm sure these professors would love to have Mr. Mathieu in their classes.

They are probably tired of preaching to the already converted. Look around you, man, and don't blame the socialists when you lose your job, when the meat coloring at the supermarket makes your hair fall out, when our tuition rises to $1000 per semester, when you sit and think whether you can afford to go to a doctor. It's not the marxists' fault, and it's not "welfare chislers" either, it's that capitalism you so love and cherish. We socialists don't like it but we're NOT "getting the hell out of here" as you say. Neither are we to run a blind eye toward ugliness or hypocrisy among capitalists or by communists, Stalinists, Maoists, or whomever. We are staying right here, and getting stronger, and stronger, and stronger. You can love your capitalism..... to the very end. (But isn't it just great to have a CHOICE?)

Bakke article knocked

To the Editor:

In rebuttal to Richard F. Stanton's article in the October Collegian, I would suggest Mr. Stanton read up on the case and the facts before he makes any comments in the Collegian. First of all, the sole criteria for Allan Bakke's rejection was not only his race, but more importantly his age. He was rejected not only by UC Davis, but also by 12 other medical schools. Surely a person with his "qualifications" would have made it at one of these schools. Two of the schools cited his age was the deciding factor [he was 32 when he applied]. Why didn't he sue the other schools for discrimination? Perhaps one of the reasons was that he was actually encouraged by one of the administrators to file a suit against the special admissions program. Mr. Peter Storangt the administrator at UC Davis also helped Mr. Bakke seek legal aid.

When Mr. Stanton makes the statement "but because he was not a member of a minority, he was rejected to make room for others who were minorities but less qualified. LESS QUALIFIED FOR MEDICAL SCHOOL." he is apparently ignorant of the experiences of physical minorities in the United States. A minority group member who has to work as well as get through school in order to support his-her family has much more obstacles than a person who has the luxury of devoting full time to school because he-she doesn't have to worry about financial responsibilities. This was such a case. Allan Bakke attended an all white high school in Florida. The United States Justice Department's brief said that the minority person who could overcome such obstacles is much more qualified in terms of motivation, determination and ability than the white student from a middle or upper class background. How can anyone make relative judgements between different people with different experiences in terms of only One group limited scope which is happening here where they have culturally biased tests [MCAT]. This test is made up with no minority input.

I would disagree with Mr. Stanton's assertion that he is not responsible for the actions of his forefathers. Those forefathers of yours built the great institutions that we have today. Institutions like schools that don't even mention the third world people with their slave labor which built this country. The institution of selection where a "colored" person is tried with a jury of "all white peers." The institution that makes our brothers and sisters feel the real stigma that they are inferior because they are not white. You, Mr. Stanton did not build these institutions, but you sure are responsible for maintaining and perpetuating this injustice.

You say that the very existence of quota systems implies that minorities are unequal to the white race. Just look outside at South Chicago, Bronx, Chinatowns, and slums of this nation, tell me who lives in them and tell we're equal. We are as innately intelligent and skilled, it's just that we never had the opportunities to fulfill the potential because of the prejudice and racist doctrines of this country. Now that they at least make progress to reach a parity by special programs, you say to stop this. How can anyone be equal in opportunity in an unequal economic system? DEFEAT BAKKE!

Senate appropriation 'quite frivolous'

To the Editor:

I was appalled to read in the Collegian Wednesday that the Undergraduate Student Senate had appropriated $450 to finance a trip for Mr. Kwaku Saunders to Los Angeles in an attempt to bring Stevie Wonder to UMass. In this current period of economic services and programs, and a downfall in the quality of education, I find this action by the Senate to be quite frivolous and a disgrace to the financial management of student funds. I would suggest that in the future the Senate make more of an analysis of the costs versus the benefits of a proposed appropriation before it finds it no longer has the funds to appropriate.

Robert R. Montgomery

Is unionization the answer?

To the Editor:

In response to Jerry Rogers' column on the Student Union, let me say that there are many of us who, as students, want to see students have more power but wonder if the Union is the answer. Students have no right to bargain with the University now and won't until the Governor grants that right to students. Knowing what the Governor thinks of students [it is certainly reflected in the budget], I wonder whether or not we are kidding ourselves with this Union idea. The major question we must ask is 'Will the state ever give up the power to run the University to students?' If not then let's stop spending all this money on something that will never happen.

David Kennedy

'Capitalism' rebutted

To the Editor:

As a "no mind", as defined by Stephen Mathieu's column of Oct. 26, [one who hates capitalism], I have some questions, no doubt stemming from my confused thought processes.

You used Webster's definition of capitalism as characterized by "competition in a free market."

Where is there a free market in an economic system based on "corporate capitalism", in which the wealth, resources and modes of production of an entire society are controlled by non-living entities? Where is there real competition, when these corporations exist on the principle of economic growth based on maximizing profits; for the benefit of a few at the expense of the masses?

Is it truly hypocritical, when trapped within an economic system to deal within its boundaries, even though not accepting its motivations? Would I be less of a hypocrite to refuse to pay the price of a loaf of bread, and instead walk out with it?

You say capitalism is the only system we've had since the beginning of time. Didn't the first humans band together for the betterment of self, by living together? And was it not obvious to the early Christians that when seeking to improve the physical and spiritual quality of life, the way to live was communally?

No, I don't like the system here in this "great" country, but it won't do me any good to leave. I am a citizen of the world, a part of all humankind; and as long as capitalism oppresses and corrupts this world, I shall fight it.

I do it as a favor to you Stephen, one you don't have to buy me an ice cream cone to do.

Kevin Young

To the Editor:

Stephen Mathieu's editorial [26 October] "Capitalism: I love it", is a prima facie example of ignorance and stupidity. It wouldn't be going too far by saying he possesses the attributes of a moron. If a person knows nothing about something, how can he like it? In most cases, even knowing a little is seldom justification for approval. Let Rousseau's statement "The sorrows of life begin with its mistakes"; serve as a reminder to those prone to making hasty judgements.

Briefly, capitalism refers to a mode of production. Historically, it is a recent phenomenon. It evolved from feudalism and is characterized by the sale and purchase of labor as a commodity in the marketplace. Those seeking an in-depth treatment of the subject will discover a bounty of information in most libraries.

Capitalism is also characterized by antagonistic relations between a small, propertied class and a large, property-less class. As for its benefits, one need only check the welfare and unemployment roles, walk through what was once a neighborhood where now stand the skeletons of tenement houses, or investigate the number of people lacking adequate health care, education, and environment to live decently. These are only a few of capitalism's benefits. If Mr. Mathieu wants to discuss the good life in America, perhaps he should consider its cost and the people paying the bill.

With regard to the remainder of Mr. Mathieu's appeal, I only hope he makes the most of his education. Obviously, he is a beginner and hasn't given tremendous thought to his experiences or the world in which he lives.

I loathe capitalism.

News in Brief

Foreign trade deficit fell in September

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The nation's foreign trade deficit narrowed to $1.7 billion in September, the best performance since spring, the government said yesterday.

A 14 per cent increase in the value of American-produced goods sold to other nations was the main reason for the dramatic improvement over August's trade imbalance of $2.67 billion, Commerce Department analysts said. The export total of $10.9 billion was an historic high.

However economists saw the September trade picture as an aberration from the overall trend rather than a signal the steadily escalating deficit would continue to shrink during the rest of 1977 and next year.

"I don't think it is indicative of what we will see in coming months," said Maynard Comiez, a top Commerce Department economist. "We will still have a full-year deficit of about $27 billion."

September was the 16th consecutive month the United States has bought more goods from its trading partners than it sold.

Tax increase to aid Social Security

WASHINGTON [AP] — The House voted yesterday to keep the Social Security system from going broke by drastically increasing the taxes paid by more than 100 million Americans and their employers.

The bill was passed, 275 to 146, and sent to the Senate, which has similar legislation in committee.

Under the bill, the maximum Social Security tax would more than triple in the next decade, from $965 per year to $3,025.

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., whose Ways and Means Committee fashioned the bill, called the legislation "a vital concern to virtually every American."

"Practically every American is either a beneficiary under the Social Security system, a contributor building protection which will provide future benefits or a dependent of a contributor," Ullman said.

Southie residents arrested at protest

BOSTON [AP] — Three adults and 10 juveniles, all from the South Boston section, were arrested in front of South Boston High School yesterday following a demonstration outside South Boston Municipal Court, police said.

No one was reported injured, but police said the windshield of a black man's car was smashed in front of the court building.

Officers said the arrests, on charges of being disorderly persons and unlawful assembly, were made when the persons refused to disperse from the high school.

The demonstration at the court was linked to the court appearance of two black juvenile girls who had been charged with juvenile delinquency by reason of assault and battery with intent to murder, police said.

They said the girls were charged in connection with an alleged threat to throw a white girl out a window at the Gavin School in the South Boston section earlier this month.

The girls appeared before Judge Lawrence Cameron, and the cases continued until Nov. 22.

The Police Information Office said the 13 arrested Thursday were: two juvenile and two adult females on charges of unlawful assembly; one juvenile female on a charge of disorderly person; one adult male and seven juvenile males on charges of disorderly person.

French wine prices may rise in U.S.

PARIS [AP] — A freezing spring and a soggy summer ruined more than a third of France's fine grapes, producing shortages that experts say could double prices of white wine in the United States.

Nature's wrath on grapes was worst in Muscadet, Sancerre and Pouilly where some good white wines are made. At the same time California grape growers say they expect a better crop than last year.

"So many people have been sold on white wine in the states that the demand is far greater than supply," said Robert Finigan, publisher of Finigan's Private Guide to Wine. "And there just is not that much available."

Some of the better 1976s have already sold out.

Finigan, in France to look over the 1977 harvest, said that since up to 90 per cent of the Muscadet crop was ruined in some areas, a good bottle could soon sell for $7, twice its present American price.

Overall, France's 1977 reds, whites, pinks and bubblies were expected to be reasonably good, even in shorter supply. September sun sweetened the fruit just as pickers were limbering up their fingers, and harvests were delayed for weeks in most regions to let the grapes ripen.

Dukakis rallies for crime prevention

WAKEFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — The failure of the legislature to pass a court reform measure this year would "seriously set back efforts to fight crime in Massachusetts," Gov. Michael S. Dukakis told a meeting of law enforcement officials yesterday.

A massive $100 million court reform package based on the recommendations of a special commission headed by Harvard Law Professor Archibald Cox is currently bogged down in the House.

The package is aimed at eliminating waste and patronage from the court system, providing speedy trials and relieving property tax burdens.

Carter calls for embargo of arms to South Africa

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter announced yesterday he has ordered an immediate U.S. arms embargo against South Africa — but no economic retaliation — in response to its "blatant deprivation of basic human rights."

"We still hope the South Africans will not sever themselves from the rest of the world and will work in an evolutionary way toward the establishment of human rights," Carter said at a news conference.

His first move to respond to South Africa's racial crackdowns seemed a comparative slap on the wrist, since the United States has embargoed the sale of arms to Pretoria since 1962 and, according to Pentagon sources, the new order would affect little more than the sale of spare parts for military cargo aircraft.

State Department officials, however, said it would also cover a "gray area" of equipment, such as computers, not affected by the earlier embargo.

At a news conference that ranged over many other subjects, the President also said Congress' attempts to work out a conservation-oriented energy policy amounts to "a test of the national will," and suggested he might compromise by accepting natural gas price ceilings higher than he wanted.

He also gave a somewhat more restrained appraisal of prospects for concluding a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviets, saying "the general terms of a settlement" might be worked out soon but a detailed treaty, ready for signing, will take longer.

On the South African issue, Carter fulfilled predictions he would approve no more than a tightened arms embargo as a first step in hopes the white minority Pretoria regime might relent in its repression of anti-apartheid blacks without the pressure of an economic quarantine.

"My decision has been to support strong sanctions against the sales of weapons to South Africa," he said. "This will be carried out immediately by us and my prediction is that the U.N. Security Council will adopt similar measures and they will be overwhelmingly supported by the nations of the world."

Asked whether he was considering any more far-reaching economic blows — such as a full or partial trade embargo, or restrictions on U.S. investments in South Africa — Carter said, "we are not deciding at this point on any sort of general trade or investment embargo.

"The additional steps that might be mandatory, beyond an arms embargo, have not yet been decided."

Mine workers break talks increasing chance of strike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller announced yesterday he has broken off talks with the bituminous coal industry, increasing prospects of a nationwide coal strike Dec. 6.

The talks broke down Wednesday after only five meetings because the two sides could not agree on the agenda. Miller charged the industry refused to discuss the key issue of health and pension benefits. It is highly unusual for labor talks to break off at such an early stage.

The negotiations got off to a rocky start Oct. 6, when the union showed up inadequately prepared to make demands. The 277,000 member union has been torn apart in the past year by dissension and wildcat strikes.

Both sides fear they will be unable to avert a long national walkout when the current contract expires next Dec. 6. Miners have a long "no contract, no work" tradition and contract extensions are unknown in the industry.

A long strike probably would hurt miners more than the coal consumers. The union now mines only 50 per cent of the nation's coal, but a strike could bankrupt the union's benefit funds.

Miller's statement said the union "will not participate in further bargaining sessions" with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association until the employers group expresses a willingness to discuss health and pension problems.

Wildcat strikes have depleted the union's health and safety funds, which receive production royalties from the employers. Health benefits were cut recently as a result of the wildcats.

Miller said the BCOA refused to discuss proposals drafted the union and attorney Henry Ruth for restoring the financial soundness of the health and pension funds. Ruth is the former Watergate special prosecutor.

"Whenever the BCOA is willing to respond in a constructive manner on the question of the funds, we will be ready to resume negotiations," Miller said.

"My Fair Lady", a musical comedy will be performed at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall next week.

'My Fair Lady' at Fine Arts Center

"My Fair Lady," the biggest musical comedy hit in theatrical history, will be presented twice next Thursday at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

"My Fair Lady" to be shown at a 3:30 matinee and a 8 p.m. evening performance, is part of the Fine Arts Center Broadway Theater Series.

Edward Mulhare (Henry Higgins) and Anne Rodgers (Eliza Doolittle) will recreate the magic they developed as the original stars of the National Company of "My Fair Lady" with their return to an extended tour which plays at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Tickets for "My Fair Lady" are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office, open Monday through Friday 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. and all Ticketron locations.

Ticket prices are: General Public, $7.50, 6.50 and 5.50. UMass Studnts are $3.75, 3.25, and 2.75. Other students and senior citizens are $6.50, 5.50 and 4.50. For more information call 545-2511.

Phi Eta Sigma initiates 88 new members

By KEVIN McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Eighty eight members were recently initiated into the UMass chapter of Phi Eta Sigma for their academic achievements.

Phi Eta Sigma, the National Honor Society for first-year men with 170 chapters across the nation, has membership based on students having achieved a 3.5 or better cumulative grade point average in their freshman year.

Parents and friends of the initiates filled the auditorium at the School of Business Administration last weekend. The welcoming address was given by Dr. Louis S. Greenbaum, the UMass faculty advisor to Phi Eta Sigma. According to Greenbaum, this is the "highest academic honor" of the University given to first year men. He went on to give a list of the achievements of Phi Eta Sigma graduates.

The initiation was based on the three principles of Phi Eta Sigma: a vigorous and disciplined mind, a sound and healthy body, and a sound character foundation. The new members proclaimed their willingness to uphold and continue these principles.

Honorary membership was awarded to Dr. John Sitterer, director of the UMass honors program and professor of English. Also awarded honorary membership was John F. O'Connell Jr., director of the UMass alumni and annual fund.

The 1977-1978 officers of Phi Eta Sigma are President Jay Labourene, Vice President Paul Kolesnikovas, Secretary Michael Reardon, Treasurer Kenneth Silverstein and Historian Kevin McCarthy.

English professor speaks as part of lecture series

"Shylock: Shakespeare's Portrait of the Jew," will be the topic of a talk by UMass English professor Normand Berlin Sunday at 11 a.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Berlin, the 1967 recipient of the UMass Distinguished Teacher Award, teaches Shakespeare, Elizabethan-Jacobean drama, modern and tragic drama, and has lectured widely.

Before coming to UMass, Berlin taught in Israel, Hawaii and Canada. His is on the editorial board of "English Literary Renaissance," has written many articles and is now working on a book. Berlin is also on the board of directors of the Jewish Community of Amherst.

Sunday's lecture is part of the UMass B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation Sunday Brunch Lecture Series. There will be a fee for food only; the lecture is free.

Topic of civil rights for Sunday speakers

"The Civil Rights in Latin America" will be the topic of two speakers Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Later, the Bolivian folkloric group, The RumiSongo, will interpret music of the Andes.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28 - Born today, you are a friendly, outgoing person who is welcome everywhere. Though you may have to guard your privacy against too many commitments to too many people, you enjoy your popularity and would be lost without associations with others; for it is through others that you gain your deepest pleasures. Women born on this date have a special affinity for children and animals and will usually be surrounded by both, whether in their career or leisure-time hobbies.

Suited to married life, you may settle down early in your adulthood. Whether man or woman, you will take from marriage the major portion of your happiness. You are not, however, merely a "taker;" but will also give a great deal to your relationships with others. Indeed, anyone fortunate enough to be an associate of yours should know many moments of genuine happiness through the relationship.

You have considerable executive ability. You know how to assign work to others, how to delegate authority, how to hire and fire without making anyone uncomfortable. You also know how to make underlings feel a part of the success of any operation. Because of this, you are sought after as a co-worker, as a boss, as one who will do what has to be done both well and with good will.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) - Outstrip opposition by taking the time and trouble to learn the secret of success. Exercise your wits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) - Keep your emotions in check. Should you become too subjective you could make serious errors.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) - Stick to the middle of the road on politics or religion, and you'll offend no one. Tread carefully.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) - You may experience more than one bump in the road as you attempt to progress faster than usual toward career goals.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) - Business matters can be set aside for the moment. Time is well spent in advancing social causes and charity ventures.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Appearances could deceive you today. Discover what lies beneath the surface.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Be diplomatic with family members. It would be unwise to hurt the feelings of children. Safeguard their emotions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Conserve your energy. Others may be indifferent to your efforts to achieve new goals, don't be discouraged.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - Make an effort to see the lighter side of what appear to be heavy-handed, heavy-hearted decisions. Time begins to heal immediately.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) - Place your trust in old acquaintances who have served you well in the past. Don't feel you must explain yourself.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) - Show another the kindness you would like to be shown. This is a good time to cast your bread upon the waters.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) - Carefully analyze your behavior early in day. Motives may not be clear to others, but must be clear to you!

NY bound runners aim for Albany State titles

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

While the UMass men's varsity cross country team battles this weekend for Yankee Conference supremacy, the women harriers and men's sub-varsity crew travel north tomorrow to Albany for late season clashes.

The Albany State College campus will serve as the battlegrounds for an invitational involving small private colleges around New York, as well as several representatives from New England.

There will be two morning contests beginning at 11:00, consisting of all the men's teams. Both races will be run over a 5.1 mile course. At 1:20 the women's squads are expected to step up to the starting line to compete over a three-mile course.

"Four of our top seven runners will be sitting out this meet," explained UMass women's coach Charlotte Lettis. "Ideally this will allow some of our other runners a chance to approach the race with a different perspective; a good opportunity to experience running up front."

Veteran Jane Welzel, Brandeis Invitational champ Barb Callahan, and freshman surprises Tina Francario and Priscilla Wilson represent the distinguished harriers who will not suit up for the contest. The burden of leading a depleted squad will rest on the legs of Sue Swartz, Debbie Farmer, and Linda Welzel.

The second trip for the men's JV team to the Albany State Invitational provides it with some varsity competition before the New Englands Nov. 5. The varsity forces from Keene State, last year's trophy winners, will again pose the most serious threat to the expected field of 20 teams.

The acquisition of varsity harriers Bob Neil, Mike Morris, Jay Legere, Neal McGrail, Glenn Lyle and Steve Bugby to the JV squadron will boost considerable the team's chances of defeating last year's title holder. Coach Arnie Morse's freshman troops, as well as veterans Jerry Pratt and Dave Warner, round out the individuals from UMass performing this weekend.

The next time first year mentor Lettis will expose her full artillery will be Nov. 5 at Rutgers University as New Brunswick, New Jersey will be the site for the Eastern Women's Championship. The New England's runner-up will be one of three representatives from New England journeying out of state Nov. 5, as Middlebury College and Harvard will also make the trip.

even though she was not directly involved. It was Gipps' seventh shutout of the year and second in a row.

Meliones, with her hat-trick, now has eight goals on the year.

The five goals are the most the stickers have scored all year. Davidson feels that this should help the Minutewomen now that they know they can score, which has been a problem all year. That should be helpful as they play their remaining three games against probable tournament bound teams.

Booters aim for 7th win

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team will be gunning for its fourth straight victory and second in a row at home tomorrow afternoon when they host the Eagles from Boston College in a 1:00 contest on the field behind Boyden.

The Minutemen, sparked by a three goal performance by sophomore Mike Shannon, whipped the Owls of Westfield State 5-1 Wednesday for their first home victory of the season. The victory lifted the booters' record to 6-4.

The Minutemen will be facing a talented BC that has had a disappointing up and down season. The Eagles, sporting an unimpressive 5-6-1 record, are coming off a very lopsided 6-1 loss to Brandeis.

The Eagles, under new coach Ben Brewster, a former UConn player were expected to do well at the beginning of the season, but have played erraticaly and haven't been able to put anything together.

BC battled the Minutemen to a 0-0 tie in overtime last year, in a defensive struggle on the Eagles' astroturf. Coach Russ Kidd says the Minutemen have much more offense this year, and that the story should be different.

Kidd added, however, that BC does have talent and are not to be taken lightly. "They're talented, and I still think they can be tough," said Kidd.

Kidd added that the Minutemen are now in a tough battle for the fourth and last playoff spot in New England and must win and win impressively in all of their remaining games. Said co-captain Larry Aronson, "If we win all of our remaining games we stand a 50-50 chance of making the playoffs."

Aronson said the team playing very well, and is "ready to play."

The Minutemen will still be without the services of co-captain Ed Niemiec, who is out for the year. Kidd has said that Mike St. Martin has done a super job filling in for Niemiec as has the rest of the defense.

Following Saturday's contest, the Minutemen will have only three games remaining. They take to the road for two games, at Springfield and New Hampshire, before coming home for the season's finale against Providence.

Spikers suffer setback; host three opponents

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass volleyball team suffered its 11th setback of the year last night, bowing to Mt. Holyoke on the road in five games.

In what coach Dianne Thompson described as "a two hour marathon," UMass started the evening off right, winning the first two games of the match by identical 15-12 scores. The first game was the toughest of the two wins as the spikers had to battle back from an 11-2 deficit.

The team didn't fare as well in the next two, as Mt. Holyoke evened up the match, winning by the scores of 15-7, 15-12.

With the match on the line in the final game, both teams turned out top efforts. UMass had its opportunity to win as they led 15-14 and held the serve. They failed to capitalize when their serve went wide. The Mt. Holyoke team made the most of its new life, reeling off three straight points to win 17-15.

Thompson was not displeased with the team play, despite the losing effort. "We played exceptionally well. We showed much more hustle on defense," said the coach.

She added that the match was a psychological one, a match of "mental highs" and that Mt. Holyoke was probably a little more psyched in the end because it was its last match of the regular season.

She said that she was especially pleased with the play of Diane Mandragouras who did not start the match, but who came in to do "an exceptionally fine job."

The team's next match is in NOPE, at 1 p.m. tomorrow. It is a quad-match competition, featuring the University of Rhode Island, Boston University and Keene State.

URI, sporting a 9-6 won-lost record, has beaten some of the top teams in the East (Central and Southern Connecticut) this year. Possibly the top player on the court on Saturday will be its senior standout, Jackie Elmer, who has played on the USA East team in the United States Volleyball Association.

BU is new on the UMass slate this year and is a very young team featuring four starting freshmen. Under Coach Allen Cohen, the Terriers are 6-2.

Finally, Keene State, 9-5 on the year, has lost to Smith, UNH, and Vermont but coach Marilyn Selish boasts four returning starters.

It will be the second quad-match within a week for UMass. In last week's marathon vs. Bridgeport, Williams, and Maine, the Minutewomen shone, winning two of their three matches before bowing to Williams in the final.

The spikers hope for the same success on Saturday as they will be looking to improve on their 4-11 record.

Big Ten battles loom

CHICAGO [UPI] — Wisconsin battles a jinx as well as Ohio State tomorrow in an effort to bring the Big Ten's little eight within challenging range of the conference title and the automatic Rose Bowl berth.

The Badgers, with a two-game losing streak after winning their first five games, must play at Ohio State, where Wisconsin has not won since 1918. Ohio State has a 4-0 record in the Big Ten and has been victors over Wisconsin in the last 17 games.

It will be the highlight matchup of the Big Ten schedule this week. A win for the Badgers would give at least six other teams a chance to get into championship contention.

Wisconsin itself would have the best chance since, along with Northwestern, it plays nine league games against eight for every other team.

Other games on the schedule were Iowa at Michigan, in second place with a 3-1 league record, Illinois at Michigan State, Purdue at Northwestern in the regional television contest, and Minnesota at Indiana.

Michigan, knocked from No. 1 to No. 6 in the national ratings by Minnesota's 16-0 upset last week, was favored over Iowa and by winning could remain Ohio State's major challenger, even moving into a tie for the lead should Wisconsin win.

Quinn, Arnold to return

Harriers seek YanCon crown

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Carrying an impressive 11-2 season record, the UMass men's cross country team will be journeying to URI Saturday for the Yankee Conference championships. Meet time will be 1:00.

Coach Ken O'Brien's band of seven men will be shooting for the crown which has seen UMass capture it seven straight times since 1970. Again, the harriers will be favored over UConn and Maine to win it for the eighth straight time.

The UMass seven will be co-captains Mike Quinn, Frank Carroll, and Stetson Arnold, Kevin McCusker, Louis Panaccione, and Matt and Tom Wolff.

More than capturing the team title, O'Brien is anxious to see how well his top two of Quinn and Arnold perform under competitive conditions. Arnold, in his first competitive year since fighting a year marked by hepatitis, has been up-and-down in his races during the year.

Even more critical will be the running of junior Mike Quinn, who will be testing his injured knee after a month of inactivity. This will be the first race for Quinn since the meet between UMass, Harvard, and Providence September 27.

Last spring Quinn developed a strained knee which caused him to stop running the last three weeks of outdoor track and for half the summer. Quinn managed to come back in fine shape and started the season in good form, placing in the top five in both of the races he ran.

However, Quinn's sore knee popped up again, causing O'Brien to rest the talented junior and also send him to orthropedic specialists.

"We have checked many medical specialists and have developed a special training insert called Orthordic to put in Mike's shoe which will give him special support in his running," said O'Brien.

Quinn has been running on it the last two weeks with some success but O'Brien is cautiously optimistic.

"Over the last few weeks we have limited his workouts so that he could get some quality training in. He's been running well but I have no idea how it will hold up under racing form," said O'Brien.

Other than his worries about the top two runners, O'Brien is ecstastic about the rest of the team.

"I have never had such a season where the whole team has responded so well to the meets and our workouts. The cooperation has been everything I have hoped for and more," he said.

The top seven was an extremely hard decision for O'Brien to figure out since the three through seven runners are so close together in time. However, this season has seen every week someone different have an excellent race while others have faltered.

"We have yet been able to put it all together where all of our runners have excelled together. Every week, someone else has been picking up where others haven't. Hopefully, this top seven, will be mentally prepared for a championship race, because we are now in our championship type sequence of races for the season. It's a whole new ballgame when this time of the season comes," O'Brien said.

Two sophomores — Jay Legere and Mike Morris — who O'Brien said are progressing rapidly, will be sent to the Albany State Invitational.

Stickers sizzle Smith, Meliones nets three

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The UMass field hockey team, aided by Cheryl Meliones three goals, eased by Smith College 5-0 yesterday for its eighth win of the year in a game played here.

The game was never really in doubt as the Minutewomen took command early and held it throughout the game. They led 4-0 at halftime and then some members switched positions in order to get some different experiences at new places.

Ginger Bulman scored what proved to be the game-winner on an assist from Laura O'Neil halfway through the first half. Bulman was credited by coach Judith Davidson as playing one of her finest games of the year.

O'Neil, from Northampton, scored shortly after a pass from Meliones, at 22:03.

Meliones took over the scoring from there, scoring three times, once in the second half. Laurel Walsh, Jody Wickman and sister Lynsie, and Judy Kennedy drew assists from her goals.

The statistics reflect the game's lopsidedness. UMass had a season high 41 shots on goal compared to only four for Smith. Penetration time was 22:08-2:13, in favor of UMass.

Davidson was very pleased with her team's performance. "They all played a strong game, even in their different positions," said Davidson.

She said that she believes in an open game with players able to substitute for each other. Sue Kibling was mentioned as playing her new position well because "she cut to the ball well."

One of the most pleasant surprises was the play of Walsh. "She is one of the most aggressive players on the team and she was anticipating awfully well," said Davidson.

Goalie Kathy Gipps was virtually untested until the final minutes of play when Smith applied some pressure. Davidson was quick to credit Gipps with solidifying the defense

Eastern Eight Conference gets television package

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Basketball action in the fledgling Eastern Eight Conference during the 1977-78 season will be televised in most of the major markets in the East under a contract signed with Total Communications Systems, league president Dr. Leland Byrd announced yesterday.

The Eastern Eight, known during its maiden 1976-77 season as the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League, is composed of Villanova, Rutgers, Massachusetts, George Washington, West Virginia, Duquesne, Pitt, and Penn State universities.

The contract calls for TCS to telecast eight regular season games and all or part of the league's NCAA Qualifying Tournament via a network composed of 12 or more TV stations in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and possibly New York State, said Nelson Goldberg, president of TCS.

Play-by-play of the games will be done by Ray Scott, while John Clark, former basketball coach at St. Francis (Pa.) will handle analysis and color. TCS, a local firm, also handles the Penn State football network.

The flagship station for the network will be WPGH, Pittsburgh.

"We view this as a major step forward in the development of the Eastern Eight," said Byrd, athletic director at WVU. "The coverage of our teams via television should grow to become as comprehensive as any afforded leagues throughout the country. It will mean a more positive image for the Eastern Eight and will contribute to the growth of the league in terms of competition and recruiting."

Goldberg said he hopes the network will eventually grow to be as large as the one that has been telecasting Atlantic Coast Conference Basketball action to many areas of the United States for 20 years.

Goldberg declined to name any of the other members TV stations, other than WJNL in Johnstown, Pa., saying negotiations had not been finalized. But he said that there would be stations in Springfield and Worcester, Mass., along with members in the Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Boston areas.

The schedule of telecasts include WVU at Pitt, Jan. 4,; Massachusetts—Villanova, Jan. 11; WVU—Duquesne, Jan. 18; Penn State—Villanova, Jan. 25; WVU—Rutgers, Feb. 1; Duquesne—George Washington, Feb. 9; George Washington—Rutgers, Feb. 19, and Duquesne—Pitt, Feb. 22.

The League Tournament, won last year by Duquesne, will be held at the Civic Arena here March 2-4.

Gridiron diversions

If your boss gives you the weekend off when you're supposed to have worked, you slobber at his feet in gratitude. But if a football team finds itself with a free weekend, its reaction is not quite as gleeful ... especially if the team has been winning.

This, however, is the stark reality that faces UMass' Grid Gang this weekend. What the team needs are some divertisements to prevent it from getting rusty; to preserve its finely honed edge of competitiveness.

Before Dick MacPherson sacrifices himself to the flying wedge on account of this inopportune vacation, here is the complete list of Football-Related Activities for a Team With an Off-Weekend.

— Patronize a movie house which is showing a re-release of "The Longest Yard."

— Dispatch members of the special teams to the nearest American Legion meeting hall to participate in a debate on the role of the kamakazi during World War II.

— A hike in the Berkshires can't be beat. Note that some leaves fall sooner than others from the same tree. Such leaves are to be considered offside.

— Journeying to the Mid-East is a fine day's recreation for the offensive backfield. In particular, repeated crossing of the Israeli-Egyptian border is an excellent drill in broken field running.

— Offensive linemen would benefit from a guided tour of a Platex undergarment factory in which they would be taught the art of inconspicuous holding.

— A Sunday drive can be a remarkably effective activity. Remember to fill the tank with only half as much fuel as will be needed. This will teach the evils of running out of gas in the third quarter.

— Blocking is one of the most important aspects of the game. It is imperative that mastery of its technique remain at an optimum level of efficiency. Loitering in the middle of Amherst Center at rush hour would keep blocking procedure sharp.

— Take a trip to Boston College and spit on the football field.

— One of the first motor activities to get rusty from a week's layoff is eye-hand coordination. Knit a pair of shoulder pads.

— This is the time of year during which most birds fly south. Stand under a flock and try not to get clipped.

— Physical slowness isn't the only problem that besets the team with an open date. Mental acuity can also be lessened. To avoid this situation, the club should repeat the phrase, "Peter Piper pitched a peck of perfect pigskins."

— Good timing breaks down under lengthy periods of inactivity. Take an hour out of every day to stare at a clock.

— Oftentimes a player will become overeager in the first game after a bye. A Sunday shoveling of the Stockbridge barns would eliminate the possibility of costly piling-on.

— Many a good center and quarterback have gotten their signals crossed because of a break in schedule. The pair should cruise the mid-Atlantic on two separate ships, using only semaphore for communications.

— Injuries are more likely to occur in a contest played after an off-weekend. This can be prevented by sustaining an injury in a barroom brawl prior to the game.

— Keeping abreast of any new trends that may have started since last the team played is not an easy task. Have a beer with a bookie and talk things over.

— A good coach always sets an example for his athletes. One should stay active by running around trying to think of ways his players can remain active.

If UMass adheres to this regimen, it will not only be ready for the Holy Cross game next Saturday, it will also be ready for the imminent padded room.

Presidential search haunts UM campus

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Members of the Presidential Search Committee met with UMass Amherst students and faculty Friday to solicit their opinions on the role of the new University president. President Robert C. Wood resigned last June.

The day long meeting was divided into two parts with previously invited students speaking the first hour, then an open section from 2:30 to 4:00 p.m. which was attended mostly by faculty. According to Committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer the meeting was "very helpful" to the committee members.

Speakers at the earlier part of the meeting consisted of the personal advisory committee of the Search Committee's student member Paul M. Cronin. This advisory committee was made up of area government presidents, representatives of student organizations and others.

The students specifically desired that the new president would be more visible to the students on campus. They said the president should also be able to attend student meetings.

Students also expressed concern with the new presidents' ability to "buck the president when necessary." Some say the reason Wood resigned was due to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' increasing control of the Board of Trustees.

The question of student unionization was brought up by Undergraduate Student Senate speaker Brian DeLima. DeLima said he hoped "the president would be concerned with the input of students," and "would recognize the students."

The open section of the meeting was attended mostly by faculty who had secured permission to speak prior to the meeting. Cronin said he "wished more students had attended, we got mostly faculty."

There was debate among the meetings participants on whether the new president should be an academician or a manager able to deal with the legislature. "Of course," said Cronin, "the best would be a good balance of both."

Meeting members also discussed the question of a president from a private school versus a president from public higher education. One professor said he "would be bothered by a candidate from a prestigious private school." Wood is a graduate of Harvard University.

Many faculty members suggested the president should be able to work with the faculty in order to put up a solid front.

Committee bats around honorary degree awards

By RITA ZEIDNER
Collegian Staff

Each October, UMass students, faculty, and staff form a committee for the purpose of awarding an honorary degree to selected distinguished members of society.

The purpose of the degree, according to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, is to acknowledge the accomplishments of a particular individual in a certain field. Although most universities award a similar degree, he said, the areas of the particular degree may vary with the school. UMass presents the honorary degree to one member involved in the arts, referred to as the Doctor of Fine Arts. The Doctor of Letters degree acknowledges success in miscellaneous fields, ranging from science to politics, Bromery said.

Recipients of the award are first nominated by a campus committee composed of students, faculty and the Board of Trustees. Resumes of the nominees are then researched by the Chancellor's Office. Once a full background of the nominee has been obtained, the recipients are decided upon by a committee of the Board of Trustees.

Bromery described the general criteria for selection as being based upon the individual's contributions to society, and how outstanding that person is in their particular field. He said that although most of the nominees are "famous" in their respective fields, being reknowned is not a major criteria. However, Bromery continued, the board's preference for selection is guided toward University alumni, but in the past, that policy has not been rigid.

In the past, recipients of the degree have included Arthur Fiedler, Ted Kennedy, Frank Sargent, Elliot Richardson, and Nancy Hanks.

Bromery said that although the 1979 recipients of the award have been chosen the names will not be released until March 1978, after insuring that the individuals will accept the award.

The awards ceremony involves a dinner, the awarding of the degree, and a speech presented by at least one of the persons chosen.

Grease rocks UMass

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

It is unusual to watch an audience get so involved in a play as was the case Friday night at the Fine Arts Center with Grease. When the play concluded people were humming and singing, as well as dancing to the music that had just faded away. There was probably no more than a few people that did not go rocking into the night as they left the theatre.

Grease was performed before a very eager audience. The antics of the Burger Palace Boys and the Pink Ladies of Rydell High class of 1959 were funny as well as quite captivating. The play may not express the typical 50's but the songs have that catchy 50's type of beat, and the costumes were great. The dance numbers were very imaginative and choreographed superbly.

The lines were very funny, and the jargon and hand gestures were pretty good. The acting itself was not the best, especially when the Pink Ladies were gossiping at school and at a pajama party. Often, the lines were lost and the words were jumbled together.

The songs were a completely different case. Most of the performers who had a solo sang with much expertise and an overwhelming amount of emotion. The chorus songs were very powerful and performed along with terrific dances.

The energy that was put into the songs and dances was phenomenal. The energy flowed from all of the actors and never seemed to drain them. By the finale, sweat was dripping down most of the actors faces, but the conclusion was just as dynamic as the rest of the show, if not more.

There are many relationships that develop between the Burger Palace Boys and the Pink Ladies. The main romance was between Danny Zuko, played by Peter Gallagher, and Sandy Dumbrowski, who was portrayed by Gail Edwards. The character of Zuko was most convincing and held up strongly throughout the play. His voice was exceptionally good. Sandy's character was fair, and the other female roles were far better.

Marty, played by Linda Lyons and Betty Rizzo, played by Nita Novy, were the best of the female characters. Sonny LaTierri, portrayed by Terry Michos, was one of the better male characters. His movements and gestures, along with his way of using his lines for all their worth, was really great.

The backstage noises were often distracting, and some of the scene changes, of which there was an over abundance, did not go too smoothly. The movement and singing that went on made up for most of that, and overall the play was very strong, powerful, and very witty. It was easy to see the actors put a great deal of themselves into the play, and it was received very well.

An interview with the cast revealed that most of the actors, because of their ages, did not remember the 50's very well. Stephen M. Groff, who played Vince Fontaine, a radio disc jockey, remembered the parties his older sister had thrown. "My sister was 16, and her parties intrigued me. It was all so fascinating, the dances and songs."

Gallagher commented on why he felt the show went so well. "In order for the show to work, we had to be totally honest. We have certain bits that usually get a laugh, but with a college audience we had to use some of our own ingenuity."

Frat wants fire-safe status

Fraternity brothers at Alpha Tau Gamma are having a tough time convincing the town that their house is indeed a fire-safe home.

For the past few months the group has been trying to obtain a variance, or exemption, from the state sanitary code on fire safety conditions for their house at 401 North Pleasant St. The problem is safety exits.

Fire Chief John Doherty told the Board of Health recently that the installation of a sprinkler system in the house several years ago has greatly increased fire safety. And Board of Health member Howard Peters reported a number of substantial improvements to the inside and the outside of the building have been recently made.

The town, however, is keeping a hard line on the state regulations. Officials maintain that the codes are very clear in cases like this, and the safety exits at the house simply don't make it.

The Board of Health last week refused to grant the variance. Interior modifications that would bring the house into compliance with the code can be made, according to the town building inspector.

Town officials and private citizens are starting to boil over the question of how to meet increased water demand in Amherst. All indications show that future supplies may not be able to meet user demand.

A recent report issued by Public Works Superintendent Stanley Ziomek showed a dramatic increase in water consumption for the first nine months of 1977. Town Engineer James Smith says the increase in consumption appeared to result from an increased year-round population, noting that over the past 10 years per capita consumption had actually declined.

Smith said that while UMass consumption has decreased over the past three years, usage in private homes and apartments has increased, placing a greater demand on the system.

The present system can provide up to 4.5 million gallons per day to customers. But Ziomek has indicated that normal maintenance and preventative measures could not guarantee against a breakdown in any of the four main components of the present system.

Should problems develop at any one of these systems, Ziomek said, the town would be faced with a daily shortage of one million gallons. Consulting engineers Tighe and Bond have advised the town an additional 1.3 million gallons per day is desperately needed to meet existing community requirements.

Town Meeting members at the Oct. 14 special Town Meeting grappled with the problem, approving two proposals to study the purchase of additional water from Quabbin Reservoir and the town of Hadley. The proposals passed by a wide margin. The assembly, however, declined to approve a more controversial proposal for a town-supported system.

Meeting members at that time voted to kill a proposed $63,000 study to test for water beneath Lawrence Swamp in South Amherst. Soon after, the Board of Selectmen voted 3-2 to go over the heads of meeting members and have the Lawrence appropriation placed on the agenda for reconsideration at the Nov. 14 special Town Meeting. The article was signed by the selectmen last Thursday.

Further complications arose last week when the board was petitioned by Finance Committee member Chauncy Simmons to add to the town meeting agenda a comprehensive study of existing water supplies.

Amherst Briefs

Two board members, Nancy Eddy and Chairman Diana Romer, blasted Simmons' proposal, saying it was expensive and "unnecessary." Romer said the cost of the study could range from $5,000 to $250,000. Simmons defended the proposals, saying he was concerned about the implications of a failure in the existing supply would have.

Yet another gremlin turned up later in the week when the town decided to oppose any moves that would separate UMass from the town supplies. Town Manager A. Louis Hayward warned that such a separation, suggested earlier Town Meeting members and other private citizens, would greatly increase the cost for other town customers.

Hayward cited a report by Town Engineer Smith calling the separation "both complex and expensive to each party". The report said in 1976 UMass provided 45 per cent of all town water revenue.

Smith said only the main campus might be separated from the town system, leaving North Village, the School of Ed, Tillson Farm, Fraternity-Sorority park, and other service areas on the town water system.

"Substantial basic costs to operating the water system accrue regardless of whether the University is a customer or not," Hayward said.

UMass has been on the town water system since the "old water company" was purchased by the town in 1941.

Grad towers topic of meeting

UMass and Massachusetts Bureau of Building Construction (BBC) officials will begin sessions today in Boston to discuss solutions for solving the noise pollution problem of the Graduate Research Center (GRC).

The sessions, expected to be a "series" of meetings, according to UMass Director of Planning Jack Littlefield, were brought about last August when the state Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control Center found the research center to be violating noise pollution standards.

Littlefield said he believes the building's noise problem is the responsibility of the state building authorities since they constructed the building and UMass never accepted title to the structure.

Plans sex shows

Sparks wants to 'bewitch' campus with porn

By HERB BRODY
Collegian Staff

Albert Sparks is coming back.

The 27-year-old founder and original president of Baroque Enterprises, a controversial organization that brought pornography to UMass, is planning to return to UMass after a two semester hiatus.

In the meantime, he is working on arrangements for a variety of sex shows: pornographic films ("Deep Throat" will be first), a strip-tease show, and perhaps even a live sex show. "I'd love to have a gigantic porn festival in the Campus Center Auditorium," said Sparks in an interview this week.

The case of a strip-tease show would be a combination of professional strippers and UMass students, Sparks said. In response to the suggestion that a strip show may not draw much of a crowd here, he said, "If we have a strip-tease show at UMass, the object won't be to make money — it would be to see what kind of response we would get."

Sometime in the undetermined future, Sparks has plans to bring a "super concert" to the campus — a gala music festival, rivaling Woodstock and Watkins Glen in scope, with "some of the biggest name bands in the world" providing the entertainment. The money to finance this concert would come from the movie and strip-tease profits, said Sparks.

Sparks is convinced that he and Baroque Enterprises have been the victims of a systematic series of actions designed to limit his civil rights. "I would love to take somebody to court for violation of personal rights... I'm hoping that between Dean William F. Field and the RSO office, they'll make some mistake, so that the civil liberties people can come in and nail their asses to the wall."

Sparks claims he has been "harassed" by both Field and the administrators in RSO. Specifically, Sparks cliams that:

—RSO has frozen Baroque's funds after every movie they've shown. "They never put anything on paper — Jim Riley just tells everybody not to sign purchase orders for Baroque."

—a routine RSO purchase order for a pornographic movie took 5 days to complete. "It should have taken five minutes," said Sparks. Because of the delay, Sparks had to drive to New York City and personally pick up the film.

—two Baroque-proposed programs that had nothing to do with pornography were turned down. One, a warm weather concert on the fields near the campus pond, was denied approval because, in Sparks' words, "the RSO office said people would get drunk, walk across the street, and get hit by a car." The other idea, an all night (1 a.m.-5 a.m.) disco party, was personally vetoed by Field.

—a proposed alternative radio station that would broadcast from Southwest was nixed by the Southwest administration. Sparks said he feels any other organization could have built a radio station there, and that Baroque was being singled out for harassment.

—the administration shut down the showing of "Portraits" an X-rated movie, under false pretenses, claims Sparks. Field said he stopped the showing last March because it was discovered that Sparks was not a student at UMass, and therefore had no right to use University facilities for a fund-raising activity.

"The truth of the matter," said Sparks, "is that it didn't matter that I wasn't a student, because another member of Baroque signed all the paperwork. RSO regulations allow non-students to put on programs as long as a student organization backs them up."

Speaking for RSO, student activities coordinator Jim Riley, put these charges in perspective.

First, it is the student senate who has the authority to freeze funds, RSO can only make recommendations, said Riley. Riley said Baroque's money was probably frozen because of the questionable legitimacy of the group. For a time last spring, there was some question as to exactly who, besides Albert Sparks, belonged to Baroque.

This same nebulous quality of Baroque's membership was cited as the reason Field stopped the showing of "Portraits" last March. Sparks may be right that he as a non-student could legitimately put on a program if a student organization backed him up. The problem, said Riley, was that not only Sparks, but the backing organization, too, was suspected.

OHAG debates current budget

By JACK GRAVELL
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill Area Grovernment last night voted to reconsider the 1977-78 fiscal year budget in order to consider a budget sponsored by student representative Bill Coffey. Extensive debate left controversies between the budget and the proposal unresolved.

The major controversy concerned funds appropriated for the Third World Center. Although the center has been appropriated more funds than the other centers, Coffey reasoned that this represented a substantial cut over last year's budget. Various activities of universal interest sponsored by the Third World Center were cited as rationals for the entire government to support this appropriation of $2,700. "You aren't going to change color when you walk through that door," Coffey said.

Concerning the funding of a snack bar in Field House, the student senate has not acted upon the request for a loan. Meanwhile, it was suggested, the funds should be borrowed from other areas which would not spend their funds until spring. This would allow the snack bar to get started and hopefully make a profit. If such a snack bar were to open, the foods sold would not interfere with the Central Area snack bar.

Business... is frightening

By CINDY YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Going into business for yourself can certainly be a frightening experience. Geri Spear and Joanne Pilon, find it especially scary, as Count Dracula and Frankenstein are two of their regular customers. Spear and Pilon run the Costume Closet on White St. in Springfield.

When entering the store, dozens of eyes seem to follow you from behind rubber masks that hang upon the wall. A large case contains fake fingernails, teeth, and hair. In the back of the store is the workroom, where Spear and Pilon put together an assortment of strange and delightful characters — anything from Raggedy Ann and Andy to the Hunchback of Notre Dame.

The Costume Closet opened three and one-half years ago on April Fool's Day. The idea came to Spear and Pilon at a Halloween party, when they learned that Pease Costume of Springfield was going out of business. They bought out the store and have since completely renovated and replaced all the costumes. Ninety per cent of the costumes are handmade.

The Costume Closet has an extensive selection of costumes, numbering in the thousands. If the customer doesn't know what he or she wants Spear and Pilon try to "play psychologist and suggest costumes that may fit their personalities." Many of the costumes are interchangable, so Spear and Pilon can create just about anything. A colonial soldier becomes a pirate with the addition of a patch, scarf and earring. The only characters they are unable to create are copyright characters. Saturday Night Live's Coneheads and many Star Wars characters are popular this season, and Pilon and Spear try to create similar costumes without duplicating the copyright.

The Costume Closet provides makeup with the appropriate costumes, along with explicit instructions as to its application and removal. This way the customer can get an idea, as to how long it will take to get ready for a party. A wolfman's face can take up to an hour and one-half to apply.

Spear and Pilon really "get into" their business. Every year Spear makes costumes for her husband and his band. This year, they will be wearing the skimpiest of caveman outfits. Pilon's mother is getting into the act, and is wearing her costume bowling.

With the lines 20 deep and the phone constantly ringing, The Costume Closet's business is booming. Halloween parties, in fact all parties are "in" this year. "People started dressing up during the Bicentennial and found out they really enjoyed it," says Spear. Halloween theme parties are also a big thing. Spear and Pilon outfitted Sir Lancelot and Lady Gweniviere for a knightly theme party.

Spear claims she and Pilon are "two kids that never grew up." They love their work, although during the Halloween season things can become quite hectic. "It really helps to be a bit crazy," says Pilon.

A UMass Halloween . . .

UMass
R.I.P.

Once again the UMass campus came alive, as the Halloween spirit descended upon it this past weekend. Various monsters and devils appeared from bushes and buildings, while a group of pregnant nuns were seen roaming the streets chugging mugs of beer.

Students flocked to the movies as such chillers "The Exorcist", "Slaughterhouse Five", "Carrie" appeared at area theatres. "The Creature from the Black Lagoon" was shown Saturdav in the Student Union Ballroom, and 3-D glasses were handed out to get the total "eerie" effect.

The Pub held its annual Halloween party last night. The first fifty costumed characters were given a free T-shirt and a $25 cash prize was given for the best costume. Poor Richard's also held its annual costume party, where a strange witches brew was causing some equally strange reactions.

While dorms all over campus held parties, the Campus Center itself was the site of most of the Halloween action. Hundreds of people gathered on the concourse level; 90 per cent of them in costume. Moon maidens, scarecrows, green-faced witches and tramps assembled in a large parade of weirdness. The Hunchback of Notre Dame chased a woman in a white gown as a man posing as a midget walked on his knees across the floor.

UMass had its own Star War as two "great" Darth Vaders battled each other and Saturday Night Live was also a popular theme as Coneheads and Killer Bees were buzzing about. Those of us "normals" were heard to exclaim "unbelievable!"

Carter refuses quotas on foreign steel

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter angered members of a congressional "steel caucus" Thursday by refusing to consider their demand for import quotas to help the nation's troubled basic steel industry.

"I think it's incomprehensible that we can let a basic industry go down the tubes," declared Sen. Richard Schweiker, R-Pa., after a meeting with Carter. He complained that Carter "seems far less concerned with the steel industry problems and far more concerned with our relationships with other countries and the impact it has in other countries."

Robert Strauss, Carter's trade ambassador, responded to Schweiker's complaint by insisting the President would not "be shoved into a simple answer for political gain."

Carter told the 150-member Capitol Hill delegation his steel policy will be completed in a few weeks by a special task force. He already has promised the industry some tax relief and a crackdown on importers who illegally "dump" steel in the United States at a loss.

Carter assured the meeting his policy "will be compatible with yours, which is to make sure we have a strong viable industry."

But the President ruled out any support for quotas on growing steel imports, which many members of the congressional delegation were seeking. Imports now comprise nearly 20 per cent of the American steel market.

Imports have been blamed for the many woes of the steel industry — including big losses, plant closings and layoffs.

Young wants ban on nuke fuel cargo

NEW YORK [UPI] — Andrew Young, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, said yesterday he personally would favor an absolute ban on American shipment of nuclear fuel to South Africa, but it is too late for that to be a realistic possibility.

In an interview on ABC television's Issues and Answers, Young said South Africa has achieved "nuclear potential the extent of which we're not fully able to judge."

Young said, "To cut things off now would only encourage separate development of South Africa's own nuclear potential. I think by maintaining some kind of relationship, we do have the possibility of influencing them to sign the Nuclear Proliferation Treaty and accepting all the safeguards that go with the International Atomic Energy Agency."

Asked if the Carter administration was considering other actions aside from supporting in the United Nations a mandatory embargo on the sale of arms to South Africa, Young replied: "I think it's fair to say that we are considering other things.

Young said if South Africa "insists on following the policies of apartheid, then our relationships with them cannot remain the same. There's going to be a gradual disengagement of American support at all levels."

Toward the end of the interview, Young was asked if he agreed with a description of him given in an interview with black African leader Steve Biko that was taped before his death in a South African jail.

"I doubt if Young's heart is in the right place," Biko had said. "He is a pretty ambitious black fellow, who is going to have to play it pretty neutral. He can't project his blackness, he has to project his reasonableness."

Bolles jury starts debate

PHOENIX, Ariz. [UPI] — A Superior Court jury may start deliberations today in the trial of two men accused in the bomb slaying of newsman Don Bolles in June of 1976.

Final testimony in the trial, which began July 11, was heard Thursday and closing arguments were ordered Monday by Judge Howard Thompson.

Max Dunlap, 48, a Phoenix contractor, and James Robison, 55, a plumber from nearby Chandler, are charged with first-degree murder and conspiracy in the death of Bolles.

Bolles, an investigative reporter for The Arizona Republic, was injured June 2, 1976, when a bomb exploded beneath his car. He died 11 days later.

49 countries media talk

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia [UPI] — A first-ever conference of Third World radio and television officials ended Sunday after delegates from 49 countries adopted resolutions to pool their facilities and counter Western domination of the world television industry.

With little debate, the meeting approved a proposal for formal cooperation among national radio and television networks in "non-aligned" countries, including sharing newsfilms and television programs.

"There will certainly be problems in the future," Mirko Popovic, a member of the executive committee of the Yugoslav communist party, told delegates in a closing speech.

"But the difficulties result from the insufficiently developed broadcasting networks of the non-aligned countries. And it is also possible that the difficulties will come from those who do not agree with this kind of development."

The idea of a newsfilm pool was patterned after the non-aligned countries news pool project, in which some 35 Third World news agencies exchange dispatches through the Yugoslav agency Tanjug.

Delegates at the conference said the television pool would be a limited operation and was not intended to take over the world television market from Western film companies.

"The technical problems are already enormous," one delegate said. "There's no way we could operate without the newsfilm and entertainment programs we get from the West."

Even the turnout at the meeting was somewhat disappointing, delegates said. Conference officials had predicted that at least 60 countries would send representatives, but delegates said there were only 49 full delegations, including the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Under the conference resolutions, the coordination program will be run by a committee of 19 broadcast executives from the Third World. Further conferences will be held every three years, the next in Sierra Leone.

Treasury head tours Mideast

ROME [UPI] — U.S. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal flew to Italy yesterday from Saudi Arabia and a tour of Middle East oil states designed to head off possible price increases.

Diplomatic sources said that in addition to discussing oil prices with Saudi leaders, Blumenthal tried to reassure the Middle East's largest oil producer of the strength of the U.S. dollar

In Saudi Arabia, Blumenthal also signed a $100 million agreement for development of solar energy use. The accord, to be funded equally by the two countries, comes within a Carter Administration energy policy aimed at trimming U.S. oil needs.

Heavy border clashes

SALISBURY, Rhodesis [UPI] — Rhodesian troops fought Zambian soldiers in heavy daylong border clashes and killed 26 black nationalist guerrillas infiltrating into Rhodesia, the military command said yesterday.

An evening communique said Zambian troops using mortars, machine guns and small arms launched "heavy attacks" against Rhodesian forces early Saturday at Kazungula.

"There have been no security forces casualties but some damage has been caused to buildings and two vehicles," as a result of the Zambian attacks, the communique said.

Kazungula, located on the tip of the western Rhodesian panhandle, forms the meeting point of Rhodesia, Zambia, Botswana and South West Africa.

The border clashes came slightly more than a month after Prime Minister Ian Smith and Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda met in Zambia to discuss tension between the two nations.

The communique said Rhodesian troops yesterday "intercepted a gang of terrorists who had just entered Rhodesia. In a series of engagements 26 members of this gang were killed. There were no security forces casualties."

Train strike ends

BUENOS AIRES, Argentian [UPI] — Normal train service was restored in Buenos Aires yesterday after four days of wildcat strikes, but subways were still out of service and airline personnel threatened further strike action.

Negotiations today will be crucial in the worst labor disturbances since the military government took power from President Isabel Peron in March 1976.

Strikes are illegal and most unions are controlled by the armed forces, but the wildcat strikes spread quickly last week.

Signalmen and other railway workers went back to work Sunday pending the announcement today of salary increases. There was no official information on what formula was found to end the strike that hit most of Argentina's stateowned railway lines at one time or another during the past four days.

Government negotiators were also looking for a solution to the subway strike that began Friday.

Ghouls unite

As a result of all this, ghouls are forced to see Halloween as it really is — a holiday when ghoul's interests are not necessarily those of the Great Pumpkin. It is ludicrous to say "leave it to the Pumpkin," and then expect to have a Halloween experience that is truly rewarding.

And hence, we arrive at the subject of ghoul collectives.

If we were to actively participate in a ghoul collective the benefits would be enormous. We would be able to deal with the Great Pumpkin and the Legislative Squashes in real numbers — just think of the number of ghouls there are around here. And perhaps more importantly, we would gain experience in dealing with the other power groups and their leaders, like Santa and the Little Elves, and the ever present Big Turkey.

The danger in a ghoul collective is that it too may become impersonal and not responsive to the ghoul's needs and wants. We could end up with a Big Ghoul instead of a Big Pumpkin. The leaders of the ghoul collective have spent much of the month of October trying to work out a system that would insure direct ghoul participation. But it is we, not them, who are responsible.

This group that has been working on a ghoul collective is called the Ghoul Organizing project (GOP). A good and well meaning group of ghouls they are, but they have failed to show the ghoul population exactly what they have to gain by participating in such a collective. Until they do so many of us ghouls will be skeptical about joining together against the great Pumpkin.

In conclusion, beware of anyone who tells you that a collective of ghouls will be a panacea for all our problems as ghouls. The nature of the holiday of Halloween precludes that thought. People will always give you the damned apples instead of good candy, and Americans have a tradition of dealing with Halloween by looking to the Great Pumpkin for help. But the complex nature of Halloween in the '70's precludes such a resigned attitude.

With the present system we, as ghouls, end up consumers of things that the Great Pumpkin and his followers label as "treats". We are not so sure as to these "treats," so we find ourselves seeking a collective of ghouls.

Events of recent years have provoked many of us to reexamine the nature of Halloween. Two myths have pervaded the ghoul population in recent years, despite repeated evidence that they are fallacous:

One is that Halloween is supposed to be a friendly holiday. We are supposed to get dressed up in costumes that aren't really scary, but are rather the Great Pumpkin's idea of what scary should be. He and his cohorts have watered the idea of a good scare down because they are out of touch with today's world. And our tricks are supposed to be cute; even the rather cliche soap and toilet paper are frowned upon. The effect — we, as ghouls are forced into a mold we find neither scary nor particularly rewarding.

The second popular myth is that Halloween will provide every ghoul with a full bag of candy. Well for most of us that full bag of candy promise as at best tenuous. Even those who get dressed up as business majors (enough to scare the hell out of anyone) are not assured success. All ghouls are subject to the indiscriminate vicissitudes of the Halloween rat race. And who can even speculate about the Halloween situation ten or twenty years from now. There will always be that cranky neighbor who will complain about having his car windows soaped. But the real power we would yield as ghouls would help alleviate a lot of the bad things that are presently ruining our Halloween fun, and will make the great Pumpkin wonder how great he really is. Like Linus, who sits on his duff waiting for the Great Pumpkin to come and make his Halloween, we too will be disappointed if we don't get moving now. Ghouls unite for a better Halloween.

I'm in the majority with capitalism

I've red so much nasty left-handed print in this anti-kapitalist newspaper that I'm absolutely too furious to be coherent! My intellect literally fumes with patriotic appleplexy! To quote a other grate Kapitalist, "Mein Kempf!" And all you nasty anti-hypocrites are a bunch of pox on the well-trained Kapitalist corpse like me. And I don't need fact to back it up. I'M IN THE MAJORITY.

First, let me define Kapitalism for all those with smaller IQ's than mine. My mother says Kapitalism is "all there is and there ain't no more." PERIOD. And my mama luvs me. She luvs me.

Who can deny the economic system is characterized by investments determined by mainly corporate ownership of private freedom? And where else are all you slobbering radical peace-mongers allowed to go the market or a football games once in awhile? Wouldn't you send your kids to debtor's prison if they didn't behave? You bet your red add I would. If somebody asked me to spell "goriller" for five bucks you can bet I'd look it up in the diktionerry.

Being a little kid and having recently handled myself, tell me, what is more basic in human nature than satisfying my lusts and desires?

Lust is the only instink that's been with us since the beginning of time. And I luv it. Because of Kapitalists I've been dealt on, sold out and serviced at a price. And I've ripped people off in turn. Sometimes they complain bitterly, but tough greenbacks. They have the option to go out and rip somebody else off and leave me the hell alone. It's as clear-cut as my lobotomy.

However, and ipso facto, the socialites, commies, Troglodytes, Naderists, and weary multitudes of so-called oppressed poor people in so-called ghettoes, seem to think they have a right to liberty, life and the pursuit of happiness. These dissident, nasty people are obviously more deluded than us. You can all go to Chile! Kapitalism takes care of its own.

The only rights you have are Christmas and new years and alcohol if you reach adulthood. Suppose you lived in some undernourished island beneath a tribe over the Pacific. Then where would you be? I'd certainly like to hear you translate that one. Not everyone has the right to desired prices or can right for the Collegian. Can telephones right? Can homes right?

The Kapitalists have given us such a high level of education that our standard of living defies description. You commies got a description? Bull shit. Go live in a free democratic egalitarian society, then see if you can educate me. I don't want to hear it.

I'm too busy trying to pass Rhetoric to worry about politics. And never mind staying alive. You self-proclaimed anti-Kapitalists think you have some basic right to that affect? Well leave me alone. I'm already affected.

Kapitalism is the system here in this great country,"under God, interdigital, with liberty and justice for all — all Kapitalists". Dig the quotes, comradishes. Kapitalism is responsible for everything we have. If you don't have anything, get the hell out of here. You'd be doing me and my mother a big favor.

Go forth, hypocrites, and tell the world what a shaft I am. Maybe if you're lucky somebody will give you a job to cry about. But not in this country; you can all go cry in the unemployment line.

Fearing Street residents complain about UMass noise

To the Editor:

ATTENTION ALL UMASS STUDENTS WHO LIVE IN OR AROUND THE FEARING ST.-NUTTING AVENUE SECTION OF TOWN! This also includes all of you who use this neighborhood as a general thoroughfare between South-West and the center of town. Did you know that this section of Amherst is basically residential? And that, more often than not, there are FAMILIES living in the houses that line these streets? Well, we [the residents of this neighborhood] are writing to inform what seems to be a fairly large number of you that this is the case.

Now we don't wish to be offensive or alienating. However, a particular situation is becoming a constant irritation, and we felt it was time that this particular situation be addressed. We're talking about inordinate NOISE and general ROWDINESS. Of course we all were college students once, and we remember that it is great fun to indulge in frivolous, careless partying and careening through the streets of any university town in the evenings. However, it is really asking too much that you [whoever you are] curb your enthusiasm when the clock strikes eleven?

Three nights in a row, several of us have been rudely awakened, after 11, by singing, shouting, screaming, etc., etc., ad nauseam. We are where most of YOU will be in a very short time, i.e. begrudingly participating in the Mon.-Fri., 9-5 mediocrity of the life of working people. In addition to that, many of us have children — we are sure that many of YOU will someday soon discover that this means you get up, [whether you want to or not] between the hours of 6 and 7 a.m. EVERYDAY.

Are we making ourselves absolutely clear? It is just so depressing to have to drag oneself to work in the morning, bleary-eyed, due to a lack of sleep; lack of sleep due to someone's inconsiderate behavior.

Perhaps many of you do not realize that you are disturbing working people and their children from their slumbers when you stroll along Fearing Street in the late hours of the evening, or the early hours of the morning. We hope this will inform you, and when you pass by, perhaps you could can it for just a few minutes? We could sleep on, wake up and continue to be rested, productive participants in the mediocrity of work, and you could continue your partying — but after you reach the campus.

Everyone's cooperation in this matter would be most SINCERELY appreciated by several residents of the above mentioned neighborhood.

Capitalism column poor journalism

To the Editor:

Though not surprised, I am truly fed up with the poor journalistic qualities represented on the editorial page of your newspaper. Stephen Mathieu's editorial of October 26, "Capitalism: 'I Love It' " is an example of a style of writing best characterized by its lack of content and fact. The author's logic and form of argument are nonsensical and make no real point. He substitutes his opinion for historical information he knows little of. Capitalism, as a system, has not, contrary to Mathieu's editorial, been with us since the beginning of time. Dictionary definitions are not items to be taken verbatim and placed out of context in any setting, to make a point. Rather than informing or stating a well articulated opinion, Mathieu's editorial confuses facts with fiction and is disrespectful to its readers by misinforming them in such a blatant manner.

Instead of reacting, why don't writers for the Collegian take some time to learn something. The Collegian has a responsibility to provide intelligent and coherent news and editorials to its readers. Leave your emotional baggage at home — and try, please, to concentrate on the content of your newspapers. It would help.

The ever changes of Halloween

"The University is dedicated not only to learning and advancement of knowledge, but to the development of ethically sensitive and responsible persons. It seeks to achieve these goals through a sound educational program and policies governing student conduct that encourages independence and maturity."

paul yanowitch

The above quote is from the preamble of the Student Code of Conduct and states, in terms borrowed from the School of Education and the Community Development Center, the objectives of the University. That is, you venture in the hallowed doors immature and ethically unresponsive and irresponsible sheep, and miraculously arrive after a 4 year hiatus from society, a mature adult.

By the looks of it, we are rapidly failing; one need only go to Southwest on Halloween to determine the veracity of my statement. Actually, there is nothing wrong with college students celebrating Halloween with the same intensity and in the same style as it was celebrated when we were but knee high to a grasshopper. What has changed is not the custom that surrounds the depraved holiday, but the way in which it is celebrated. The times have changed so extraordinarily since our callow youth, and these changes are naturally reflected in our mannerisms in our old age. But it struck me that it would be enjoyable to see how others have made this transition. For example, how would the infamous My Three Sons celebrate Halloween in 1978.

Mr. Douglas — attend Halloween formal at the Country Club for the over 55 crowd, dressed as Abe Lincoln. Finds 44 other Lincoln's; Drinks too much egg nog and makes passes at the 44 Mary Todds.

Uncle Charlie — gets his kicks by baking brownies spiked with Spanish fly and hash for trick or treaters. Also puts razor blades in candy apples, chortling to himself, Arg, matey.

Robbie — goes to party on the 9th floor of Kennedy in Southwest in costume as Harry Reems. Trips out on Qualudes and winds up with Hokkaido Bear in a carrel in the library.

Chip — goes to high school dance as C3PO, smokes 4 joints of Columbian, has 3 Martinis, pops 2 valium and goes into coma. Put in intensive care next to 6 year old girl who bit into apple with razor blades.

Ernie — finally gives into peer pressure and smokes a joint; sees Great Pumpkin and runs around Amherst giving joints to any kid under 15.

Or, perhaps, if one doesn't consider the characters listed above to be the average family, what about Family Affair:

Uncle Bill — goes to party on 72 street and Park Avenues as Robert Young; gets shnokkered on Vodka and wakes up in Tijuana, married to a 42nd street floozy.

Mr. French — finds a joint in Jodie's pocket doing a wash; smokes it and runs out to Central Park and molests little boys and girls. Put away for pederasty.

Sissy — gets high on life, takes a dare and kisses some guy. To repent, she runs off and joins the Moonies.

Jodie — drinks too much punch at junior high dance; comes home and gets Buffy pregnant.

— Buffy — goes to same party dressed as Cinderella; stays after 12:00 and comes back as Lady Godiva. Loses shoes and virginity to Jodie.

There are others of course who celebrate Halloween in a more classical fashion: Telly Savalas will go as Night on Bald Mountain, etc. (very bad, but I couldn't resist). The Polyglots will get dressed up as soccer players and beat the Cosmos.

Of course, the types of activities listed above will not occur tonight. This is a peaceful, quiet, idyllic environment made so by the benevolent University so that we may mature and develop academically, intellectually and emotionally. I'd bet that there won't be a large amount of casual sex, alcohol imbibement nor intake of harmful substances: however, I've got horse sense — that which horses have that prevents them from betting on humans.

Some friends have suggested that I go as a human; not so, I cry, I am going to go as the distinguished Casanova of the 50's — Ward Cleaver.

Halloween party features Widespread Depression

The Union Program Council's Halloween party tonight at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom will feature the fabulous swing orchestra: Widespread Depression Orchestra. The 10-man band, reminiscent of the Count Basie Orchestra, will play the goodtime music of the swing era. Celebrities like Count Basie have deemed Widespread Depression Orchestra a "great band", and Charlie Harrison (Duke Ellington's manager) calls them "a fabulous group; the best I've seen in years."

Admission is $1 with costume, $2 for everyone else. Tickets can be purchased at TIX in the Student Union (across from the Post Office). There will be a cash bar and prizes will be awarded for the best costumes.

Streaking Pats topple Jets for fourth straight

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Steve Grogan tossed three touchdown passes, including a 52-yarder to rookie Stanley Morgan, to spark the New England Patriots to their fourth straight win yesterday, a 24-13 victory over the New York Jets.

Grogan, who has 13 TD passes halfway through the season, also threw scoring tosses of 11 yards to Darryl Stingley and four yards to rookie Don Hasselbeck. John Smith added a 30-yard field goal.

The Jets, who played New England to a 10-10 tie in the first half, scored on a 30-yard pass from Richard Todd to Jerome Barkum and field goals of 36 and 21 yards by Pat Leahy.

Grogan completed 16-of-23 passes for 228 yards, while Stingley, who had 116 yards in receptions last week, caught eight passes for 121 yards.

NFL Scoreboard

Oakland 24, Denver 14

The Patriots, after a 1-2 start, are 5-2. The Jets, 30-27 winners over the Patriots four weeks ago, now have lost three straight to fall to 2-5.

Grogan snapped the tie at 3:57 of the third period when, on a first down at the New England 48, he threw an arching pass that Morgan ran down at the 10 before streaking past two defenders. The play capped a 73-yard, eight-play drive.

New England sealed the game less than six minutes later when Grogan, on a third-and-four situation at the Jets' four, rolled to his right and flipped to the 6'7'' Hasselbeck. The Patriots' second-round draft choice from Colorado now has four catches for the year, all for touchdowns.

New York Jets running back Clark Gaines finds the going tough as Patriots Steve King (r) and Bob Howard (1) combine to bring him down in second quarter action from yesterday's game at Schaefer Stadium. New England won, 24-13. (UPI)

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1 - Born today, you have (and always have had) extraordinary recuperative powers. As an adult, you may have minor ailments due to emotional set backs, but since you usually recognize the psychological root of these ailments, you should not suffer long. You possess a driving need to aid others in their troubles. You find it impossible to allow suffering human beings to pass you by without trying to help them out of their difficulty.

You are not particularly moody, though you have been known to cut even your dearest friends when depressed. In general, however, you enjoy life's gifts – good food, friends, merry or philosophical conversation, the process of learning and applying knowledge – and these keep you alert, progressive and enthusiastic.

Though not outwardly romantic in appearance or behavior, you've a strong romantic bent which you keep under wraps. In private, you will display a full range of romantic views and behavior. You will be a loving wife or husband, though private when it comes to demonstrations of that love.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - Illness may strike early in the day, But, you should have a swift recovery by noon. Don't underestimate yourself.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Your response to another's emotions may be more upsetting than you think. Remain calm toward evening.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - Your good constitution helps you to recover from illness. Major change is in order.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - A romantic morning leads directly to an active afternoon. Financial matters loom larger than they ought in P.M.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - A fondness for pleasure could stand in the way of business success. Don't pretend to what you don't feel.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - Control your emotional reactions to criticism. You can learn a great deal if you will remain calm.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - An interesting conversation in A.M. bears curious fruit towards P.M. Don't be too quick to alarm your friends.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - Advise the young; help them learn from your experience. Believe what is said.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) - Peace of mind requires hard work. Work at a relationship and you will find what you seek in it.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) Stay within your budget today. It would be easy to aggravate a financial situation on the home front.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) - An unpleasant meeting with an old enemy leaves a bad taste in your mouth today. Don't allow it to spoil work.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) - Where nature attracts you, respond. A good mood is catching; cheer up your fellows with optimism and affection.

JV booters deadlock Springfield in thriller

By JUDY KEEFE
and BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

It began as the battle of the unbeatens. The Springfield freshmen soccer squad was sporting an 8-0 record while the visiting subvarsity Minutemen were 4-0. As was expected, Springfield proved to be UMass' toughest opponent thus far.

Two regulation periods and two overtime periods later, the two teams remained undefeated as they fought to a 2-2 standoff Friday at Springfield College.

For UMass it was an uphill struggle to escape with the draw.

The first half was a period of adjustment. Not only did the Minutemen have to worry about their capable opponents, but also Springfield's extra weapon; the artificial surface.

Springfield used its "kick and run" style of play to best advantage as the Chiefs quickly surged to a 1-0 lead.

Although the score remained that way through the rest of the first half, the 13 shots UMass goalie Mark Marilla had to fend off compared to only two shots his counterpart at the other end of the field, Mike Verchot saved showed better the domination of SC in the first half.

In the second half, though, UMass responded with added motivation. While the Chiefs seemed content to sit on their lead, the momentum clearly swung in UMass' favor. But that momentum could not bring forth a goal since the Springfield defense continually thwarted the Minutemen attempts.

With ten minutes left in the game, persistence was rewarded with a goal from Dave Mains, assisted by Bob Montalto. Ninety seconds later SC frustrated UMass' hopes for overtime with a goal. It was a result of a corner kick, just like its first goal.

Hope was instilled once again in the Minutemen, though, when the referee awarded them a penalty shot. But Dave Mains rung his shot off the right goal post and once again UMass' hopes flickered away.

But, unbelievably, with a minute left to play UMass was awarded another penalty shot. This time Bob Montalto pumped it down the middle and out of the goalie's reach for a tie score, which eventually led to overtime play.

Montalto pumped it down the middle and out of the goalie's reach for a tie score, which eventually led to overtime play.

In the two overtimes UMass carried the pace, but it was Minuteman goalie Marilla's fantastic saves that saved UMass from a loss.

Both coaches expressed satisfaction in the performances of their players but neither the coaches nor players were content with a tie. Their attitude towards the outcome of the game is best expressed by the line used by many players after playing to a tie, "It's like kissing your sister."

teammate Frank Carroll, Gary Crossans (URI), George Reed (UNH), Pat O'Neal (UConn), Pete Kane (UConn), and Matt Wolff (UMass).

Quinn, displaying the speed and strength that was characteristic of his All-American 1976 season, sprinted ahead of the pack and then eased up for the last mile. Carroll kept up with Quinn for most of the race, but tired in the last mile and was in second place up until the last 100 yards when URI's Crossans caught him at the tape.

"Frank had a great race, possibly the best of the season. Like Quinn, Frank was aggressive, and set the pace for the rest of the pack," said O'Brien.

The coach was also quite pleased with the races of Panaccione, the Wolff brothers (Matt and Tom), and Kevin McCusker. All four of them were within striking distance of Quinn for the first four miles of the race, but were sluggish the last mile, according to O'Brien.

"This was the first race for us in more than two weeks, and our timing may have been lost but I'm glad our runners had this chance, before the New Englands to warmup," he said.

The only disappointing aspect of the victory was the race of All-American Stetson Arnold. Arnold finished 14th after running fifth for the first two miles of the race.

Arnold, coming back from a year's layoff due to hepatitis, has looked strong in some races and weak in others. The reason, according to O'Brien, is not due to conditioning but to a loss of blood sugar causing fatigue.

"It's called hypoglycemia, and its effects are a lack of energy production for the body when running. Stet got tired in the middle of the race, thus causing his low finish. However, after talking to him after the race, he felt he could recover in time for the New Englands," said O'Brien.

Women runners place 2nd with depleted team

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

ALBANY, N.Y. — The decision by UMass women's cross country coach Charlotte Lettis to ground four of her top runners at the Albany State Invitational presented the seven traveling performers a chance to prove themselves against a strong field of 11 teams and 70 runners.

The chute at the finish line was speckled with familiar jerseys as the Minutewomen pushed across two harriers in the top five, and four amongst the first 20. Their team total of 52 points was second only to St. John's winning effort of 29.

"The competition was excellent today," commented Lettis, "I'm really pleased with our frontrunners who ran good tactical races. An invitational such as this gives the runners a chance to run in packs which is invaluable for meets like the Easterns and Nationals."

Joan Gallo from Suffolk College won comfortably in 18:17 over the relatively flat three-mile course. Second and third positions belonged to St. John's Valerie Scheiber and Maryanne Persan as they finished shoulder to shoulder in 18:28.

The efforts of UMass competitors Sue Swartz and Linda Welzel were rewarded with fourth and fifth place, respectively. Veteran Swartz ran the course in 18:45, with freshman Welzel nine seconds back in 18:54. Debbie Farmer in 12th place, Laurie Wolf in 19th, and Eileen Everett in 30th position rounded out the UMass scoring.

Persan took command of the contest early until she was directed the wrong way by several bystanders at the halfway point. It wasn't until she ran herself out of the lead that she realized her mistake and retraced her steps back into the competition. A lengthy discussion ensued after the race as the St. John's coaches filed a protest.

Although Gallo was awarded the first place trophy, the crowd on hand voiced their appreciation of Persan's performance when she walked up to the awards table to receive her third place prize.

"The only way to settle something like this is to run the race over again," said an official, "and that's ridiculous. A girl who is likely to be in the lead should know the course beforehand."

The season dwindles down for first-year mentor Lettis and her troops. The next excursion for the Minutewomen will be Saturday and the Eastern's at Rutgers University. The selected seven who will make the trip are veterans Jane Welzel, Barb Callahan, Sue Swartz, Debbie Farmer and frehsmen Tina Francario, Priscilla Wilson and Linda Welzel.

Spikers soar, then fall

By JEFFREY GLYNN

The UMass volleyball team Saturday added two more victories and one more loss to its record in a quad match played at NOPE gym.

The Minutewomen touched all parts of the scale as they defeated Boston University in straight games, Keene State in split games, and lost to Rhode Island in straight games.

UMass played BU first and built up a 10-5 lead before BU, with many successful blocks, tied the score at 11. Despite the comeback, UMass prevailed in the game by a score of 15-12.

The second game looked like a repeat of the first as UMass had a 6-1 lead when BU capitalized on some serving mistakes and took a lead of 7-6. Then UMass, after some long, exciting rallies and good defense, recaptured the lead and held on to win 15-11.

Meanwhile, on the other court, a powerful Rhode Island team crushed Keene State by the score of 15-6, 15-9.

The next two matches had Rhode Island going against BU and UMass taking on Keene State. Rhode Island had no trouble disposing of BU, winning by a score of 15-2, 15-7. However, UMass had some problems against a scrappy Keene State club.

It began as a rout, with UMass dominating the first game by a score of 15-1. Then Keene State took control as it built up leads of 4-2 and 10-3 by taking advantage of UMass errors. UMass refused to yield any longer and by exceptional defense and serves tied it up at 10-all. UMass began to tire out at this point, and Keene State won the game 15-10. The third game saw the lead change hands many times as UMass won it by the small margin of two points, 15-13.

This set up the match for first place in the quad meet between UMass and Rhode Island. Rhode Island took control from the start and with its devastating attack and superior spiking power destroyed a distraught UMass club by the score of 15-1, 15-5.

Commenting on the second place finish, UMass coach Dianne Thompson said, "Although we had a hard time thinking offensively sometimes, overall everyone played well."

ALBANY, N.Y. — The trip north for the UMass sub-varsity cross country teams proved successful, as only the varsity squad from CW Post could negate the possibility of the Minutemen seizing both first place trophies.

The self proclaimed mean green from CW Post, absent from last year's contest, stormed back with a spirited effort to win the Albany Invitational's varsity division. UMass overcame last year's champion Keene State, 127 to 129, however fell short of CW Post's winning tally of 111. Running on its home turf, Albany State finished fourth with 152.

Hartwick's Dick Cartwright posted a 12-second victory over his nearest competitor Dave Severance of Plymouth, as he toured the 5.05 course in 25:14.

Short-striding veteran Bob Neil was the only UMass harrier to break into the top ten as he finished sixth in 25:42. Sophomore Glenn Lyle, running his best race of the season, crossed the line in 11th place and 25:58 Farther back in the field of 181 runners was Steve Hilyard in 27th, Mike Morris in 39th, and the varsity debut of freshman Mike Dorion in 44th.

"Bobby Neil is finally running back to form," said coach Arnie Morse. "This has been his best race to date. Glenn Lyle is making tremendous progress over last year, probably the best performance turned in by a UMass runner today."

JV spikers win

By JEFFREY GLYNN
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity volleyball team improved its record to 5-3 Thursday night, defeating Mt. Holyoke College by a score of 15-6, 14-16, 15-12. It marked the fifth straight Minutewomen win after beginning the season with three straight losses.

The Minutewomen came out strong in the first game, winning it rather easily by a score of 15-6. Christine Perron and Joanne Eames accounted for 12 of the points with well-placed serves.

The second game began quite differently as Mt. Holyoke quickly jumped out to a quick 4-0 lead. Then behind the serving of Christine Perron, strong spiking by Maria Minicucci, good net play by Julie Mendelsohn, and good all-around play by Nancy Tate, UMass came back and tied the score at 14-14. However, Mt. Holyoke scored the next two points to win the game 16-14.

Fourth straight win

Booters bewitch BC, 2-0

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Two goals in the first half was all the UMass soccer team needed Saturday afternoon as the booters posted their fourth straight win with a 2-0 shutout over the Eagles of Boston College on the Field behind Boyden.

As in the past, the stalwart Minutemen defense was the story behind the win as Pat Veale, Larry Aronson, Mark Vassalotti, and goaltender Mark Hodgdon combined to bottle up the Eagle offense. Hodgdon, a senior, tied the UMass record for shutouts during a season as Saturday's blanking was his fifth this year.

"Our defense was the kev to the whole thing," said UMass coach Russ Kidd. "They were covering up for each other and only allowed one really touch shot on Hodgdon."

Sophomore fullback Vassalotti opened up the scoring for UMass at 17:26 of the first half when he took a corner kick from Bill Leary and banged it home amidst a pileup of players in front of the BC goal. It was the first goal in a UMass uniform for the Needham native and it proved to be all that the Minutemen needed.

The second UMass goal came at 38:04 of the same half when senior Andy Moore took a Joel Mascolo pass to the right of the Boston College net and scored on a blazing shot that deflected off the shins of an Eagle defender. Like Vassalotti's goal, the score was the first during Moore's career here.

"That goal was sure a long time coming," said a grinning Moore in the locker room after the contest. "That's what happens in this game; we were applying a lot of pressure and didn't score, then we scored on that deflection."

The win boosts UMass' record to a healthy 7-4 while BC saw its record drop to 5-7-1.

BC coach Ben Brewster was a little disappointed with his team's performance and said that it was due to inexperience.

"We just don't have anyone to make the decisive plays," said Brewster. "Against a strong team like Massachusetts, any errors that we make are fatal."

Brewster, in his first year as head coach, had a lot of praise for the way that UMass coach Russ Kidd has built up the program here. "Kidd's done a nice job with the program here over the last year and a half," said Brewster.

The Minutemen applied most of the offensive pressure in Saturday's game and could have run up the score but missed on a lot of opportunities. In the first half, Mike Shannon, who has had the hot scoring hand (foot?) as of late, missed two golden opportunities with a shot that barely sailed over the top of the net and with a point blank shot right at the BC netminder who couldn't help but stop it.

In the second half, the Minutemen continued to press but failed to increase their margin. Both Tasso Kousoukos and Moore took shots that missed scoring as they went over the net, missing by inches. Also, freshman Ion Bogdaneris had an excellent opportunity when he dribbled the ball in from midfield and shot from the right side only to see the ball just miss the pole on the left side.

Bobby Abt, a freshman out of New York City, has been making his presence felt as of late and had a good game Saturday. The 5'9" forward exhibits a tremendous amount of hustle and looks like he's here to stay.

"My game plan is to press all the time and feed passes to the center which is what I think a winger's job is," said Abt.

The booters return to action on Wednesday night when they hop on the bus for Springfield College to play their first night game of the season at 7:30.

BOOTER BANTER: Fullback Greg Omasta is back in action after a head injury a week and a half ago... excellent crowd on hand to see the booters win their second straight at home... goaltender Hodgdon has only allowed 10 goals in 11 games.

Harriers win YanCon; Quinn takes first place

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Captain Mike Quinn's return to the UMass cross-country lineup was noticed immediately as the junior runner scored a first place in the Yankee Conference championships held this weekend, here on the URI campus. UMass, scoring five of its top seven runners in the top ten, captured the team title with 29 points.

UConn was the harriers' nearest competitor with 61 points, while New Hampshire placed a distant third with 78. Other teams competing and finishing in respective order were Maine, BU, URI, and Vermont.

UMass' Yankee Conference victory marks the school's eighth straight YanCon title. The next stop for coach Ken O'Brien's men will be next Saturday as UMass will enter the New England championships.

Other UMass finishers besides Quinn were Frank Carroll third, (24:23), Matt Wolff seventh (24:32), Lou Panaccione eighth (24:33), Kevin McCusker 10th (24:44). Other finishers for the second-ranked in New England harriers were Tom Wolff 11th (24:45) and Stetson Arnold 14th.

The YanCon title victory more than pleased Ken O'Brien for more than the obvious joy of winning. This was the first race Quinn has run in more than a month and O'Brien was anxious to see how Quinn would react to actual competitive racing after a month's layoff and just a week and half of training.

Secondly, the win was accomplished by the UMass depth. After season-long experimentation by O'Brien with several of his runners, O'Brien finally decided upon the seven best and his decision was proved out.

"I'm happy to say that Mike (Quinn) had no ill effects after his race. He came back well, looked in fine form, had a good fast time, and it's good to see him back in the lineup," said O'Brien.

"Secondly, our team as a whole looked excellent. We went out fast, ran aggressive, and accomplished what we wanted to do. Before the race, we wanted to place seven of our runners in the top ten. We came very close to that and I'm satisfied," he said.

UMass, headed by Quinn, actually had all of its seven runners in the top ten for the first two miles of the race. On a fairly level course, and a clear cool day, Quinn set the pace. Aided by teammate Frank Carroll, UMass had the top two runners of the race going into the two-mile mark.

At that point the course ran into some steep hills, gradually branching the 50 runners who entered the race. Coming out of the hilly section of the race (three mile mark), Quinn had a slight ten-yard lead over

Carter accepts former director's plea

CIA's Helms pleads no contest

WASHINGTON [AP] — Former CIA Director Richard M. Helms pleaded no contest yesterday to two misdemeanor charges of failing to testify fully about the agency's attempts to prevent the election of Marxist Salvador Allende as president of Chile in 1970.

The government decided to accept the plea to avert the accidental disclosure of secrets if Helms went to trial.

Appearing before U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker, Helms said "I found myself is a position of conflict," when he testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1973 that the CIA made no attempt to influence the Chilean election.

The Justice Department recommended a suspended, minimum sentence and a small fine in exchange for Helms' plea, which he entered virtually unnoticed at an afternoon hearing before U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker in Washington.

No date was set for formal sentencing, but there were reports it could be as early as today.

Justice Department officials said in a statement the plea agreement was made to avoid the security risk of bringing Helms to trial on a felony charge.

Assistant Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti said the decision was approved by Carter during a meeting with Attorney General Griffin Bell even as Helms, 64, appeared in court with defense attorney Edward Bennett Williams at his side.

It ended months of speculation that, if threatened with a jail term, the powerful intelligence head could implicate other major figures from the Nixon and Ford administrations and possibly reveal national security secrets.

Rather than seeking a grand jury indictment, the department filed a two-count criminal information charging Helms with failing to give complete answers in 1973 when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee asked questions about the CIA's involvement in efforts to prevent Marxist Salvador Allende from becoming president of Chile.

The charge, which makes it a misdemeanor for a witness under certain circumstances to refuse to testify, carries a minimum sentence of a month in jail and a $100 fine and a maximum of a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

A White House spokesman said Bell "talked to" the President in the early afternoon and he approved the decision.

"He thinks it unholds the authority of the law and Congress and protects the legitimate interests of the country," said Press Secretary Jody Powell.

But Civiletti, who represented the government at Helms' arraignment, said Carter was notified of the agreement as Helms entered his plea and told he could nix it if he so chose.

Bell was asked by reporters at a press briefing what would have occurred if Carter had disapproved the agreement.

"I guarantee that if the President wanted me to stop it, I would have stopped it," he said.

Parker refused in open court to be bound by the Justice Department recommendation, but he was expected to heed it.

Helms and Williams, whose legal services were paid for by the government, were not immediately available for comment.

The charges were filed in connection with Helms' statements before two 1973 Senate hearings, the first on his nomination as ambassador to Iran. Helms left the CIA in 1973 and served as ambassador until President Carter took office.

At that hearing, on Feb. 7, Helms "failed to answer...questions fully, completely and accurately as required by law," according to a statement of facts filed along with the "criminal information" in federal court.

The same committee questioned Helms again on March 6, 1973, during its inquiry into allegations that the CIA or the International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. attempted to block Allende's election in 1970. It said that Helms again "failed to answer those questions fully and completely as required by law."

It said that from July through September of 1970 CIA officers discussed the Allende presidential campaign with ITT officers in meetings held in the United States and South America.

It also stated, the CIA conducted an extensive "...program to prevent Allende's election."

Dorm lease proposed

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

UMass is alone among 52 universities in not having a dormitory lease, according to the Lease Task Force of Rents and Fees Committee, whose job is to secure such a lease. Its proponents say a lease would benefit UMass students by requiring the University legally to provide quality housing for dorm residents.

The proposed lease was drawn up by the Lease Task Force, which is composed of people from Rents and Fees, the Undergraduate Student Senate, Legal Services Office, Student Organizing Project, and Student Center for Educational Research. The task force will present the lease to the senate for approval on Wednesday.

According to a task force report: "Through a random sampling of 52 universities nation wide, it was established that UMass-Amherst is the only institution without a lease. The establishment of such a lease is necessary to legitimize a landlord-tenant relationship, with all relevant and customary rights, between students and the administration at this university."

Student Attorney General Jeff Lutsky yesterday said a ruling by the Judiciary Court of the Student Government Association (SGA) on election procedures will serve as a precedent for future area government elections.

The court ruled last Thursday that new elections for representatives, involving the original candidates, must be held in Brown House in the Sylvan area. The ruling followed a complaint by an unsuccessful candidate for representative James Chaney who complained of election irregularities.

The court also ruled since the Sylvan Area constitution does not include election rules and regulations, Chapter 10 of the SGA constitution "shall be strictly enforced."

Chapter 10 of the SGA Constitution establishes rules and regulations for holding elections.

The Court's ruling stated "since the court

CAC requests Senate aid snack bar study

By MICHELE BIAGIONI
Collegian Staff

The Central Area Council (CAC) last night voted to petition the undergraduate student senate to evaluate the impact of a possible Orchard Hill Snack Bar on an existing one at Greenough. Undergraduate Senator said the Greenough Snack Bar has recently become a profitable enterprise and the establishment of a second snack bar on the Orchard Hill may not be economically feasible.

Both the New World Center and the Men's Center had representatives at the meeting. The New World Center explained their expenditures during September and October came largely from sending a representative to a Third World conference in Atlanta, Ga. They also submitted job descriptions for the duties of those individuals whose salaries are paid by CAC. The Men's Center applied for funding from the Central Area Council, and announced the selection of three coordinators and their program proposals.

Central

CAC President Mark Zinan proposed a reconsideration of the traditional Central-Orchard Hill Spring Concert. Because of OHAG budget difficulties, Zinan said, Central plans to contribute a larger sum of money. He discussed moving the site to more Central-focused Baker dormitory hill. Both CAC and OHAG are awaiting subsequent budget allocations from the undergraduate student senate. The distribution of OHAG's funds to the mutually sponsored event will determine CAC's course of action. Presently, Central Area Council is working with a $2,904 budget.

Dormitory representatives were encouraged to determine the interest of area residents in the founding of a radio station to be operated by residents. Funds were alloted to Wheeler for a film series, and to Chadbourne for a coffeehouse to be held at the end of November. The representatives are awaiting notification of any alteration in the present policy regarding the sale of alcoholic beverages at dormitory events.

Presently the Central Area Council is searching for a permanent meeting place. They are currently contending for an opening in the basement of Baker.

Weekend theft in dorm

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

Two UMass students missed apprehending a thief in their Pierpont room by 11 minutes early Saturday morning, one of the students said.

Alan Green and Bill DeProspo entered their room at 12:45 a.m. and found their electric alarm clock on the floor and $400 worth of audio equipment missing, police said. The clock had stopped 11 minutes earlier.

"They yanked the clock out with the stereo," Green said, "and must have been in a hurry because they took a CB mike but not the radio."

The ground floor apartment was entered through the window, police said.

In another break-in, Kevin Morrissey and Scott D'Amelio, 312 Webster, had their Panasonic stereo and two Texas Instrument calculators stolen over the weekend, police said.

D'Amelio said they had gone home for the Halloween weekend and returned to find their window smashed and $350 worth of items missing, police reported.

The third floor apartment was entered through the window, police said.

In other news, a 1967 VW Bug, belonging to Scott Maynard, 227 Webster, was stolen from Fraternity-Sorority Park sometime last week, police said. The car was valued at $750.

Another VW was vandalized Friday night in lot 49 when someone cut a gas-line hose and dented the hood of a 1973 VW Bug belonging to Nancy Bergeron, 180 Woodbridge St., South Hadley.

Petition causes new Sylvan officer vote

By JANIS FINSTEIN

[See related story P. 1]

The Sylvan Area Government was forced to hold another election in Brown dormitory for the government's candidates due to a petition brought to the Student Attorney General by a resident of that dorm.

Sylvan Area Government officers voted to choose three people from the area government and one person from each of the house councils to recommend constitutional changes. The changes will then be brought to the area government for amendments.

Sylvan Area Government members also voted to allocate $200 to each of the three house councils with the stipulation that no more than 50 per cent of the money will be spent on alcohol.

It was also voted that Treasurer Jim O'Connell will be a temporary student senator.

Susan Birmingham and Lydin Preston spoke on behalf of Student Unionization. Birmingham explained that with unionization a council would be formed in each dormitory in order to have a direct influence on the decisions made by student government.

Sylvan

The charges stated that one of the candidates on the Sylvan Area Government election ballot was campaigning near a ballot box, and another person at the ballot box was instructing people whom to vote for. There are no changes in the officers previously elected because of the re-election. Two new representatives were elected from Brown dormitory: Ingrid Newman and James Chaney.

Researcher's daughter drowns in Amherst swamp

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

The 20-month-old daughter of a UMass researcher died from accidental drowning Sunday afternoon in a swampy area behind the North Village apartment complex, Hampshire County Medical Examiner Donald Rogers said yesterday.

Rogers said an autopsy conducted yesterday at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton confirmed cause of death as asphyxiation due to drowning.

Nagi Kawasaki, daughter of Kenji and Mariko Kawasaki, North Village Apartments, Amherst, was pronounced dead at the scene Sunday at 5:43 p.m. by Rogers.

UMass police spokesman Arthur Clifford said the girl apparently wandered away from her parents' apartment to a shallow swampy area 75 yards from the complex.

The girl's body was discovered in 18 inches of water after a frantic half-hour search by her parents and neighbors.

The Amherst Fire Department was called to the scene at 5:43 p.m., fire officials said. Efforts by University Police and the Fire Department to revive the girl were unsuccessful, Clifford said.

The victim's father is a visiting researcher at the UMass Polymer Science Department. He is on leave from the Idemitsu Kosan Petroleum and Chemical Company in Chiba, Japan.

Funeral arrangements will be handled by Amherst Funeral Home.

"The decision affects only Brown House and Chaney," said Student Attorney General Jeff Lutsky. "It is not legally binding on others but in reality that's the way it will be. It will set a standard courts in the future will go by."

"It's not written that in the absence of their own election rules Chapter 10 will be binding," Lutsky added. "By acting, the court is setting precedent."

The court ruled the new election must be held because "there was evidence of electioneering at the ballot box during the election" and because ballot boxes were not locked during the election.

Linda J. Fuller, a member of the 3 member court that made the ruling, said the electioneering included incidents of poll workers trying to influence votes.

"Poll workers were saying, 'vote for him, he's a good guy', and things like that," she said.

"The absence of locked ballot boxes is a violation of the election rules set up in Chapter 10 of the SGA constitution," the Judiciary said.

Fuller said, "on the basis of evidence presented, there was nothing else to do but apply Chapter 10."

"I sincerely hope it will encourage them (other area governments) to set up their own rules," Lutsky said of the court's ruling.

SGA co-president Jon A. Hite said the area governments "may adopt Chapter 10," as a result of the ruling. "Others may be smart and adopt their own."

Dave Goodhue, co-president of the Northeast Area Government Association, and Mark Zinan, president of the Central Area Council, told the Collegian last night their areas already have rules regarding elections in their constitutions.

Goodhue said the ruling will have no effect on his area government association's plans because election regulations are "laid out" in the Northeast constitution.

Zinan said the ruling will not affect the Central Area Council because the Central constitution was modified after an incident similar to the Sylvan issue arose last March.

Representatives from the Southwest Assembly, the Orchard Hill Area Government Association, and the Sylvan Area Government could not be reached for comment last night.

UM credit bid begins

By DEBBIE WALLACE
and BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

University self-evaluation will shift into higher gear this month as UMass prepares for its bid to be re-accredited next semester.

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC) will make a "site visit" next April to examine the University. Based on its own observations and the University self-evaluation, due March 1, 1978, the association will release a report stating its criticisms and recommendations.

UMass goes up for accreditation every 10 years.

The nine University schools and colleges, as well as the Office of Student Affairs, will solicit input from their respective faculty, staff and students until the end of this month. Each of these groups will then submit its findings to a 20-member University committee that will prepare the final package for the NEASC.

"Every constituency of the University will be involved," said Paul L. Puryear, vice chancellor for academic affairs and provost. Puryear is responsible for the self-evaluation process here.

The quality of life for students on campus and off will be examined by the Office of Student Affairs. Members of its self-evaluating committee will visit six randomly selected dorms this month, asking students "open-ended" questions about living conditions at the University, according to Ruth Ann Green, assistant to the vice chancellor for Student Affairs.

Sororities and fraternities, University family housing and Third World students (through the New Africa House), will also be contacted for input by Student Affairs, said Larry Benedict, director of Student Affairs Research and Evaluation.

Benedict, coordinator of the Student Affairs self-evaluation committee, said the University committee has formulated four basic questions each group on campus will deal with. They are:

— What is the basic quality of life at UMass, the Commonwealth's only public land-grant institution?

— What is the "mix" on campus — in terms of sex and age, race, etc.?

— How should the University go about allocating its resources?

— What is the status of the Five-College Program?

In each case, those surveyed will be asked how they think these aspects will be different in five years, and what the possible consequences could be, said Benedict.

Although the purpose of the 10-year evaluation is, at least superficially, to determine if the University should be re-accredited, the real value of the process lies in the NEASC critique of the University, said Ruth Green.

Selectmen allow decriminalization drive

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night voted unanimously to allow the Massachusetts Decriminalization Coalition to hold a petition drive for decriminalization of marijuana in front of the Unitarian Church on North Pleasant Street Saturday.

The drive will be part of a state-wide petition drive being sponsored by the Coalition and the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORMAL). There will also be tables set up in the UMass dining commons this week for the signing of petitions.

Coalition spokesperson Cece Dion said the organization's goal for the Amherst area is to collect 30,000 to 35,000 signatures by Nov. 28. Only 2,000 signatures have been collected so far, she said.

State-wide coordinator Peter Graham cited two major problems in collecting signatures. One was "general student apathy". The other was the fact that in order to sign the petition, the signator must be a registered voter.

To alleviate that problem, the Coalition says it will also be manning polling places on election day, Nov. 8, in an effort to reach registered voters state-wide.

In keeping with Halloween spirit, the selectmen stopped in mid-meeting to don masks, drawing a brief wave of chuckles from others in attendance. The board, however, quickly, removed the masks and settled back down to business.

A proposed motion for article 4 on the Nov. 14 special Town Meeting was tabled until additional information could be gathered. The proposed motion asks the town to direct the SCARCE committee to perform the following tasks with the water development program:

A. To review the state of the art on municipal water supply conservation measures germane to New England,

B. To review the maintenance procedures and user charge of the town ... pertaining to water consumption,

C. To review the uses of portable water made by the several large scale consumers — with due consideration given the special needs of the institutions of higher education,

D. And to report to the next annual town meeting their findings and recommendations, including practical and lawful alternatives to an increasing need for municipal water supply.

The last section of the motion calls for the allocation of $1,000 to cover in-state travel and publication costs. The matter will be considered by the selectmen at their regular meeting next week.

The board also voted to accept Berkshire Terrace in North Amherst as a public way. Town Manager A. Louis Hayward recommended to the board that the street, which has been maintained by the town since the 1950's, be officially accepted as a town street.

Public Works Superintendent Stanley Ziomek told the board that the town has provided snow removal, paving and sweeping services over the past ten years.

In a letter presented to the board, four street residents pointed out that the street was accepted as a public way in 1950, but the town never finalized the deal.

"We assume that this was an oversight and respectfully ask the selectmen to accept this street and cause its removal from our taxable real property," the letter said in part.

Recyclers searching for recyclable assistance

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Michael Lichtman, director of the two-year-old Student Senate Recycling Project, says more cooperation is needed from both students and administration for the project to be more successful.

"Resources are running out. There comes a time when people must decide whether they want to care about the quality of their life," says Lichtman.

Since September, Lichtman has been spending about 25 hours weekly overseeing the project's garbage pick-ups and heading a nine-person team to recycle glass, paper, and aluminum at UMass.

"I see the job as one with which I can do something with my environment," Litchman explained.

Lichman said paper for recycling is collected from 46 green bins marked "Recyclable paper only" located outside dormitories, in residential areas, or around the campus in various academic buildings. Paper is also picked up from huge bins in the Campus Center, the University print shop, Whitmore Administration Building, and the Graduate Research Center.

Last year the project collected 130 tons of recyclable paper and 30 tons of glass. Presently, they are collecting about 40 tons of garbage weekly. Lichtman points out that the project is only collecting 1-50 of the possible paper disposed of on this campus.

"People have to realize that for nine people trying to go to school at the same time. It's a lot of work," Lichtman said.

After paper has been collected in the bins, it is loaded into one of the two project recycling trucks and taken to a company in Northampton, which crushes the paper into blocks.

The blocks are then sold to paper mills who turn out recycled paper.

Lichtman said there are "acceptable" and "unacceptable" paper products for recycling, and students should be conscientious about disposing items which that are recyclable. Newspapers, cardboard, magazines, paper bags, napkins, tissues, and postcards fall into the recyclable category. Products not acceptable for recycling include carbon paper, any waxed paper product, styrofoam, cigarette and cigar butts, aluminum foil, pie plates, and anything plastic.

According to Lichtman there are 19 dormitories with bins for recyclable glass. Commuters and students without bins in their dormitories should bring glass to lot 26, where all the glass is crushed, then sold to a firm which melts it down for re-use. Lichtman said it is important that any glass have all metal removed and be separated according to color: green, brown or clear.

Litchman said lot 26 has separate bins for paper, different shades of glass, and aluminum.

Twice weekly, four to five students collect garbage from the green bins and about once a week, two students run the glass pick-up. These ae work-study positions, Lichtman said.

There are two paid area coordinators in charge of seeing trash collected and brought to lot 26. They are also trying to increase the number of bins for recyclable glass in dormitories in their respective areas. Bruce Karson is the recycling coordinator for Central-Orchard Hill Area, while Suzanne Star heads Southwest's recycling projects. Karson and Star together are in charge of Northeast-Sylvan Area recycling activities.

There are volunteers in several of the dorms that have recyclable glass bins who assist in bringing the glass to lot 26. "We always need dorm volunteers...and we're always looking for people with ideas and who are willing to help," Lichtman said.

Karson said he enjoys his job as an area coordinator because he likes "going around and talking to people...the environment is an important issue."

Lichtman said the Recognized Student Organization office gave the recycling project an initial fee for the pick-up trucks, but funds for other expenses (i.e., salaries) must come from money the project receives when it sells its recyclable paper and glass. Lichtman said the project "is just about breaking even now financially...but there are still old debts to pay."

Collegian ... ...Costume Night!!

Monty Hall would have loved it.....

The first Collegian Halloween costume contest held last night was in true "Let's Make A Deal" atmosphere. Mickey Mouse, Mr. Peanut, a two-headed monster, Quasimodo, a human cash register, assorted pumpkins, vampires and other Halloween personalities were vying for the coveted Collegian prizes.

Categories in the contest included "traditional", "most original," "famous personality" and a "group entry." Contestants were allowed to enter one or all of the categories and were judged by five Collegian staffers. The winners received five dollars and their picture in this photo feature.

The boys and ghouls competing wore costumes from all ranges of the imagination but the prevalent theme for this year was definitely "Star Wars." Three Darth Vaders arrived with light sabers to battle it out for famous personality. There was but one Jawa entry.

The Darth Vader who walked away with the prize was Pit Martin of Wheeler, who combined batteries, electrical components, and a cellophane flashlight to produce the most realistic costume.

"Doctor Death", a figure draped in black with a huge pumpkin for a head, was the victor among the traditional entries. Jeff Young of McNamara, who had been wearing the "rotten and slimy" carved out pumpkin for "at least three hours straight" said the idea for the costume came to him while sitting in the Blue Wall after "about eight beers."

Two winners in the most original category were a tusked monster and a human tongue. Don MecClellan of Wheeler came garbed as the monster, while Linda Paul of Mary Lyon painted a huge tongue on a pillow slip which covered her body.

"The Fellowship of The Ring" was the winning entry in the group contest. Based on J.R.R. Tolkien's book, the group of four residents from McKimmie House were Strider (Jim Hamilton), Gimli (Randy Greenbaum), Hobbit (Bill Hogue) and Elrond (Rick Ward).

Another entry in the group competition was a foursome of Fruit of the Loom underwear, size 134-136 inches. The huge pair of underwear was held up by fruits Mary Haggerty (purple grapes), Mary Hamilton (leaves), Valerie Beecy (green grapes) and Sharon walker (apple).

Touche Turtle, Super Garbage, Spiderman, Sherlock Holmes and Doctor Watson, and a three-legged man lingered after the judging to mingle with other trick or treaters in the campus center. Some of the night's electricity was provided by a plug and socket costume made by Dave Robison and Kim Shawcross.

The Collegian costume contest was one of the final opportunities for UMass students to celebrate the holiday that has been dominating events the past five days. For those of you who either lost or did not enter, there's always next year — start planning now!

Women's Health Series

Rape—the fastest growing crime

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

This is the sixth in a weekly series of articles on women's health care.

What is rape?

What definition of "rape" do we come to when we strip away the trappings of the legal system and look at the actual behavior involved? Rape is any sexual intimacy forced on one person by another. That word, "forced", is the key.

Rape is not only a sexual crime. Rape is a crime of violence. In heterosexual rape, the penis is used as a weapon.

Rape is a crime in which the victim becomes not a human being, but an object. Just as a military mentality demands soldiers view the individuals they fight as "the enemy", rape mentality demands the reduction of women to "pieces of meat."

Susan Griffin has called rape the "All-American crime" (Ramparts, 9-71), not because it only occurs in America (it doesn't), but because American society provides the perfect setting for rape.

Rape is not a phenomenon totally alien to our everyday lives. In rape, the active-passive sexual roles American men and women are expected to adhere to are taken to their logical extreme.

Many women, when asked if they have ever been raped, will answer, "I don't know." With our normal pattern for sexual relationships containing such strong elements of conquest and submission, where do we draw the line? "Normal" sex and rape lie at different points along the same continuum. The patterns are the same, the difference is a matter of degree.

How commonly does rape, identified as such, occur? A study funded by the U.S. Department of Justice ("Criminal Victimization in the U.S." Vol. I, 11-74) reported about 85,000 rapes and attempted rapes in the first six months of 1973. Only 10 to 25 per cent of rapes are reported.

The number of women raped in America in 1973 may well have been over half a million. Crime statistics indicate that rape is the fastest growing crime in America. Rape can no longer be considered a rare and unusual occurrence.

Reported rape victims in this country have included children as young as six months and women as old as 93. It is a myth that young, stereotypically attractive women are the only ones who get raped. All women are potential rape victims.

Women continue to believe that no one they know would ever rape them though statistics indicate this just isn't true. A study by Menachim Amir "Patterns in Forcible Rape", U. Chicago, 1971) shows the chances are better than 50 per cent that a woman will know her attacker and that he will behave in a matter-of-fact way before and after the rape.

Rapists, unlike other types of sex offenders, are generally indistinguishable from ordinary men in psychological tests. If rapists show any unusual tendency at all, it is that they may express anger more violently than other men. But no indication of "sickness" is present.

It is more comfortable for us to imagine the rapist as a perverted maniac than it is to face the facts. Women can reassure themselves they won't get raped if they simply avoid dark alleys and strangers. Men can continue to relegate all responsibility for rape to "those freaks".

The fact is that male socialization in this country teaches men to rape. Men are taught to fear and loathe "feminine" qualities in themselves. The worst thing a man can be in America is womanish. For some men, this hatred of the "feminine" becomes exaggerated and comes to include all women. Contempt for traditionally feminine traits prompts men to rape women.

American men are taught that sex must be won through an elaborate game of pursuit and seduction. Sex becomes a commodity that must be bargained for. The man who gives the least and gets the most is the most successful man. Rape, or "free sex", is the ultimate "rip-off".

Rape laws are property laws. There is no such thing, legally, as rape within a marriage. A married man has a legal right to sex with his wife, whether she is willing or not. Our legal system in no way recognizes a woman's right to control her own sexuality.

The possibility of rape affects the day-to-day lives of all women. Sexual comments made by men to (or at) women are a kind of "petty rape". They are another kind of uninvited sexual intimacy. Such comments are designed to humiliate women, and carry along with them a reminder of the threat of rape.

"There is what might be called a universal

Billy Beer goes on sale but extremely hard to find

LOUISVILLE, Ky. [UPI] — Billy Beer, backed with the signed endorsement and the discerning taste buds of Billy Carter, went on sale yesterday but beer lovers had to go out of their way to find it.

A spot check showed many downtown restaurants and bars either didn't stock Billy Beer or didn't believe it could succeed in the city's competitive beer market.

"We won't display it even if it is a hometown beer," said a shopkeeper at a liquor store in Louisville. "We're merchandising merchandise. We don't care, even if it's billy goat beer."

At a downtown lounge, bartender Telly Hall said he wouldn't stock Billy Beer in his bar, which is a popular lunchtime watering spot for businessmen.

"It's not that we don't want it," Hall said, "it's just that we don't have room for it."

"It's a tough beer market," Hall said.

Hall said he believes Billy Beer is an attempt by the financially ailing Falls City Brewery to improve its image enough to attract a buyer.

One popular spot where Billy Beer was doing a brisk business was a chili and beer hall in the heart of Louisville's Germantown neighborhood.

"Of course it's new, but the response is very good," said the owner Joe Murrow. "When you get two out of three calls, it's a good response."

Murrow said it would take three weeks to determine if the response is due to the novelty or taste of the beer, which the president's brother endorsed as "the best I've ever tasted."

Billy Carter is receiving an undisclosed royalty on the sale of each can of Billy Beer.

State loses bid to charge doctor in sexual assault cases

WASHINGTON [UPI] — New York state lost out at the Supreme Court yesterday in its effort to prosecute a doctor on the testimony of a policeman who, without a search warrant, saw him sexually assault an anesthetized woman patient.

The justices rejected without comment the state's appeal seeking to overturn a lower court's suppression of testimony by the officer in Dutchess County, N.Y.

According to records in the case, state police investigator James Apolinaro climbed a seven-foot ladder to look into the examining rooms of Dr. William Abruzzi while policewoman Peggy Hopkins was inside posing as a patient.

The two were acting on complaints from several patients accusing Abruzzi of sexual misconduct during gynecological examinations. Apolinaro was watching to make sure no harm came to the policewoman, and he did not have a search warrant.

Apolinaro reported seeing the doctor commit three acts of sexual intercourse and two acts of sodomy on an unconscious woman in one of the examining rooms. On the basis of his statement, Abruzzi was indicted for sodomizing and raping the anesthetized woman patient and sexually abusing two other female patients aged 22 and 15.

New York argued that Apolinario's presence was needed to protect the undercover woman. The country court agreed and Abruzzi entered a plea of guilty to sexual abuse in the first degree.

Later, however, he appealed on grounds Apolinario's testimony was gained through an unreasonable search and seizure in violation of the Constitution and should not be allowed at trial.

Spanking public school child creates danger but widely used

WASHINGTON [UPI] — School children's behavior is unlikely to improve when they are spanked unless the punishment is so severe that hospitalization might be required afterward, an article in a government publication said yesterday.

The report, in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's Children Today publication, also said that corporal punishment creates a "syndrome of violence" which can set an example of aggressive behavior for other youngsters.

Overall, the article said, spanking represents a potential danger to child, teacher and school property, but it is widely used.

The Supreme Court ruled 5-4 in April that nothing in the Constitution prevents a teacher from paddling a public school child, but the Children Today article said research cast serious doubt on its effectiveness.

While corporal punishment may result in temporary reduction of certain behavior, it will not work in the long run unless it is "extremely harsh and repeated," the report said.

"In order for corporal punishment to be effective in stopping children's misbehavior the results would often be hospitalization," it said.

The report said two teenagers involved in the Supreme Court spanking decision required medical treatment that "would have resulted in reports of suspected child abuse had parents wielded the paddle."

The report said drawbacks to paddling include the possibility of injuring a child, setting a model of aggressive behavior that young children will imitate, frightening children who view the punishment; destroying student-teacher relationships and increasing chances of physical retaliation.

Black Africa deals tough on mandatory embargoes

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The United States, Britain and France yesterday vetoed attempts by black African nations to impose mandatory economic and arms embargoes against South Africa, but left the door open for a compromise on a milder ban on arms sales.

The U.N. Security Council immediately recessed for about an hour for consultations to seek a common course against the Pretoria government for its latest crackdown against black leaders and other dissidents and for the closing of black newspapers.

The vote was 10-5 in favor of each of three proposals that reflected black Africa's hardline course in dealing with South Africa. But the five "no" votes included vetoes from Washington, London and Paris, thus dooming the measure.

The other two "no" votes were cast by Canada and West Germany.

The Council approved 15-0 a fourth, blandly worded resolution strongly condemning massive violence and killings as an outgrowth of South Africa's apartheid policies.

U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young tried to steer for a compromise and appealed to the Council not to vote on the three hardline resolutions which were unacceptable to the West.

The three African Council members — Benin, Libya and Mauritius — ignored his plea and insisted on an immediate vote.

Young said the three vetoed resolutions represented "an attempt to divide us, and that is not tactically wise."

Both he and Canadian Ambassador William Barton said the Security Council's actions could be effective only if they were unanimous.

The projected compromise was a resolution unofficially proposed by Indian Ambassador Rikhi Jaipal, Council president for October under the monthly rotation system.

Diplomatic sources said the 15 Council members were discussing unanimous approval of the compromise during the recess.

The crisis that pushed the Security Council toward proposals for sanctions was triggered by South Africa's latest crackdown on black leaders and other dissidents and its closure of leading black newspapers.

★ Dorm lease benefits

After passing the senate, the lease will go to area governments for their approval and then to dormitories for further ratification. Members of the task force say they hope it will be approved directly by a majority of students on campus.

Following endorsement by the student body, the lease will be presented to the administration so the bargaining process can begin. All previous attempts to secure a lease from dorms have been turned down by the university, but task force members believe that students can win this time with well-organized popular support.

In addition to presenting the lease proposal, the task force will be surveying dorms to find out where the University is currently failing to maintain adequate housing standards. The checklists to be circulated will cover all aspects of campus housing, from lighting and heat to kitchen and storage facilities.

★ Recycling for future

Asked how the project could improve its productivity, Lichtman replied, "By getting more bins and barrels, and by getting more student and administration cooperation." He added that the project has "the administration's so-called support," but there is a lack of administrative support "because personally it can't benefit them and their political goals."

Will students combating environmental pollution unite to form a front equal to the strength of those fighting racism or sexism?

"If these so-called 'aware' students aren't going to be concerned, no one else is and we'll be heading in deep, dark trouble. If no one is around, their movements aren't going to mean a thing," Lichtman said.

Asked about the plans that the project has for the future, Lichtman replied, "Within the next two years, its goal should be self-sufficiency...Basically, we have to expand and increase our volume of paper because that will allow us to break even. I'd like to see a more organized project, with the hope that in the future, recycling projects can expand throughout the Valley area."

★ Evaluation

"Accreditation isn't really questioned," said Green.

The association's final report, she said, "does not just sit on a shelf. It will give recommendations for future changes."

"The building of the UMass library was a result of the last evaluation," Green said. "The library was needed, but not a priority when it came to funding. It was made possible when the evaluations brought out the urgent need for a library."

The Student Affairs committee will begin its self-evaluation with a meeting of the Resource Network tomorrow in Campus Center 804, with representatives from the professional staff of those programs in the network.

A meeting next Wednesday at 4 p.m. in Herter 301 for all commuting students is also planned for those living off campus.

"The Student Affairs task force is looking for student volunteers to help with the writing and critiquing process of the self-study," said Benedict. "We have no student volunteers as of yet."

The Office of Student Affairs comprises various students services, including Health Services, Public Safety, financial aid and admissions.

The NEASC should release its final report well before the end of the summer, Provost Puryear said.

The NEASC is the regional association for schools and colleges, and has an equivalent in other regions throughout the country.

Results of the University self-evaluation will probably be discussed next January, in the "micro-college" sponsored by the UMass Resource Network, according to Green. The state of the University in five years is a likely topic for the annual "micro-college," she said.

Euthanasia—a possibility in this case...

karen hermann

Here I sit, surrounded by heaps of texts unread, longing for midterm week to end. It's two o'clock in the morning and I haven't had a meal in three days. I've finally completed the first page of a ten-page essay that's due at eight o'clock. That allows me six whole hours to finish, if I forgo another night's sleep.

"Courage, courage," I mutter through my teeth. "You're too young to die." As my head slumps down upon my overworked Smith-Corona and my eyes begin to glue shut, I reach for another Coke and pull myself upright. It's going to be a lo-oo-ong morning.

A glimmer of hope suddenly illuminates my enfeebled brain. Perhaps that paper isn't due until Wednesday! I eagerly grope for the wall calendar, but find no consolation. The entire room is swimming in a haze of hideous ciphers, runes, codes and exotic alphabets. But I don't know any foreign languages. I haven't studied anything all semester. This must be a hallucination — or maybe a delusion of knowledge.

"Keep your sanity," I groan, leafing through my sheaf of C-minus quizzes accumulated throughout the torturous weeks of Fall, 1977. Glorious portraits of Karen E. Hermann, the future Nobel prize-winning physicist, the 1996 presidential candidate, crumble to dust before my bloodshot eyes. To hell with that ten-page essay! What I need right now is sleep, or perhaps more appropriately, euthanasia.

Could it be that I am flunking out of ZooMass? Visions of my brilliant youth (alas, long gone) haunt me, just as memories of sumptuous dinners torment the starving prisoner of war.

I breezed through twelve years of school with straight A-pluses and gold stars in conduct. My SAT scores were the first ever recorded to soar above 800 in both the mathematical and verbal sections. In my senior year I received the Unanimous Teachers' Pet Medallion, and was included in Who's Who Among Teenage Limerick Writers. I was a Brain par excellence.

Do not think, however, that I was a stuffy egghead. I was as well-rounded as a thirty-dollar basketball. I was a Campfire Girl for ten years, and served as a junior counselor at Camp Bluebird during summer vacation. I was chairman of the organizing committee for the junior and senior proms. Furthermore, I worked behind the scenes of every play shown at Wacahoo Regional High School during the years 1970-1974.

My high school teachers were very lenient with homework assignments, since they were aware of my exceedingly heavy schedule. Above all, they were eager to encourage a future leader, to "bring out the potential genius of a future Kennedy or Gandhi," as the educational journals phrased it. At least those good ole teachers didn't stifle my native potential for having fun.

UMass, on the other hand, is not such an easy place to breeze through. These mean, uppity professors just don't seem to understand that I have Pep Club meetings every evening which are more important than Latin translations and chemical formulae. Doesn't the faculty care about my peer relationships and social development?

Last week the dean called me in to discuss my cumulative average (2.09 and sinking fast). He was concerned that I wasn't realizing my "demonstrated potential." I told him that nobody seemed to care about my potential anymore.

"Why don't they give grades for Drama Club participation, huh? Like, they won't let me be me. Term papers are a drag, man."

The dean gave me an icy stare and started shuffling papers on his desk. I left the office quickly, full of consternation.

Midterm Hell will finish me. My body has never before had to endure three days without food or sleep. I write this memoir as a warning to foolish freshmen who came to ZooMass anticipating a life of wild parties and effortless A's. Right now, ascending the twenty-sixth flight of stairs in the UMass library and preparing to take the final plunge, I murmur a prayer for the 24,999 souls who will remain, and hope that their fate may be brighter than mine.

Student towing is a good thing

To the Editor:

The committee against Amherst Towing was formed to benefit the student body. It seems that many students are naive to this fact. A student towing service would provide safer and less expensive towing. Amherst Towing apprehends about 4000 cars a year from our campus. Why should we pay them to carelessly tow our cars, when we could be paying our own student system to tow? The answer is not to stop towing, because that is not feasible. The answer is to support the student towing service when it comes up before the student senate Wednesday, November 2. If a sufficient loan is appropriated by the student senate, this towing service can become a reality rather than a belated dream. I therefore urge all concerned students to support this cause for your own benefit. If the funds are not appropriated it will be questionable whose side the student senate is really on; the students, or the people that make a profit off our misfortune.

Language change a possibility

To the Editor:

It is a rare moment when a Collegian reader can enliven and enlighten a topic discussed by two distantly related editorial page comments. Fifi Ball's lead column of Friday, September 30, and Nancy Eddy's letter of Thursday, October 11, provide that opportunity.

Fifi Ball pleads with us to be more conscious of the emotional consequences of language [as it refers to women and men]. She points out that language is a major determinant of how we think and constrains the concepts we are able to grasp.

More specifically, Nancy Eddy takes to task a Collegian artist who, under the influence of one such misconception, portrayed the Amherst Board of Selectmen [SelectPEOPLE?] as five males. In reality the Board is, and has since 1975 been, composed of three men and women [2-3 of all the women ever to serve on the Amherst Board of SelectPEOPLE]. Ms. Eddy has herself served on that Board since 19[illegible]

In their book Words and Women [Anchor Books, 1977, $2.50 in paperback] Casey Clark and Kate Swift speak directly to the infirmities in our language by providing us with a readable, comprehensive study of the sexist constraints of the English language, a history of its development for the purpose of continuing the subjugation of women, and a vision of language able to reflect the equalities between women and men I hope we can achieve. Words and Women is also a statement, eloquent in its restraint, of the author's pain and anger at finding themselves and other women bound in their very being by the perversion of our distinct method of communication, language.

For perhaps three years progressive members of Amherst's legislative body, our Representative Town Meeting, have attempted to change the language which misdesignates members of its governing body, which we prefer to call the Amherst Board of SelectPEOPLE. We have not been successful. At one point during the debate at the May 1976 Annual Town Meeting, Ms. Eddy herself proclaimed that she was proud to be the ChairMAN of the Board of SelectMEN. It is a tribute both to Ms. Eddy and to the persuasiveness of the Miller and Swift volume that no such speech was made this May.

Change is possible and desirable in language and in many other areas. The realities of our lives and of Amherst have changed. Every spring Amherst elects members to town government and town meeting offices [not surprisingly, Amherst's Representative Town Meeting is presently 2-3 male, almost all white, etc., despite the efforts by students and tenants in the past three years]. If you feel that government, at least at the town level, is one of the places to begin to control the changes in our lives and in Amherst, please consider taking part in the spring 1978 town elections. One way to do this is to get in touch with the many students and tenants, women and men, who are presently members of Amherst's Representative Town Meeting, or with members of town government, such as Nancy Eddy.

Language studies advocated

To the Editor:

On August first, 1975, in Helsinki, Finland, the leaders of 35 nations including all nations of Europe, Albania, Canada and the United States signed a one-hundred page declaration on European security, known as the Helsinki Accord.

One important agreement of the Accord is the very well known Human Rights issue. Another agreement commits the participating nations to encourage the study of foreign languages and civilizations.

In the near future, there are strong expectations that President Jimmy Carter will act to create a short term presidential commission charged with making recommendations to the President and Congress on ways to strengthen and improve language and area studies in the United States. During the past ten years, there has been a steady decline in the area of foreign studies; however, the Helsinki agreement sheds bright light on its future.

During the weekend of October 6 to 8, a group of four students representing the Five College Language Council attended the Georgetown-MLA Conference on Language in American Life in Washington D.C. This group obtained much information concerning foreign language careers which can be obtained at the placement office in Berkshire House. The Massachusetts Foreign Language Association Conference will be held this weekend, November 4 and 5, at the Sheraton-Tara Hotel overlooking route 9. All interested people are urged to attend, then listen for news concerning the formation of the Presidential commission, and write representatives and congressmen urging the formation of the commission.

An educator for president

To the Editor:

In my 25 years at this university we have not yet had an educator as president. It is time that we appoint a person who is primarily interested in education, someone who is now actively engaged in teaching and who views a university as an educational and cultural institution. We need someone who has a philosophy of education, a vision of what en education is and what it should do for an individual. And that person should be sufficiently eloquent to articulate his views and inspire students and teachers to put them into practice. We need, in short, a true educational leader.

We have not had such leadership. This campus is badly divided — between faculty and administration, between professional education and liberal arts. The university is without direction. It tries desperately to put itself on the map, with inflated graduate programs and fashionable experiments. For well-intentioned but misguided social reasons it tries to be everything to everyone. It admits students who can't do the work, it even admits students who don't have command of English. It awards degrees to students who can't speak and write English correctly. None of these and other problems is ever addressed by those in charge. Educational questions seem to play no part in their decisions.

I have never heard the president, chancellor or provost discuss such questions. Their pronouncements are limited to administrative matters and are filled with jargon. They count money and people and buildings. When educational issues are raised, as they were at a faculty meeting last spring, these are evaded or greeted with silence.

There are many good people here, students and teachers, and they deserve something better. They deserve, above all, a more humane spirit and atmosphere. Please look for a person who knows and cares about education, who is committed to academic excellence — a person who will speak to us with a clear and honest voice and bring us together in pursuit of a common, well-defined goal. Look for someone with sufficient personal stature to inspire not only all sectors of the university, but also to educate the public on the role of the university.

If such a person cannot be found, it would be better to do without a president, as is now the case at the University of Illinois. Bad leadership is worse than none.

'Homecoming Queen' is insulting

To the Editor:

I want to register particular objection to the full-page Miller Beer advertisement which ran in Friday's issue and to protest in broader terms the Collegian's acceptance of offensive ads from brewing companies. "Candi Kane — Homecoming Queen" was the latest in a series of stereotypic cartoon figures in such ads intended as humorous inducement to drink more Miller but which, in fact, reinforce demeaning and sexist images that insult readers of the Collegian. Buxom, brainless, bestrewn with frat pins, Candi is portrayed visually and in the ad copy as a classic example of woman - as - sex - object. Alleged humor cannot redeem the sexism of this ad or the affront to women at UMass whether or not they belong to sororities. Earlier ads with male figures were also stereotyped, offensive, and degraded "maleness" to the level of gross cliche.

To what end does the Collegian spread these damaging images? Higher consumption of Miller products. Alcohol abuse is a grave problem on this campus. To tally the episodes of endangering behavior, destruction of property, physical and sexual assault in a residential area and find that most involve drunkenness is to see the pernicious interplay between alcohol and violence which is modelled in many Collegian beer ads.

What standards does the paper have for refusing advertisements which are blatantly sexist and which undermine the well-being of the entire community? I think the Collegian would have the sense not to run an ad featuring, for example, a black student labelled as winner of the "Stepin Fetchit Shuffle-Alike" contest. Have you no sensitivity to sexist insult, or may we look forward to ever-funnier Miller ads featuring barbaric super-studs and gang-rape victims?

Socialism—'service to others above self'

By DREW CRANE

Taking into consideration the current intellectual climate on campus I would not be surprised if the majroity of those who read S. Sampson's Marxist point of view on campitalism, 10-28, simply accept it as the literal truth without the necessity of a critical evaluation.

Graduate students should not be rattling off a fantastic list of lies it would be too polite to call this anything but a deliberate denial of the facts for propagandistic purposes.

It is a typical stunt of a collectivist to distort the language in a fashion which makes the reader doubt himself and his perception of reality. This intellectual travesty is monstrously evil and precisely illustrative of the tactics of a collectivist mentality.

To assert that in Cuba, China, the Eastern European states and the USSR there is no inflation, unemployment, crime in the streets or beggars; cheap public housing and free medical care and education, is an incredible distortion of reality.

In every socialist (collectivist) country there is no conception of the rights of individuals. There are only the expendable members of the collective whose life is the tool of "society". It is the explicit implementation of the morality of altruism — service to others above self. Where there is no recognition of individual rights there are no property rights and no accurate means of economic calculation.

The results are rampant crime suppressed by secret police, government induced famine to "encourage" collective farming, inflation which makes ours look like a standstill and, oh yes, full employment, but at jobs without purpose and chosen for you by the dictators.

As to cheap public housing and so called free goods there is the avoided question of who pays for it? NOTHING is free; even the few zero-prized economic goods can have a cost-value is some situation. When the collectivist talks of something free or cheap he is talking of enslaving the productive to benefit the non-productive, of negating justice and the trader principle, of giving the unrewarded and unearned to those whose "need" is considered greater than than that of their "brother".

Now as to the alleged support by "any good socialist" of free debate, that is the biggest farce of all as anyone who has ever felt the vindictive wrath of a socialist at grading time can tell you. But if these socialists are as open minded as they say I can suggest a few books for their enlightenment: Socialism: An Economic and Sociological Analysis by Ludwig von Mises, Workers' Paradise Lost by Eugene Lyons, Capitalism and the Historians by F.A. Hayek ed., Capitalism: The Unknown Ideal by Ayn Rand.

One final thought: Why is it that so many thousands of people risk their lives against the machine gun toting border guards, against the barbed wire, land mines, walls and fences which keep them enslaved in their collectivist utopia, just for the chance to live like human beings? And why is it that so many come here to the freest country on earth but none leave?

The mandate for agricultural change

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of editorials dealing with some major issues in modern and alternative agriculture and UMass' role in dealing with them.

By LAURA LUDEN

It is often said that students have no real power to implement change, that the majority are either too busy or too apathetic to devote any time to issues other than school work. But one has to look only as far as the students that were instrumental in the anti-Vietnam war movement and at those who are involved in the anti-nuclear power movement to realize that not only do students have the time but also the dedication to implement change in our society.

Food and agriculture is in a state of crisis in the world, the nation and in every state in America. People have started realizing that not just the poor countries are experiencing great problems in feeding their people, but that people in the United States are starving.

Food prices are soaring, monetary returns to the farmers are dropping and our system of agriculture is heavily dependent on non-renewable sources of energy. Yet, students of agriculture are still being taught that bigger is better and that agricultural problems can be "solved" using fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides.

As the need for food increases with expanding populations and the usefulness of chemical farming decreases with the energy crisis and with genetic resistence of insects, pathogens and weeds, we are finding ourselves in an ever closing circle. It is imperative that students are taught that there are other systems of agriculture that can supply enough food to feed the people and that the United States must not go on exporting energy intensive agricultural systems to under-developed nations. The major problems causing the food crisis are that food is not being produced in a manner that replenishes the soil and the food that is being grown is not distributed fairly. Agricultural experts tend to agree that the entire world can produce enough to feed everyone and that the problems are that prime agricultural land is being used for non-food products such as coffee, tea and tobacco and that land used for food is unequally distributed.

We must realize that the potential for change exists no matter how discouraging it is to work for months and years and see no real change. Things change very slowly, especially with agriculture which is dependent on nature. It is very important that we try to overcome our cynicism and doubts about our power to implement change. We have the potential numbers to make our voices be heard. We possess as our medium economic and political power.

The ways to go about this are varied. Many people belong to food co-ops, shop at the Peoples Market and eat at Earthfoods not only for economic but for political reasons. As individual persons it seems as if our political beliefs and actions will have no effect; as a large and growing movement we will be heard.

We can work towards changes in the food industry and in the agricultural system in many ways. General education and awareness of the problems is the first step. The people of the country have the right to know that our foods and agricultural lands are being mismanaged to the benefit of international corporations. They also have the right to know that each and every person can do something, no matter how insignificant they may feel their actions are. The more people that realize there is power in groups of people, the more power these groups will have. An example of this occurred at Cornell in the early 70's. A group of students researched Cornell's role in agribusiness and uncovered some startling facts.

This was published as a report, Failing the People. The report shook up the administration so badly that the 400 or so copies were quickly bought up and no further copies were printed. Needless to say, Cornell has been more careful to be sure that their activities fall within those proscribed for a Land-grant college.

There is a student movement involved in directing our energies as a nation towards a more responsible system of agriculture, one in which our resources are used wisely and biologically. A group called the Action Center in Washington, D.C. (a nonprofit group), has been sponsoring student internships in their Responsible Agriculture program. This summer they sponsored a New England Internship program, with about 40 students from public and private colleges.

They worked with community, governmental and student organizations in such diverse places as the New Alchemy Institute in Woods Hole, Maine farms, the New England Federation of Co-ops, the Mass. Dept. of Agriculture, and here in Western Massachusetts in community action (Project Greenbean) and the Coalition for Alternative Agriculture and Self-Sufficiency.

Obviously, the state of agriculture in New England did not go through a radical change due to these peoples' work — the change that occurred however, cannot be measured by traditional methods. The summer's effort has inspired many of the interns to go on in their work and has served to educate untold numbers of people to the need for change.

The success of the internship lies in the fact that a handful of people have been able to work towards implementing change and in doing so have excited and mobilized many others to join the fight.

We as students have the right to demand that our agricultural education should present all sides of agriculture, not just the current system but innovative, non-traditional systems. The movement is not one that wants farmers to go back to "the good old days" because those days weren't so good, farmers didn't have the resources and knowledge to use science for the good of the land. The move is towards a rational use of our resources, where the small farmer can produce food, make a living from it and not use up our natural wealth. We have a responsibility to ourselves and to the future to demand that the people's money be used to research and develop new methods. We have the numbers to make our voices be heard. The status quo will not change if no one demands a change. Land-grants have a mandate to work for the people and education must include alternative methods.

If we want to see change in our lifetime and for our children we must be the ones to implement it. We cannot sit around and expect the establishment to change for us as it will always move towards what is good for its own interests.

Laura Luden is a member of the Coalition for Alternative Agriculture and Self-Sufficiency.

Mission planned to examine the sun

PASADENA, Calif. [AP] — A four-year space mission, designed to illuminate mysteries of the sun from vantage points never reached before, is being planned for the 1960s by U.S. and European scientists.

Officials of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory said yesterday that the project was planned to observe the sun from positions other than along its equatorial plane, the flat, disc-shaped imaginary line known as the ecliptic that extends from the sun through the orbits of the planets.

It is as if the sun were at the center of a giant phonograph record and the planets spun around in orbits arranged like the bands of individual songs. The aim of the proposed misssion could be compared to leaving the record's surface to view it from above and below.

The plan calls for the use of twin spacecraft, one to be built by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the other by the 10-nation European Space Agency.

The Space Shuttle, a reusable spaceplane now being developed for short space flights, would carry the satellites out of the Earth's gravitational pull and launch them toward Jupiter, the largest planet in the solar system. Jupiter's gravitational pull would be used as a slingshot-like booster to position the spacecraft.

Officials said it would be impossible, by today's standards, to generate a rocket blast tremendous enough to place the satellites in position without using Jupiter's pull as a booster.

The satellites would simultaneously observe the sun's northern and southern hemispheres and take scientific readings of its radiation, magnetic field, outer atmosphere and surface features at all latitudes.

The flights would also take the satellites over the sun's poles.

"All the observations of the sun we've made are based on being in a single plane; we don't see what comes out of the sun at its poles," said Norman Haynes, manager of spacecraft programs at JPL.

The team of scientists which proposed the project in a JPL report said the flow of energy from the sun is of tremendous interest because of its effects on the climate and weather of the Earth.

Their report also stressed the need to observe the sun's convection layer. "Energy is broughh to the surface of the sun, to be radiated into space, by fluid motions in the outer layer of the sun, the convection layer," it said.

"Our climate, and thus life on Earth are dependent on the physics of the convection layer, and we are in need of understanding it. Indeed, there is tantalizing evidence that in the historical past the fluid motions in the convection layer changed, with resulting climate changes on Earth."

Postal Service highly commended

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Postmaster General Benjamin Bailar said yesterday no public agency has accomplished as much over the past sixy years as the Postal Service.

"Over the last six years the Postal Service has a tangible record of progress in providing the American people with good mail service and particularly over the last two years progress has been made in providing a servce that is efficient and adaptable to an uncertain future," he said.

Speaking to a regional meeting of the National Postal Forum, Bailar said the Postal Service deficit has been cut in half this fiscal year; for a 30-day period ending in early October, 96 per cent of eligible first class mail was delivered overnight and service standards for two-day and three-day delivery were met 92 per cent of the time; and last year 63 per cent of letter mail was handled mechanically, compared with 25 per cent in 1971.

John Marino submits resignation

BOSTON [UPI] — Massachusetts Commerce Commissioner John J. Marino yesterday submitted his resignation from the Dukakis administration in order to prepare for a possible challenge to Rep. Margaret Heckler, R-Mass.

Marino said he was giving up the $28,500 a year job he has had since March 1975 to "determine the feasibility" of entering the Democratic primary against Mrs. Heckler, now in her sixth term in Congress. Both are Wellesley residents.

Marino's resignation is effective Nov. 15.

Meanwhile, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis later yesterday announced selection of Division of Employment Security Director John Crosier as Marino's replacement. Crosier, who earns $32,600 as DES director, will take a pay cut to accept his promotion.

Carter's neutrality hurts negotiations

KANSAS CITY, Mo. [UPI] — President Carter's Middle East policy has dulled U.S. effectiveness in negotiating a peace settlement, according to former Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Rabin, who was in Kansas City this past weekend to speak with Jewish leaders, did not directly criticize Carter's policy, but said the president's less-than-neutral stand has hurt negotiations.

"In the past the United States succeeded in bringing about agreements between the Arab nations and the Israelis when it did not take a position," Rabin said at a news conference. "Once the party that goes between takes a position, it loses its effectiveness as serving as a go-between."

Court supports drunken-driving laws

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court yesterday supported states with tough drunken-driving laws, dealt a blow to news reporters seeking to protect confidential sources, and placed in jeopardy a consumers' victory over insurance companies.

Taking action in more than 200 cases, the justices also agreed to review obscenity prosecutions in California and an Alaska law requiring job preferences for state residents in non-public jobs.

The court gave what amounts to an endorsement of state laws that suspend the driver's licenses of motorists who refuse to take a chemical or breath analysis test after being stopped for alleged drunken driving — even when the motorist receives no pre-suspension hearing.

The justices threw out a lower court's decision striking down a Massachusetts law calling for a 90-day license suspension for test refusals on grounds that it denies motorists their due-process rights.

They told a three-judge court in Boston to restudy the case in light of a Supreme Court decision last May which upheld an Illinois law authorizing revocation or suspension of a driver's license without preliminary hearings.

Legionnaires disease reported

[UPI] — Another case of Legionnaires' disease in Vermont was reported yesterday bringing the total of confirmed cases in the state to 26 in the past three months. Connecticut also reported its first confirmed case yesterday.

Vermont State Health Department spokeswoman Dorothy Griffith said the national Center for Disease Control in Atlanta determined the latest case involved a person who died of a cause other than Legionnaires' disease.

Since the current outbreak began in July there have been 46 confirmed and highly probable cases of the pneumonia-like illness in Vermont.

Of that total, 16 deaths — including 14 confirmed and two highly probable cases — have been linked to the disease.

In Connecticut, health officials yesterday announced their first confirmed case — an unidentified 33-year-old Newtown man who died in August.

The victim, whose identity was withheld, was admitted to Danbury Hospital in early August with severe pneumonia and died three days later, Milton Guyer, chief of Public Health Education of the Department of Health, said yesterday.

He said a sample of the dead man's lung tissue was sent to the National Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, which confirmed the cause of death yesterday.

He said there is no evidence the disease is communicable from person-to-person and "can occur in isolated cases without causing epidemics."

There have been no reports of additional cases associated with the disease in the Danbury area or elsewhere in Connecticut, he said.

Connecticut health officials have sent tissue samples from 15 persons with respiratory problems for testing at the federal facility in Atlanta, he said.

★ Rape product of socialization in the United States

curfew on women in this country. Whenever a woman walks alone at night, whenever she enters a bar or movie theatre, whenever she hitchhikes, she is aware that she is violating well-established rules of conduct and, as a result, that she faces the possibility of rape." (Medea and Thompson, Against Rape, Noonday, 1974).

The attitude that women who choose to behave like full human beings are "asking for it" is one of the most blatant examples of "blaming the victim". For too long, rape has been considered a "woman's problem." Women aren't rapists... men are. Rape is a "men's problem."

Every time a man laughs uncritically at a joke that degrades women or asks his buddy if he's "had any lately" he is condoning rape. Men's acceptance of their own and each others' sexist attitudes allows rape to continue flourishing in this country.

There is no manner in which a woman can act that protects her from rape. Rapists have said of their victims that they were "asking for it" and that they "acted too good for it." Whatever a woman's manner, rapists (and the courts) will find justification for what happened to her.

Men feel safe sexually harasssng and raping women because they know the chances are good they can get away with it. They expect women to passively submit to humiliation and abuse, because that's exactly what women have been socialized to do.

It is no coincidence that rape is reaching epidemic proportions as the feminist movement gains momentum. Men are reacting strongly to women's attempts to liberate themselves. The increased number of rapes is a symptom of that reaction.

As Medea and Thompson wrote in "Against Rape", "Rape is not a price we must pay for our freedom for our freedom any more than lynching is the price blacks have to pay for theirs." As long as America remains a place where freedom must be bought by women, rape, the "All-American crime", will continue.

Automobile exhaust may increase risk of cancer

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Studies in a small Swiss town suggest people who live near highways may face an increased cancer risk from chemicals in automobile exhaust, an American and two Swiss scientists reported yesterday.

Their conclusion was based on a population study in Netstal, Switzerland, a mountain town of about 3,000 inhabitants, and on a soil analysis.

An earlier report, published in 1972, showed death from all kinds of cancer was nine times as frequent for residents near the highway between 1958 and 1970 compared to cancer deaths for residents in a traffic-free part of town. The report said cancer mortality was higher for all groups of residents near the highway, which was traveled by 4,000 to 5,000 vehicles a day.

In an attempt to search for cancer-causing agents in the environment near the highway, the scientists analyzed soils there and in other parts of the town and found much higher levels of a class of compounds called polycyclic hydrocarbons in the near-highway soil.

Many polycyclic hydrocarbons are known to be capable of causing cancer in animals and the compounds are known to be produced in internal combustion engines.

The report, published in the November issue of the American Chemical Society journal, Environmental Science and Technology, was written by the late Dr. Max Blumer of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, Dr. Walter Blumer of Nestal, Switzerland and Theodore Reich of the University of Zurich.

The scientists found 85 to 300 milligrams of the polycyclic hydrocarbon compounds per kilogram of soil near the highway. An outlying section of town with light traffic had 21 mg of the compounds. A nearby Alpine meadow had levels of 4 mg.

The chemical nature of the compounds showed they were not products of the asphalt used on the road, nor of lubricants.

Hydrocarbon compounds found in the soot from a chimney of a house heated by fuel oil were of a very different nature.

"The demonstrated correlation between highway traffic and the production of carcinogens strengthens indirectly also the correlation between highway traffic and the observed mortality from cancer," the report said.

John Sirica ends career as an active federal judge

[AP] — After 20 years on the bench, five of them on Watergate, John J. Sirica ended his career as an active federal judge yesterday by listening to lawyers in a $168 damage suit.

"I think it's time to reduce my activities," said the judge who is 73 and looks 60. "Thirty years as a lawyer and 20 as a judge is a long time."

The key word was "reduce." Sirica isn't retiring. He'll return to the same courtroom today at the same pay — but as a senior judge permitted to choose cases that interest him, rather than have them assigned at random. Sirica will bypass criminal matters and concentrate on civil cases.

"I've been thinking about it for some time," he said. "I finally made up my mind I'd take senior status when Watergate was wound up."

The judge's Watergate involvement ended earlier in the month when he reduced the coverup sentences of H.R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and John N. Mitchell. Not long after, he notified President Carter he wanted to step down as an active judge.

His plans are not firm, but Sirica is expected to write a book that will be partly autobiographical and mostly Watergate.

His robe off, tie loosened — his paneled office nearly devoid of Watergate mementoes — Sirica talked a little about a judicial life that began with his nomination in 1957 by then-President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Ironically, he considers none of the Watergate matters as his most difficult case, but rather a truck company antitrust suit against the railroads.

Sirica was chief of the 15-judge U.S. District Court here when the Watergate break-in occurred June 17, 1972. As chief judge, it was his duty to assign protracted or highly publicized cases to a judge.

"When I set the case of the seven Watergate burglars to be tried by myself," Sirica said, "I did not do it without giving the matter considerable thought. I talked with three colleagues, district judges, and one judge on the appeals court. The consensus was I should take the case."

Sirica said one factor in his taking the case was that his reputation as a staunch Republican would help make his decision appear above reproach.

Supreme Court disbars Mitchell and Ehrlichman

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday disbarred former Attorney General John Mitchell and former White House aide John Ehrlichman because of their convictions in the Watergate coverup case.

In such matters, the justices act on the basis of lower-court disbarment orders, which are routinely furnished the high court. Mitchell has been disbarred in New York state and in the District of Columbia and Ehrlichman in California.

The two were suspended by the Supreme Court in 1975 but final disbarment action was delayed until their appeals were concluded.

Ehrlichman, who has been serving time in the federal prison at Safford, Ariz., is eligible for parole. He has been interviewed by two government examiners and his case will be considered by the Parole Commission when it meets in mid-November.

On Oct. 14, federal district Judge John Sirica reduced Ehrlichman's original sentence of 2½ to 8 years to at least one year but no more than four. Then U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell reduced to 3½ years Ehrlichman's sentence of from 20 months to 5 years in the "White House plumbers" case.

Gesell said Ehrlichman could be released whenever the commission agrees.

The second case involved the 1971 break-in at the Beverly Hills, Calif., office of psychiatrist Lewis Fielding, who had been treating Daniel Ellsberg, the central figure in disclosure of the Pentagon Papers.

Mitchell, who has been serving at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Ala., received the same treatment from Sirica as did former Richard Nixon aide H. R. Haldeman. Both will be eligible for parole in June, 1978.

Haldeman is at the Lompoc, Calif., open prison.

Ehrlichman, at his own request, started his sentence earlier than the other two men.

Mitchell's attorneys have applied for executive clemency on grounds he is in severe pain from a hip ailment and needs surgery.

Muskie admitted to hospital

[UPI] — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, was admitted to Bethesda Naval Hospital yesterday for treatment of severe back strain, his Washington office announced.

A Muskie spokesman said the senator was undergoing tests and was expected to remain in the hospital "for a day or two." He said Muskie's condition was "painful but not serious."

The senator has been suffering occasional back pain for the past year and aggravated the condition in July while working in his garden.

Funds for Arts

Applications are now being accepted by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities Local Project Program for funding for community arts and humanities projects.

Local Projects applications are accepted only from non-profit community organizations. They are designed to be flexible, provide small amounts of money quickly, and to support programs designed in response to local needs.

"This program has been created to encourage community-based arts and humanities activities and to assist community organizations in providing the highest quality artistic services. It is intended for organizations such as arts councils, community theatre, dance or music groups, historical societies, city or town art centers or commissions, libraries and local artists' guilds," says state Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst.

Those wishing to apply should send a letter describing their organization and the project to the Council on Arts and Humanities, One Ashburton Place, Boston, MA 02108. The letter should include the following:

—name and address of the organization

—name of the director of the organization

—name and telephone number of the person in charge of the project

—brief description of the organizations activities

—full description of the project for which funding is being sought

—brief description of any projects already done which demonstrate an ability to complete this project successfully

—description of community support for the organization

Applications will be accepted until May 1, 1978. The council will review applications and notification will be made within six weeks of receipt of a complete application letter. Contact Mia Goldman at the council, (617) 727-3668, for further information.

New Mexico needs interns

Applications for acceptance into the New Mexico Cross-Cultural Educational Program (NMCCEP) will be accepted up until next week, according to its director.

UMass' only cross-cultural program is open to all UMass students interested in a unique teaching experience in one of six pueblos in northern New Mexico. Applicants need not be Education majors.

Emma M. Cappelluzzo, program director, said the program offers the student a chance to work and live with the Native American and to try to understand the Indian struggle.

NMCCEP is a three-semester program. Those accepted this semester will enter into the pre-practicum level next semester, designed to update the student on current Indian issues and prepare them for teaching. After returning from the intern level in New Mexico, students will advise pre-practicum students to fulfill their post-practicum requirements.

Interested students should set up an interview with Dianne Mancus, program assistant, at 545-1565 or drop by 262 Hills South. Interviews will be conducted no later than next week.

Campus fire drill results

Evacuation during a fire alarm is important in that occupants of the building aren't exposed to a growing fire from within, as well as the poisonous smoke and toxic fumes that are produced by a fire.

Unfortunately, 12,000 people in this country are killed every year, and hundreds of thousands maimed for life, because many of them ignored warnings of fire. Don't throw away your future, when the alarm sounds, evacuate.

Among this semester's leaders in the recent evacuation drills on campus was Knowlton, which set a campus record by evacuating in one minute. John Quincy Adams Tower also set a high-rise record of five minutes.

Nevertheless, there were some problems during the drills. First, more than 100 fire extinguishers were reported empty, and a dozen missing. All the extinguishers were in working order before the semester began.

Secondly, many fire doors were open. A fire door could be the difference between life and death for dorm residents if a fire were to begin late at night. If the door is open, smoke and heat will travel throughout the corridor, up stairs and expose everyone to its lethal potency. Fire doors are installed per order of the Commonwealth to reduce your likelihood of being suffocated or burned to death in a fire. Keep fire doors closed.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31 - Born today, you have as your deepest interest the welfare of other people. You will always be involved in those aspects of life which mirror culture, through which, you believe, people best serve themselves. Music, literature, poetry, and painting, are most valued by you. You may not be particularly talented in any of the arts, but you will be a staunch supporter of anyone who is; and if possible, will surely lend material aid to any struggling artist who deserves your help.

You have a specific gift for reaching the young. You would make an excellent teacher. Your knowledge of your subject might not be as broad as another's, but your insight, enthusiasm, and enterprise should more than make up for it.

Though not by nature an explorer, you are bored with the ordinary. You appreciate originality and hope for experiences that are memorable rather than mundane. You do not, however, feel that you have to place yourself or your work in danger in order to enjoy life.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.22) - Your interest in another's whereabouts could be misconstrued. At least appear to be minding your own affairs.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Your mental and emotional moods may make it difficult to distinguish between what you like and what you dislike.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - A mental strain early in the day may cause you to be overly concerned with things as they are. Try to understand events.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - Know where you are in the scheme of things at work. Ask questions of higher-ups.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - Diconcerting and unexpected questions may arise. Don't be surprised to find followers falling away.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - A variety of objects makes your labor intense but, perhaps, a bit misplaced. Confusion brings you into the realm of error.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - Your intuition about future events gives you the edge today.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - Your own judgment on a business matter will take you farther than anyone else's. Reality looms larger than fancy for a change.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Your good memory serves you well this morning. Afternoon hours may not prove as rewarding as they have been. Go slowly.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Don't neglect light exercise even if you don't feel like it. Redirect energies toward a meeting with others.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) - - Good food, drink, and company make a memorable day. Take advantage of your own good fortune.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Avoid moodiness, your own or another's. Overlook a thoughtless word early in the morning.

Polo team wins two

The UMass men's water polo team traveled south to New Haven this past weekend to participate in the third Annual Yale Invitational Water Polo Tournament. The Minutemen came back to Amherst with two wins and one loss, defeating Harvard and Georgia Southern while losing to Southern Connecticut.

In the opening game of the tournament, UMass was defeated by Southern Connecticut 18-6. Southern Conn came out swimming strongly, built up an early lead, and never slowed down. UMass was unable to get going from the opening whistle on. Russ Yarworth led the UMass scoring with two goals and an assist followed by single goal scorers Rick Mansfield, Bill Tharion, and Stew Carlisle.

UMass came back to defeat the Harvard 11-8 in the second game. The Minutemen showed signs of their potential with smart heads-up play by everyone on the squad. Tied 5-5 at halftime, UMass player Chris Lomas blocked two threatening shots on defense and netted two goals offensively, sparking his team to go on and eventually win. Scoring for UMass were Lomas, Yarworth, and Mansfield with two goals each; and Steve Ladder, George Collias, and Bob Deconic with single goals each.

In the final match of the weekend for the Minutemen, UMass defeated Georgia Southern University by a score of 19-6. UMass played its best game of the year as a result of a total team effort.

The UMass offense set picks freeing men for open shots against the helpless Georgia Southern goaltender. At the other end the UMass defense blocked shots, stole balls, and totally frustrated the Georgia Southern forwards who then took it out on the referees, resulting in the ejection of three Georgia Southern players.

UMass continued its barrage against Georgia Southern resulting in a season high of 19 goals. Mansfield and Yarworth led the UMass scorers with six goals each, followed by Tom McGinn with three goals, Lomas with two goals, and Jim McIver with two goals. The jubilant Minutemen returned home to Amherst with two impressive wins, due in large part to the volunteer coaching of graduate Bob Corb.

Tomorrow night the poloists travel to New Hampshire to take on the University of New Hampshire and Exeter Academy. This weekend UMass will face Harvard and the number one team in New England-Brown University.

Women's soccer tripped; booters 3rd in tourney

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's soccer team's undefeated streak came to an end last Saturday when the booters finished third on the first Tufts Women's Soccer Tournament.

The team defeated Mount Holyoke 4-0 before losing to Radcliffe 2-1 and the host team by a 2-0 count.

UMass dominated the game with Mount Holyoke, beating the Lyons for the third time in as many games. It was also the third straight shutout, as the first two games were 6-0 wins.

Elaine Contant, Laurie Mickles, Jennie Donte and Kelly Tuller each had single goals for the 7-2 Minutewomen.

The UMass scoring machine went cold in the other two tourney games, however, as a Contant goal in the Radcliffe game was the only goal the team could push through.

Radcliffe scored its game-winning goal on a questionable non-call of an offsides. Tuller described the referees as "not too good" in any of the tournament games.

"It was a close game," she said. "We were getting our shots, but they just weren't going in."

Radcliffe scored a goal in each half to advance to the final round against the Jumbos of Tufts.

"The Radcliffe goals were on good shots," said Tuller "(goalie) Diane Buckhout did a good job, but there was no way she was going to stop them."

The booters next game will be Friday when they host the Chiefs of Springfield College at 3:30 p.m. on the soccer pitch across from Boyden Gymnasium.

Sports in Brief

Cheevers sidelined

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins learned yesterday that goalie Gerry Cheevers will be sidelined for two to four weeks with a strained knee ligament.

Cheevers, 36, suffered the injury to his right knee Saturday in the second period of the Bruins 5-3 win at Pittsburgh. Cheevers had X-rays taken Monday at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Coach Don Cherry said Ron Grahame will play the entire game Thursday night when the Bruins host Buffalo in their first home game in 18 days.

Cheevers, Grahame and Gilles Gilbert had shared goaltending duties over the first nine games of the season.

Jackson in court

NEW YORK [UPI] — Reggie Jackson, the New York Yankee outfielder who was the most valuable player in the recent World Series, has another command appearance today.

Jackson, the toast of New York after hitting a record three consecutive homers in the clinching Series game against Los Angeles, is scheduled to appear in Manhattan Criminal Court to answer charges of criminal harassment.

Chris Howe, 14, of the Bronx, N.Y., made the charges against Jackson following the All-Star game at Yankee Stadium in July. He alleged that Jackson chased him, threw him to the ground and kicked him repeatedly near the parking lot across from the stadium.

The hearing is scheduled for 10 a.m. EST.

Chiefs ax Wiggin

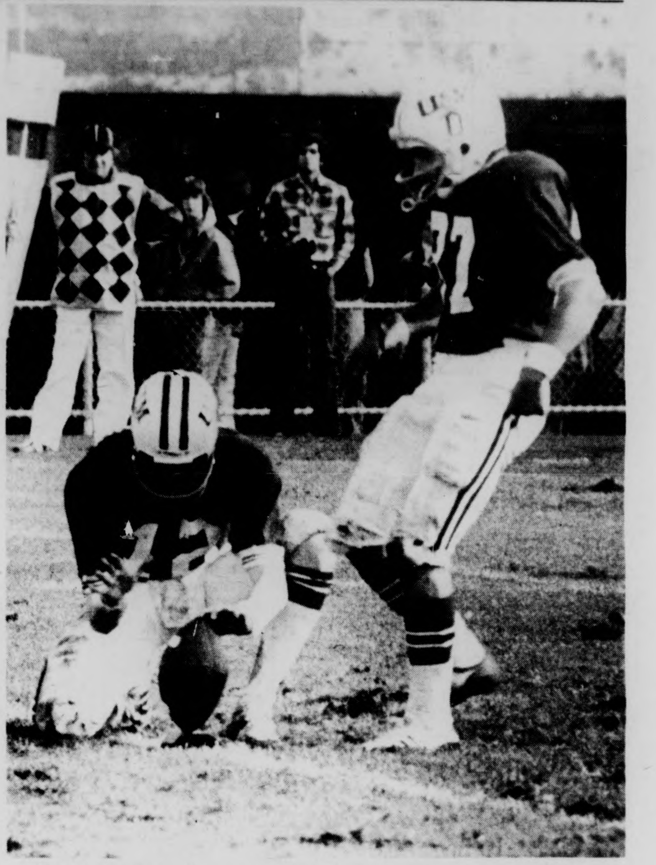
KANSAS CITY, Mo. [UPI] — The Kansas City Chiefs decided yesterday head coach Paul Wiggin was no longer "a positive force" in the bid to reconstruct the team to its previous Super Bowl heights and relieved him of the final 2½ years of his three-year contract.

The firing came one day after an embarrassing 44-7 loss Sunday to the Cleveland Browns, with whom Wiggin played 11 years as a defensive end and earned a number of Pro Bowl selections. It was the sixth loss in seven games for the Chiefs this season.

"Paul Wiggin gave us credibility," said Chiefs board chairman Lamar Hunt. "He came to us in a very difficult period and helped us through it. But we felt he was no longer a positive force. We are dedicated to seeing the Chiefs competitive with the best in Pro football and we felt we were no longer heading in that direction."

Hunt named Kansas City defensive backfield coach Tom Bettis to replace Wiggin on an interim basis with his performance to be evaluated at the end of the year to determine if he should be given the job full-time.



UMass kicker Dave Croasdale booted this field goal in the Minutemen's 10-0 victory over UConn. Croasdale and the rest of the Minutemen will take on Holy Cross in their last home game of the year on Saturday while in a first place tie with New Hampshire, who was upset by Rhode Island 21-20 on Saturday. ## At what price pitching?

Wanted: one or more pitchers. If none are available, one or more arms will do, preferably left ones.

Qualifications: Applicant must be able to consistently win ball games while pitching half of his games in the shadow of a big green pitcher-eater. Applicants should also be able to continue pitching well despite outside interference from his manager and pitching coach, which may take the shape of pitching him with three days rest for three weeks and then not pitching him at all for two weeks. It might also help the applicant to be unable to read Boston newspapers.

Fringe benefits: Excellent defense behind you that only makes errors at critical times and the most powerful offense in the American League. The fans are great too.

It's pretty much common knowledge in the New England area that the Boston Red Sox need pitching, or at least that's what everyone keeps telling us. The $64 question, then, is where do we find it? Where does one look for a pitcher whose arm is so supple and whose stuff is so great that even the concerted efforts of Don Zimmer and Al Jackson can't spoil him? And then, if and when we do find this Herculean hurler, where will the new nickel-and-dime owners of the franchise come up with the money to pay him?

Before we go rushing off to look for novel mediocrity instead of the old stuff, let's take a quick look at what we've got. Aging veterans Rick Wise and Fergie Jenkins seem to have no part in the Sox' 1978 plans. Don Zimmer says Luis Tiant will be back, but will he be the El Tiante of '76 or '77? We also have Reggie Cleveland and Bill Lee, both of whom have excellent stuff and can be effective in tiny Fenway. Unfortunately, Messrs. Zimmer and Jackson saw it fit in this past season to send these two through a revolving door between the rotation and the bullpen all year, thus curbing their effectiveness. The staff's strong points, if there are any, lie in the remaining quintet of pitchers. Youngsters Don Aase, Mike Paxton and Bob Stanley all impressed in their rookie seasons, and figure heavily in the future of this ballclub. And, in the bullpen, the Sox have the much-loved, much-hated Bill Campbell and the potentially great Jim Willoughby.

There are pitchers who will be available on the free agent marketplace this year, but very few, if any, could help the Sox. Relievers Rawly Eastwick and Rick Goasage are available, but they would only get in the way of "Soup" and "Willow." Minnesota lefty Tom Burgmeier might help out in the pen, but he is aging and questionable.

A lot of talk has been circulating that Mike Torrez of the world champion Yankees (boy, that's hard to say) would like to play for Boston, but I for one don't think he would help that much. What the Sox need is a stopper, and Torrez, contrary to popular belief and Howard Cosell, is not one. Neither are any of the other free agents, whom the Red Sox may wind up paying too much for anyway.

What the Sox should look for is a trade, and a big one. Wise and Jenkins could certainly help some team, but who wants their combined $350,000 annual salary? Dwight Evans is another possibility, but with two bad knees, who will take a chance? People like Vida Blue, Jon Matlack and Bert Blyleven are available if the Sox will part with some bats, and I don't mean Tommy Helms and Bernie Carbo. The Mets would love to have Butch Hobson playing third for them, but so would the Sox. What team wouldn't love the presence of a George Scott in their line-up? Or the fine all-around potential of a Fred Lynn? Or a young pitcher with the future of a Mike Paxton? The Sox have it available.

Red Sox fans have to face the inevitable. If we expect to have any kind of pitching next year, talented people will have to leave, and who has more young talent in the American League than the Sox? A pitching staff built around say, a Blue or Matlack, with Aase, Lee, Cleveland, Paxton and Tiant for starters and Stanley, Willoughby and the inimitable Mr. Campbell in the pen wouldn't be bad at all. In fact, it just might be enough.

Koutsoukos stars

Blue chip booter

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

This year's edition of the UMass soccer team has, on its roster, an exciting freshman named Tasso Koutsoukos who has already notched nine goals and one assist, helping the Minutemen to a 7-4 record thus far. Those nine goals are one less than the ten goals the Minutemen have given up to the opposition so far this season.

Who is he and where does he come from?

Tasso Koutsoukos comes to UMass from Montreal as a result of a recruitment effort by Minuteman coach Russ Kidd. Kidd first heard of the 5' 10", 180 lb. Canadian last winter when he began his efforts to obtain him.

"I think he was a hell of a catch," said Kidd. "He's really filled out our team and has solved a lot of problems for us."

Three years after his parents moved to Canada from Greece, Koutsoukos was born on April 14, 1959 in Montreal, Quebec. He began playing soccer at the age of seven and played organized soccer for the first time at 14 as a member of the Quebec Midget team. He was the youngest player ever to make that team in the 16 and under age group.

While he was a member, that Quebec Midget team played in the Eastern Canadian finals and lost to Ontario by one goal.

According to Koutsoukos, his interest in soccer stems from when he used to go and watch soccer games with his father. Although his father didn't play soccer, his interest started Tasso in his soccer career.

The 18 year old Koutsoukos attended Outremont High School in Montreal where he started playing soccer during his second year. He says, though, that more emphasis is placed on the summer soccer leagues in Canada.

At age 15, Koutsoukos began playing in the Quebec Senior league which consisted of players older than himself. He played there for two years before trying out for the 21 and under Quebec Select team.

Making that team as a starter and playing for them is where Koutsoukos gained most of his notoriety. Last year the Quebec Selects, with Koutsoukos, played in the Canada Games, held once every four years. They fared extremely well in those games but lost to British Columbia by one goal in the finals. But, Koutsoukos was named the MVP of the Games and as a direct result, was invited to try out for the Canadian Olympic and Pan American teams. Also, he was invited to Greece to try out for a pro team there.

Instead of going to Greece and trying to make it on the professional level, he chose to attend school and wound up at UMass.

"I want to get an education while I'm playing and gaining more experience," said Koutsoukos. "If I play well here, I stand a good chance of being drafted by a pro team."

The powerful Canadian is studying Political Science here, but insists that his main objective is to play pro soccer.

"A professional player from Greece who coached my team last summer said that the right type of coaching would enable me to make it in the pros," said Koutsoukos.

Tasso speaks fluent Greek, French, and English and says that his studies here have been "pretty easy" so far. He also says that he misses the Montreal night life.

"The night life here is not as good as it is in Montreal, but I think that the girls here are more friendly," said Koutsoukos.

Tasso certainly has proven his worth so far, jumping off to a tremendous start with eight goals in the first seven games. Since then he has slacked off a little which is due, in part, to better defensive coverage by the opposition as his reputation spreads through the East.

The coach of the Westfield State soccer team summed up the sentiments of the rest of the league when he said, "that Greek kid sure amazes me," after a recent loss to UMass.

The UMass women's volleyball team takes to the NOPE court for their last home match of the year tonight as they tangle with Holy Cross and Eastern Connecticut in a tri-match beginning at six p.m. The match will also mark the last appearance of two of the Minutewomen's stronger players, seniors Heidi Dickson and Kathy Higgins, on their home court.

UMass coach Diane Thompson is very optimistic about picking up a pair of victories tonight. She said, "There's no reason that we can't beat these two teams. Its just a matter of getting our offense untracked." She also hopes that the team's succes in Saturday's quad-match (two victories and a second place finish) has put the spikers back on the winning track.

Holy Cross, 4-8 on the year under coach Terry Moran is in the midst of what Moran calls "a growing year." They lost seven seniors from their 1976 squad but have an abundance of sophomores and freshwomen with good potential. They have beaten Eastern Conn. in an earlier match.

Eastern Conn. is coached by Floretta Crabtree and they too are a young team, carrying only one junior and a single senior.

Holy Cross will take on Eastern Conn. at six p.m. UMass will sit out the first match. The locals will then take on Eastern Conn. at seven p.m. before finishing the match with Holy Cross at eight.

Re-negotiation revisited

Linemen Leon Gray and John Hannah recently returned to play for the New England Patriots.

The two walk-out football players didn't realize it, but their return would have a direct effect on my current contract dispute with my employer.

My boss might turn on me now and say, "Hey Goonan, Gray and Hannah gave in, so now you better!"

Like Hannah and Gray, I too felt I was being overworked and underpaid at the furniture factory I work at. I checked around the "league" and found out other upholsterers were being paid more than I was— and I was better!

So, a month ago, I rushed up to Mr. Ogre's office and pounded on his mahogany, gold-plated door. My agent was with me. A perfumed secretary accompanied us up the plush velvet carpet to the boss's jeweled desk.

"A Mr. Goonan and his agent to see you, sir," she nasaled.

The little guy with the big stogie looked up from his desk. As usual, his polka dot tie clashed with his striped shirt. He curled his evil lips into a derogatory half-smile.

"What do you want, scum?" he sneered.

"I want to renegotiate my contract," I replied, trying to keep my voice from quivering.

"I get a cut," my agent added.

"Ha, ha, ha," Ogre cruelly laughed.

"I've been with you now for over three years," I shouted over his mockery. "I'm no rookie!"

"Goonan, you're replaceable. I can call up a tacker any day of the week!"

"I got this team...er, I mean, this company where it is today! I'm just like Hannah and Gray. I'm the backbone of this squad!"

"Who the hell is Hannah Ann Gray? One of them Libbers?"

"They're opportunist football players. They strike anytime the Patriots have a good season."

"How many times was that?"

"Just last year. But we're getting off the track here, boss. I single-handedly led this organization to the top last year, and I want my due!"

"I get a cut," my agent added.

"what are your terms, you unloyal bum?" Ogre asked.

"Hey, boss," I snapped. "Don't give me that crap. You can call me a money-hungry, egotistical, opportunist jock, but don't call me unloyal! I love New England. I'd play...er, I mean work for nothing if it wasn't for my family."

"What about your family?"

"They like caviar, fast cars, and exclusive country clubs."

"I get a cut," my agent added.

"No dice," the boss said, pretending to be cocky.

"I don't work until I get my way," I threatened. "Furniture Gallery will eat this place alive without me."

"You'll come crawling back on you knees," he yelled as I stormed from his office, tears burning my eyes.

I turned one last time, and threw my helmet at him.

Stickers to face New Hampshire

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The New England Regional Division IA annouced yesterday that the UMass field hockey team is ranked second in its tournament, behind the University of New Hampshire. The Minutewomen's only loss thus far came from the hands of UNH when they succombed by the score of 3-0. The Northeast toruney will take place next weekend at Harvard.

The UMass stickers enter the last lap of thier season when they battle the University of Connecticut, which is ranked fourth regionally, today at NOPE. Game time is 2:30.

In a recent contest UConn defeated Yale, 2-0. Earlier in the year, UMass tied Yale, 1-1. Julie McHugh scored the lone goal. However, the Yale clash was far from UMass' best effort.

The Minutewomen hope to duplicate last year's 2-1 triumph over UConn. UMass coach Judith Davidson anticipates an excellent game from what she termed as a well-balanced, aggressive, and well-coached UConn squad.

Davidson feels today's game will be an indication of how her team will fair in the Regional tournament. The Minutewomen should be relaxed because the standings are permanent, no upcoming loss will affect the ranking, she said.

The team is healthy except for Jody Wickman, who has a bone bruise, but she is expected to play.

The UMass stickers latest contest against Smith resulted in their most explosive offensive show of the year. The maroon and white fired 41 netminder challenges. The Minutewomen's five goals dominated play with tallies from Ginger Bulman, Cheryl Meliones and Laura O'Neil.

TheUMass stickers have just three games remaining in the regular season, including a makeup game with Bridgewater State on Sunday.

Orr will skate no more

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

Hidden in the Sunday Globe's sports section was a photograph. It looked like an ordinary picture. Something you may have seen a thousand times and never given a second glance.

A young man was sitting calmly at a desk, like any other desk, in an office that resembled any other office.

Hardly newsworthy, unless the young man happens to be Bobby Orr, one of the nation's most recognizable athletes and quite probably the finest hockey player of his generation.

Commentary

The sad truth of the picture is the fact he is at a desk instead of on his natural element, the ice. Regrettably, the office is where he will stay, instead of touring the country from rink to rink.

For the first time in over a decade he won't be suited up to perform his miracles in the National Hockey League.

For the time being he has decided to listen to his tender knees, which have been begging for him to leave hockey the past few years. Of course leaving something that has been your love as well as your livelihood is not that easy.

Bobby still hesitates to use the word retired while describing his present status. "Retired" implies forever, which he refuses to believe is possible. Hockey has been everything for him.

At 29 his heart is still willing but his legs are not as cooperative. In the past he has suffered through operation after operation in order to return. The endless hours of therapy, the pain and uncomfort of braces and bandages have all been worth it to him.

Most people would say he is crazy — Bobby just replies "everyone has to make some sacrifices to get what they want."

His last hurrah (against the pleas of his specialist) which perhaps permanently crippled his knees, was his appearance in last year's Canada Cup.

Realizing that it might be his last hope at playing against the Soviets, he was not about to miss the opportunity that had eluded him twice before.

Though Orr was a mere shadow of his former self, he still gained the tournament's "Most Valuable Player Award."

You often hear ancient veterans of the sports scene make the inevitable comparisons of the athletes from different eras. How many times have you heard some old sage comment, "I've seen them all from Cobb to Mays and I still say there was nobody finer than Williams," or maybe "No man alive could stay in the ring with the Brown Bomber, he could teach Ali a lesson."

I have this vision of an event that will take place 20 years from now. I'm getting off the trolley at North Station to see the Boston Bruins play the champion Washington Capitals. I fight off the cobwebs and duck into the moldy Boston Garden.

"It hasn't lost that atmosphere," I say to myself.

Accompanied by a fellow aficionado of the game, we seat ourselves in our modest $25 seats. We look forward to our local heroes doing battle against the champions and their superstar, Guit Guit Gombarre.

Guit Guit is the game's greatest player. Some mention the best ever.

As the match progresses the visitors assert themselves with a 3-0 lead, Gombarre has scored two goals and is dominating the action.

A youth sitting on my side nudges me and says with awe, "He's really something isn't he?"

A wave of nostalgia comes over me as I mumble "yeh, he's good, but if you only could have seen Orr, he was the best, nobody could do it like No. 4."

"Oh yeh, I read about him," said the boy in reply. "He must have been pretty good."

I felt my blood pressure rise with his assessment that Orr was just "pretty good." I felt like saying he could skate circles around this Gombarre but I knew that wouldn't solve anything. He just couldn't understand.

Instead I spared the starstruck lad and told him, "Today's player is a different breed than the players of twenty years ago, they probably wouldn't compare."

New York Giants' running back Bob Hammon (33) leaps up and into the arms of St. Louis Cardinal defenders Tim Kearney (56) and Lee Nelson (38) as he attempts to pick up a first down in first quarter action last night. St. Louis scored twice in the first half to lead the Giants 14-0. (UPI)

Russ Smith

Thanks a lot, URI!!

Ohhh, URI beat UNH 21-20, knocking the Wildcats from the ranks of the undefeated. UMies across campus should send their regards and let the Durham campus know exactly how we feel about their heart-breaking loss.

UNH actually picked up a good weekend to lose — good from UMass' standpoint anyways.

The UMass-UNH showdown is two weekends away. If UNH had lost next weekend (vs. Springfield, me thinks) instead of this past weekend to URI they'd be 8-1 heading into 'The Game'. And having just lost, would want to take their revenge out on our Minutemen.

But by losing one weekend too soon, the Wildcats will pick on the Chiefs instead (UNH-48 Spld-2) and hopefully wear their offensive unit out so they will still be tired the following weekend when UMass heads north.

'The Game' will decide the Yankee Conference, and could get either school a post-season bowl bid. UNH will end its season with that game, while UMass will finish up with BC's Eagles, our favorite rival school (school maybe to UConn, though the true UMie hates BC while respecting UConn). UMass must dump Holy Cross this weekend also.

New Hampshire has beaten UMass the past two seasons and has won the YanCon those two years. Massachusetts last won the YanCon back in 1974, sharing the title with Maine (back when Maine had a team).

While on football, but down a level, intramurals have been going on (unnoticed) and the playoffs are in the semifinals round for men's and women's titles.

Tonight at 4:30, the Space Cadets, made up of Garber's Gorillas, will take on the Lions from MacKimmie in a brutal battle. The Cadets, led by Mickey Menna's three touchdowns, wiped out the Weasels last night, 33-0 in quarterfinal action. Meanwhile, the Lions scored a safety on the opening play, and again on their first possession on their way to a 28-0 romping of the Weeds.

In the other quarter game, Theta Chi blew out 4th World, 22-0 and will face Wasted Crew, who came from behind in the second half to drop SAE 8-3.

In women's action two games are scheduled also: the Flakes vs. Alpha Chi (8:30) and the Sows vs. the Q's (4:30). Winners in the finals Wednesday......

Plans for the intramural champs to play the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (of the NFL, supposedly) have been cancelled. Sorry, T.B.....

Meanwhile the Seattll Seahawks took it easy on O.J.'s Bills in the second half of their game, playing them even. They could afford to since the 'Hawks led at the half, 42-3.

These thoughts while in the pro ranks:

Will the Canadiens collapse now that they've lost theer first game of the season?

And look out for the streaking Northstars. They actually won two games last week (3-0 over the Bruins-ha, ha..... 7-4 over Capitals). Currently, the green and gold is only 5 pts. out of first....

At the rate the Celtics are going, they won't need an excuse come March of how they choked in February, and faded from the playoff picture. They will just point back to October and November's games.....

The Denver Broncos returned to earth from cloud nine with a little help from their friends, the Oakland Raiders....

The Dallas Cowboys could have a 4-game lead after this weekend's games. Standings should be Dallas 8-0, Washington 4-4 (lose to Colts), St. Louis 4-4 (if they won last night, and could-should lose to Vikes Sunday).

Clever quote by a supposed sports announcer: Raiders up 23-0 and attempting 1-pt. conversion; John Brodie "This is an important point-after."

And what ever happened to Gowdy's 108 win Cincinnatti Reds?

Don't fret, Tampa Bay, your day will come. Hopefully.

Gethers wants to leave Norfolk

By DAVID OIMOS
Collegian Staff

Craeman Gether's campaign to free himself from the confines of the Norfolk Prison came to the UMass Campus Center yesterday afternoon, over three years after his arrest for a crime he says he did not commit.

Gethers says he was convicted on a case built on circumstantial evidence, involving the August 1974 robbery of a Hadley MacDonald's restaurant. Gethers said the arrest made him feel like his "feet, heart and mind were lifted off the ground."

As part of a 24 hour furlough from Norfolk Prison, Gethers will travel to Boston today to speak with the Black Ecumenical Commission. He hopes it will provide further evidence for the support behind the case.

"This is an issue that involves us all", said Gethers. "It is time for us to take a relative step in having our public officials serve us for a change, and take their minds away from emotion and prestige", he added.

Gethers was sitting in a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant on Aug. 26, 1974 after getting off his job as a security person on the UMass campus. Two state policemen walked into the restaurant and arrested him, informing him that he was a suspect in the MacDonald's robbery. No attorney was allowed at first, and Gethers was not informed why he was chosen as a suspect.

Earl Brown, a UMass student and friend of Gethers, was also arrested. Both were individually tried and convicted in the case. Brown received a sentence of 3-5 years and is now back at UMass, but is on parole until 1980. For the same crime, Gethers is service an 8-12 year sentence.

Gethers says the two female MacDonald's employees lied to the police about being able to positively identify Brown and himself. He told how the two women twice thought they were sure they had seen the robber, once in a passing car and once in a supermarket. Neither of these persons turned out to be Gethers or Brown.

Gethers ran into more problems with what he termed, "the bureaucratic alliance between attorneys and judges."

The first attorney who took Gethers case, Robert Santinello, promised to give Gethers the best defense possible. Gethers said Santinello failed to get any witnesses who had been in the dorm where Gethers was working the night of the robbery. According to Gethers, Santinello told him to plead guilty to the charges. Gethers said he told Santinello he wanted another attorney and his money back. Santinello said he would return the money and would let Gethers choose his next attorney. Gethers did not get this money back and Santinello ended up picking the second attorney.

During the trial a policeman testified he saw Gethers walking in a parking lot and getting into a car. Gethers said he was not in the parking lot and did not own a car at the time. The women witnesses testified that Gethers had jumped over a counter during the robbery. However, Gethers said he was unable to have done this since he had an ankle injury at the time.

Some more testimony Gethers feels was not brought out at the trial were two polygraphic tests taken by him, both having positive results.

Gethers has now gone through four attorneys. His latest is Matthew Fineman of Boston. Gethers says he is having some problems with Fineman in trying to get him to place vital information into the case records. "I just want the judge to know about the information," said Gethers.

Gethers was also on campus in September speaking to students and talking to Dean of Students William F. Field. At that time Field said he hoped Gethers would return to finish his studies and get his degree.

Decision on UM-Boston chancellor today

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees will finally decide the position of the Boston campus Chancellor Carlo L. Golino, during today's board meeting in Worcester, Ma.

At the last board meeting a committee was formed to judge the effectiveness of the chancellor and is to report to the board today. The trustees will decide whether or not to ask Golino to step down during a morning executive session, then announce their decision in the open session this afternoon.

Golino was affected by a 65-year-old mandatory retirement age policy adopted by the board this summer. The age was later raised to 70 to conform to national standards. Some feel the initial policy was established specifically to oust Golino, who is 64.

Golino has made it clear to the board that he wishes to remain at his post, despite increasing pressure that he resign.

The board will also hear reports from the President Interim Committee and the Presidential Search Committee. UMass President Robert C. Wood resigned from his post last June. His resignation is effective January.

The Search Committeee will present to the board a rough outline of criteria for selecting a new president. The committee was present at the Amherst campus last week soliciting ideas from faculty and students on the qualifications of a new president.

Amherst Trustee Fran McNulty said there could be some reorganizing among committee members in today's meeting. This would be necessary after the resignation of Trustee Carolyn Rowlands last month, who was chairman of the Long Range Planning Committee and a member of several other committees.

Rowlands resigned in protest, citing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' increasing control of the board. Her successor has not yet been named by the governor.

House to look into African leader's death

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

The House of Representatives Monday approved a resolution calling for an impartial international investigation into the death of South African leader Steve Biko and denouncing the wave of arrests that shook South Africa on Oct. 19.

The resolution was supported by a vote of 374-54. "This is the first time Congress has formally spoken out against South Africa," said David Hoffman last night in a telephone interview with the Collegian.

Hoffman, a graduate student and former assistant director of the Inquiry Program at UMass, is currently working with Democratic Congressman Edward Markey in Washington. Hoffman also said the resolution could be considered "a kind of landmark piece of legislation."

Markey, who represents the 7th congressional district in Massachusetts, introduced the resolution on Oct. 4, calling for an investigation into Biko's death. The resolution was referred to the South Africa Subcommittee last week and was combined with a resolution sponsored by Cardiss Collins, D-Ill.

Collins' resolution was in response to the crack down by the South African police on all black political leaders and organization in the country.

"The two resolutions were combined in the committee, Hoffman said. "It asked for the U.S. to vote to condemn the government of South Africa for its recent actions and urged the U.S. to take the strongest diplomatic actions possible."

Hoffman said, "Congressman Markey's office has been very active on the South African question. Mr. Markey and myself along with 10 other congressmen, including Paul Tsongas, Democratic representative

Students cement relationship with prof

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Prof. Donald Wise of the UMass geology department has developed such a rapport with his students that a few of the more "active" ones, as he calls them, worked on a very difficult, time-consuming and unassigned project to present to the professor.

When he arrived at his office in 261 Morrill Science Center yesterday morning, Wise discovered his door had been bricked up.

Twenty-four concrete blocks held fast with mortar now adorn the entrance of the office. The students did, however, leave Wise some means of access to his office. The student construction crew left an entry passage which is about three feet high and 12 inches wide.

Amused at the prank, Wise estimated he's got about one half ton of concrete adding to the decor of his office. On the wall outside the office the students used spray paint to write, "Vertical Tectonics Liberation Front. Free Board Now."

Tectonics, explained Wise who teaches a class in the subject, is the study of continental draft. "Free Board", he said, refers to the relation between sea level and the continents.

Wise said he's decided not to do anything about the prank. "We have a rather high spirited tectonics class," he said. He did, however, contact the Physical Plant in regards of the removal of his new addition, and because he's been placed on a waiting list, Wise expects the wall will be dismantled sometime by 1980.

In the meantime, Wise has become more or less accustomed to his concrete doorway and crawl space. Outside the tiny entrance he placed a pan and a cup for donations for doughnuts and coffee. He's already received a few pennies and a Sugar Daddy.

Wise said he believes the construction of the wall has a follow-up to the anonymous "ultimate truth questions" he's been receiving this semester. Some of his students placed a box on a wall outside his office with questions such as, "If it takes a man and a half to dig a hole and a half, how long does it take a blind mouse with a wooden leg to kick the seeds out of a dill pickle?"

Wise said the students of the geology often indulge practical jokes, and there is an unwritten law about this matter in the department. "As long as the only thing injured is dignity," he said, "no one gets concerned."

He's not concerned, he said, but he did happen to notice a number of retired grad students hanging around his office.

Women's Media Project to plan activities

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

The Women's Media Project of UMass last night held its first meeting of the year to recruit new members, discuss its history, and plan activities. The project was described as "a campus wide organization for women in media so as to give support and information about skills and possibilities on campus," said Susan Terrel, project treasurer.

The project started in 1973 with a Communication Studies Class aimed toward women learning about radio production, explained Terrell. She said this eventually turned into a WMUA radio show entitled "Women's Hour", consisting of interviews with women, news, and information about women's events in the five-college area.

The "Women's Hour" changed its format last year and is now a three-hour production on Thursday evenings featuring music, interviews, and special projects of interest to women, according to Terrel. The show, combined with the Women's Video Collective, are the two major activities of the Media Project for the year said Susan Gray, Women's coordinator of the Student Video Project.

The Women's Video Collective is a group within SVP devoted to the purpose of "involving women in video production by giving workshops on equipment and producing a bi-monthly show, 'Women's Series'," said Joan Scovill, co-ordinator of the collective.

Scovill indicated that each show would revolve around a theme, such as women in therapy or religion, and might consist of interviews with Pioneer Valley women. "Video can also be used by women for workshops in assertiveness training and self help," said Scovill.

In addition, the collective participates in a project, "Video Newsletters" in which women's video collectives around the country send tapes to one another for the purpose of learning the activities of other women's communities.

Other items discussed at last night's meeting were the need to involve members in a budget planning session and the move to a new office, located in CC 921.

No answer yet for Grad Tower pollution

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Details could not be obtained from this week's meeting of state and local officials attempting to solve the noise pollution problem of the Graduate Research Center.

Officials from UMass and the Massachusetts Bureau of Building Construction met Monday in Boston to consider possible solutions to the noise problem.

UMass Director of Planning Jack Littlefield declined to comment on the details of the meeting, saying he wants to confirm various items discussed at the meeting with BBC officials in Boston before making any statement.

That confirmation, to be done by mail, should come "sometime next week", Littlefield said.

Henry Salice, UMass project engineer from the BBC, could not be reached for comment yesterday.

The date of the next meeting between UMass and BBC officials was also not available. Littlefield said that date is also awaiting confirmation. Littlefield had said earlier a series of meetings would be needed before a final solution to the GRC noise problem is found.

The issue of the GRC noise problem began last August when local residents complained the structure made excessive noise. The Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control Center performed two conflicting noise tests on the structure before a third test in August identified the violation. Pollution center officials then requested UMass and BBC officials to find a plan to solve the noise problem.

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

A special election for the position of Southwest Assembly vice president is tentatively scheduled for Nov. 19, Chris Durkin, co-chairman of the Elections Committee, said last night.

Everyone in the Southwest community is eligible to run as a candidate and must acquire 25 signatures endorsing their candidacy by Nov. 10, to be handed in at the Assembly Office in the Hampshire Cultural Center, Durkin said.

In other news, the SWA last night voted to allocate $44.85 for books to expand the Emerson Library and allocate 125 to finance SWA vice presidential campaign drives.

Each vice presidential candidate is eligible to receive up to $25 worth of purchase orders to fund their campaign drive. "This way every candidate has an equal chance at winning the election," Durkin said.

The function of SWA vice president is to assist the president and to supervise committee action. The new SWA vice president will fill the vacancy left by former Vice President Bruce Berkowitz. Peter Torkildsen is now acting vice president.

Professor calls for new energy sources

By RICHARD LENIHAN
Collegian Staff

Dr. Robert Seamans, professor of Environment and Public Policy at MIT, yesterday said the United States should explore alternative energy sources if it is to meet its growing energy demands.

Seamans, speaking before audience of over 100 people in Herter 231, criticized President Carter's energy proposals for not doing this while praising the proposal for increasing public awareness of the problem of possible fuel shortages.

Citing major polls which show that only 30 to 40 per cent of the couttry feel there is a problem, he said "It's hard to get people to sacrifice today for something that's going to be acute 10 or 15 years from now."

Seamans said that while oil and natural gas are the two most commonly used fuels in this country, they are also the least commonly found. Noting major projects such as the Alaskan Pipeline and predicting there will be oil drilling on the ocean floor, he said "It is becoming more difficult to get oil and gas, otherwise we wouldn't be going to this expense."

Among the alternative energy sources he discussed were geothermal energy, oil shale, coal, nuclear fission, nuclear fusion and solar energy. Geothermal energy, heat from the earth, is not available in most parts of the country, he said.

The process of transforming oil shale into synthetic fuel is very expensive as is the cost of transporting coal. Nuclear fission is very difficult because of the high temperatures involved, said Seamans.

Despite these difficulties, however, he said that "every possibility should be explored." He also said the future is good for nuclear and solar energy.

While there have been problems in disposing of nuclear waste, nuclear energy is relatively inexpensive and can meet large demands. It is also very controversial, he said. "Almost everything to do with energy has some controversy," he added.

Solar energy has a good future as a secondary source of energy, according to Seamans. "It's not impossible to increase the amount of solar energy we use, but the economic and environmental problems are substantial," he said.

Seamans also stressed the importance of conserving the amount of energy the country uses.

Dutch millionaire released by terrorists

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands [AP] — Dutch multimillionaire Maurits Caransa has been released unharmed by his kidnappers, police said early Wednesday.

A police spokesman refused to say exactly how the 61-year-old real-estate tycoon won his freedom. He said Caransa was brought to Amsterdam police headquarters during the night and had since left for an undisclosed destination.

The spokesman described Caransa as "in good health".

Caransa was kidnapped early last Friday — forced into a car by four or five persons as he left the Continental Club in Amsterdam after playing bridge. His briefcase was found on the sidewalk near his chauffeur-driven Rolls Royce.

Police tightened controls on the West German and Belgian borders and launched a nationwide search for Caransa after callers claimed he had been seized by a West German terrorist group.

But sources said Monday the conviction was growing in government circles that Caransa was kidnapped by common criminals and not political terrorists.

"If the crime were politically motivated it would seem that the kidnappers would have circulated well-documented claims and photos by now," the source said.

Caransa's wife, Rita, made an appeal over Dutch radio Sunday asking the kidnappers to make their demands known "in whatever manner."

Mrs. Caransa, her daughter and two grandchildren went into seclusion at the family villa on Vinkeveen, 12 miles south of the Hague, after the kidnapping.

Scores of anonymous telephone calls making ransom demands were made to newspapers and authorities after the kidnapping.

Nine hours after the kidnapping, a German speaking man telephoned a Dutch newspaper and said: "We are the Red Army Faction. We have Caransa. You will hear from us."

A second caller, speaking Dutch with a heavy Moluccan accent, told another Amsterdam newspaper he represented three groups: the Red Army Faction, a Palestinian guerrilla organization and the South Molluccan Suicide Commando. He demanded the release of Knut Folkerts, more than 20 South Moluccan terrorists in Dutch jails and a Japanese terrorist imprisoned in Israel. The 25-year-old Folkerts is a Red Army Faction member detained for the slaying of a Dutch policeman in Utrecht on Sept. 22.

The Red Army Faction is a West German terrorist group also known as the Baader-Meinhof gang. Militant South Moluccans living in The Netherlands have been trying to force the Dutch government to support their demands for the independence of their native islands from Indonesia. They have made a number of terrorist attacks in the Netherlands, including two train hijackings.

Newspapers also received calls demanding ransoms ranging from $20,000 to $10 million for Caransa's release.

Anti-smoking drive begun

By PATTI JONES
Collegian Staff

A statewide petition declaring that all cigarette smoking shall be restricted to rest rooms in all public buildings has begun circulating at UMass.

If this petition, sponsored by the Citizens for Clean Air in Publicly Used Buildings, can draw 100,000 signatures, it will become a binding referendum for the November 1978 state ballot.

The petition is based on the findings of the Surgeon General's report since 1972 which indicates that breathing someone elses second-hand tobacco smoke (smoke at end of cigarette) can be hazardous to the health of a nonsmoker.

Currently, smoking is only considered illegal in classrooms, buses, and elevators according to Chapters 271 and 465.

Circulation of the petition in the Amherst area is now underway by two UMass students, Richard Sidney and Nurit Rechnitz.

So far they have about 500 signatures. They hope to reach around 5,000 by November 30, the deadline date for all registered voters signatures.

The one problem with this petition, according to Sidney is, "It is an attempt to legislate consideration, which is something a law really cannot do.

"While some argue that it is their right to smoke, my answer to them is that it is not their right to pollute my air."

Sidney and Rechnitz, directed by the Citizens for Clean Air in Publicly Used Buildings, will also be distributing stickers and pamphlets concerning nonsmoker's rights throughout the Amherst area, as well as circulating the petition.

For a wider circulation of the petition, Sidney and Rechnitz are holding a meeting Friday at 3 p.m. for all those interested in volunteering their time. For any further information concerning smoker's rights or to sign the petition a contact Sidney or Rechnitz at their table in the Campus Center concourse.

★ House investigation

from the 6th congressional district in Massachusetts, went to the South African embassy to meet with Donald Sole, South African ambassador to the U.S."

The purpose of the meeting, according to Hoffman, was to ask the ambassador about Biko's death, about the police detention in South Africa and about the security laws which allow people to be held incommunicado for up to one year without being charged.

"The answers the ambassador gave were almost evasive, completely evasive and unsatisfactory," Hoffman said.

The final version of the Markey-Collins resolution was passed in the South Africa Subcommittee last Wednesday by a 6-0 vote. The resolution was passed on to the House International Relations Committee Thursday where it was approved on a vote of 20-0.

In this committee, Richard Moose of the U.S. State Department testified in favor of the resolution, giving it also the full support of President Carter, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Andrew Young, according to Hoffman.

The resolution then went before the full House, where a two-thirds vote was needed.

According to Hoffman, this procedure would ordinarily be used for non-controversial resolutions. This resolution was controversial in that it was the first time the House officially spoken out against South Africa.

Markey, on Oct. 26, introduced legislation into the House that would limit trade to South Africa, Hoffman said. "The Markey bill would suspend all trade except under national security needs," he said.

Speaking on the floor yesterday Markey said, " ... Inescapable restriction of the apartheid system controls every aspect of life for the non-white community in South Africa," as quoted by Hoffman.

S. Africa nears climax

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Assistant Editor

On October 19, the South African government launched an attack on the leading Black organizations and newspapers in the country, arresting hundreds of organization leaders, banning the two prominent Black newspapers, imprisoning their editors, imprisoning hundreds of Black leaders, and killing hundreds of students and protesters.

The United States, Britain, and France had been meeting previously, asking South Africa to dissolve apartheid in South Africa. The world had been waiting to see how South Africa would respond to these western pressures.

The death of the founder of the Black consciousness movement in South Africa, Steve Biko, incensed the already growing demand for an end to apartheid. Biko was a great man and it is understood that he was beaten to death while in prison.

Blacks in South Africa unified deeper and deeper, singing songs of freedom, longing more and more to be free. The atmosphere scared the white Afrikkaners of South Africa. The response to this call of freedom was the present attack on all the progressive Black institutions in South Africa. White moderates of South Africa were upset by this because most of the pressure (within and without) suggested peaceful change, and now, most of the South African moderates are in prison or killed, and there may not be any more peaceful attempts to end apartheid. The South African government has given no indication whatsoever in changing their regime.

This had the effect of stating that if Blacks want a change in South Africa, they are going to have to take it.

The 49 African countries represented in the United Nations demands that the western powers withdraw their investments in South Africa. The leading countries investing in South Africa are Britain, France, the United States, and Israel.

The United States has 1.5 billion invested in South Africa. Britain has 7 billion invested in South Africa. South Africa receives most of its arms imports from France, Britain, and Israel, in that order. South Africa brought 1.35 billion in U.S. goods last year. An estimated 500,000 U.S. jobs depend on South African exports. The U.S. brought 925 million in goods from South Africa last year. 38 per cent of U.S. chromium comes from South Africa.

The 49 African countries put pressure on the U.N. Security Council to impose a mandatory embargo on South African imports of arms and oil. The leading African advocate of this is Nigeria, lead by foreign minister Brig. Joseph N. Garba. This sent the U.S. into heat, as the U.S. is trying to encourage a positive relationship with Nigeria, and eventually the rest of Africa. President Carter said: "There are various degrees of economic sanctions. But what we want is a resolution of the South African threat against peace in Namibia and of course the rights of the South African peoples themselves protected.'

U.S. leaders urged African leaders to accept the agreed six month embargo against South Africa for the sale of arms. The African leaders refused the compromise, demanding that a permanent mandatory withdrawal for support of South Africa, but they will settle for the present U.N. sanction if they cannot get anything else.

The U.S. position is giving Britain and France a scare because Britain and France want the U.S. to remain on their side in solidarity for not supporting the U.S. sanction for an arms embargo for South Africa.

Black people in South Africa are not treated as human beings, as reported by the over 200 killings during these past weeks. The inhumanity of apartheid will be stated by a future article.

Eno Washington's "Dance Improvisations"

By MARCIA HOSPEDALES
Black Affairs Staff

This past week was marked by a series of cultural activities in the Valley. Among these were two stimulating performances by Eno Donald Washington, a UMass undergraduate in dance.

Washington's "Midnight Dance Improvisations" took place last Wednesday October 26, at Hampden Theatre (South West). The audience was delighted by the rhythmic sounds of Gary Owens, Tony Clayton, Kevin Jones, Eon John (percussion) and Bill Dargen (on reeds). Variety was added to the show with a vocal rendition by young Eon John (Let Me Try Again) and poetry and narration by Ima Henderson. Washington displayed unique styles and movements and used traditional garbs, thrilling the eager midnight audience with his flamboyance. Before long, the crowd was brought to its feet with a hand clapping, foot stomping response, in tribute to black classical dance.

This past Saturday October 29, Washington had much the same effect on the capacity audience that showed up to witness "Spirit Dances" at the N'Fafa Gallery in Northampton. The theme of the show was set by Washington's choreography to Gil Scott Heron's "Ain't No New Thing," which expresses the rape and destruction of black culture by white society. Once again, we were able to capture some of what we lost many years ago. Utilizing his 17 years experience in dance, Washington used his body to tell the story... the story of a people torn from their native land and brought to a society bent on being violent and oppressive to them. Narrator Ima Henderson helped to increase awareness throughout the night, striking a positive chord with a critical interpretation of justice by an anonymous Ethiopian writer.

In the end, Washington drew a well deserved standing ovation from the audience who applauded in appreciation of a step in the direction of black cultural revival.

Benefit dance for human rights

La Familia at Hampshire College is proud to announce a Benefit-Disco for the Northampton Chapter of the Hispanic Council for Human Rights at Hampshire Dinning Commons on November 4, 1977 at 9:00 p.m.

We warmly extend an invitation to clap your hands and stomp your feet, for the sake of the survival of the Hispanic Northampton Community. The recorded music of Third World People (Latin-Soul-Funk-Disco) will provide the inspiration for our dancing feet and spirits. We are asking for a $1.00 donation; all proceeds will go to the Hispanic Council for Human Rights. Refreshments will be available but BYOB — bring your own bottle.

For those who relate to the social reality of the Rainbow struggle, a panel-discussion will precede the Dance at the West Lecture Hall-Franklin Paterson at 8:00 p.m. The panel-discussion will consist of representatives from the Hispanic Northampton Community and is entitled: Crises: International and Local Struggles of Hispanics. La Familia is a collective of Third World brothers and sisters that are dedicating their energies to the communities of oppressed peoples.

Pool, table tournaments to begin

The pool and table tennis tournament sponsored by the Malcolm X Center will begin this Thursday, November 3, at 7 p.m. Only the novice divisions male and female will be held on Thursday. All contestants should drop by before Thursday to obtain rules and regulations and to see the scheduling for the tournament. All people who have not paid as of now should be prepared to do so on Thursday.

Discrimination in Northampton, a fight against wrong

Racial discrimination, also known as prejudice, is a preconceived judgement usually directed at groups or individuals because of their race or characteristics of their person.

It is an outgrowth of insufficient interracial knowledge and the resulting irrational attitude of suspicion and hostility.

We well know that discrimination does not only occur in the South (via South Boston) and that it has not been overcome by the Civil Rights movement. Everyday interactions between the races gives evidence of this; that discrimination is alive and well in Northampton.

Discrimination in one way or another affects all Third World people in the Valley. In this area, (Northampton), the main victims are Latinos, most of whom are Puertorriquenos, who came here under the illusion that they would find work, a better environment, and a better life for their children. The socio-economic conditions on their island homeland — a colonial possession of the U.S. for nearly a century — often made this the only alternative to poverty and despair. For Puerto Ricans, as well as other Third World people, the American Dream never came true. The reason for this is obvious.

Nevertheless, in order to determine the vital needs of Latinos in our area, and to discover exactly where discrimination exists in this community, the Hispanic Council for Human Rights very recently conducted a survey of the Latino community. The Council, formerly known as the Puerto Rican Committee for Human Rights, is a group of individuals who in response to acts of harassment and discrimination against Latinos, have organized themselves to combat this oppressive disease of American Society.

While the exact data and analysis of the study are to be presented in a thorough form in the weeks to come, much of what the Hispanic Council for Human Rights discovered only confirmed the obvious.

The majority of Puertorriquenos, both men and women, have been employed for at least three years, (contradictory to the myth of being on welfare), doing factory work, machine-operating, farmwork, housecleaning, secretarial work and cooking. The wages that most of these workers receive, however, is at (or below) the U.S. Govt. poverty level for a family of four.

Of all the people interviewed, nearly half have children of school age. These are Spanish-speaking families, who unanimously stated that they wanted their children to retain their culture and language; while at the same time acquiring the ability to speak, read and write English plus the skills that could lead to a better life.

Yet, what do they find? There is no adequate bilingual-bicultural education program in the area schools — even though this is mandated by law. (Ch. 622-Act 71A).

RACISM HURTS ALL POOR WORKING PEOPLE

Boston Phoenix/cpf Ellen Shub

In addition, it was discovered that access to employment, decent medical care and legal assistance is made nearly impossible by the lack of Hispanic or bi-lingual personnel in the hospitals, courts, welfare, and employment offices. The people interviewed unanimously agreed on the need for Hispanic employees and interpreters in these key agencies.

Social service centers, set up to attempt to alleviate these and other problems, such as H.C.A.C.'s Centro Hispano, find themselves facing the same discrimination. The Centro Hispano is presently fighting an eviction notice.

Educational centers like the Farm Worker's Council, which is run by people of the Hispanic community that it serves, offers courses in basic English and Math, High School equivalency exam preparation, and other pertinent services. Recently, their contract was terminated and funds that would enable their program to continue were channeled to other sources. Apparently, officials of this city (Northampton CETA) presume themselves more qualified to run a program for Latinos than the people from the Spanish-speaking community themselves, who have been running it successfully for two years.

These above-mentioned instances and many more are clear examples of discrimination. But cases of discrimination have been fought and beaten before through people's struggles, it can and must be combatted here and now. To do this, we must overcome the mistrust that divides us and come together to continue working to obtain justice in our community.

If you know of still other cases of discrimination, or want to help combat it, contact The Hispanic Council for Human Rights, 586-5537 or 584-0672.

High Notes...

Now that everyone's got the Hallowe'en spirit(s) out of their systems, we can take a serious look at what we'll be doing for future entertainment. An event that will definitely be on my schedule is the upcoming Roberta Flack concert at the Fine Arts Center. She'll be doing one show only on November 30 at 8 p.m. Everyone knows that her sounds are definitely sweet and should be heard at all costs. Flack hasn't had a release in a while but hers is music that mellows with age. She also takes on an even more mystical quality with her live performances. To those who may not be familiar with the lady, some of her past works include, "That's The Time I Feel Like Makin' Love To You," "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face" and the classic she did with Donny Hathaway, "Where Is The Love" (written by the quiet Ralph Macdonald).

On the recorded side, ACTION, by the Blackbyrds is a worthwhile addition to anyone's collection. The LP features sides written by the group-members themselves (as their last LP) and makes for some very nice music. The group remains true to their original concept which they laid down in their debut LP (simply titled THE BLACKBYRDS). Cuts like "Supernatural Feeling" and "Lookin' Ahead" are much like "Reggins" and "Gut Level" of the past. Another Donald Byrd production, I give it a well deserved "A".

In the "Coming-Over-The-Horizon" Dept., we have word from my man Cosmo Wyatt of Progressive Platter, (when in Boston, read it!!) that none other than the Fatback Band has a very serious single coming in "Master Booty". (Not sure of the spelling Cos!!) Cosmo tells me that this cut really has 'em shakin' their booties (if you'll pardon the pun). Only a few copies out there at the moment but word has it that it'll break strong as more DJs get their hands on it.

Time to go now, til' next week, be good to yourself and to whoever else you're close to. See ya' soon!

Conference on racism

A conference on racism has been proposed for the afternoon and evening of November 17. Its purpose would be to tie the broad issues of racism and imperialism to our local concerns. It is important to begin this work now since racial oppression — internationally, nationally, and locally — has been increasing daily. Workshops on deportations, South Africa, Puerto Rico, Craeman Gethers, and the history of New Africa House have been proposed. It has also been suggested that the evening plenary session focus on the local implementation of affirmative action.

Announcements

The Malcolm X Center is inviting the Five-College community to attend the Malcolm X's Waist Party this Friday, November 4. This event is designed to raise funds for the center. A Waist Party is a novelty-type event that uses your waist size as an admission fee. Example: 31 inch waist, 31 cents to get in. Refreshments will be served. Brother Kurt (K-Rock) Williams will be the D.J. for the evening. The "X" needs your support. Come on Down, it's your center, SO GET INVOLVED!

The format and content of this conference will be decided by those who organize it. We want to meet the needs of a variety of people and organizations. The broadest possible spectrums of organizers and audience will ensure the greatest success. We all strive for unity in diversity. This conference can be a step in that direction.

If your organization would like to plan and participate in this conference, please come to rm. 114 in New Africa House (UMass) at 8:00 on Thursday, or call Steve at 253-3328.

Central Area opens center for women

By JANET HOEBING
Collegian Staff

Central area women in search of anything from personal counseling to coffeehouse-type social settings can find them at the Central Area Women's Center in Baker House.

The center had its opening celebration Oct. 23. Live music, poetry and refreshments were offered at the event which drew more than 75 men and women, according to Cindi Thomas, center coordinator.

"Although the center is still in the process of getting settled in its new location, we have had an enthusiastic response," said Thomas. Thomas encourages all Central area women to take advantage of the growing library, resource file, and referral service. There is also space available for teaching a colloquium, studying, visiting, or meeting other women, she said.

In addition to the other services, the center also offers counseling by Linda Fuller, said Thomas. "Linda deals with a variety of problems ranging from rape and crisis intervention, to contraception and sexuality," said Thomas. She will be available at the center on a drop-in and appointment basis Sunday evenings, said Thomas.

A monthly newsletter is being published for all area women. Thomas said she hopes this will encourage participation by allowing residents to submit poetry and literature, and to be aware of the center's events.

The center, funded by the Central Area Council, was recently granted $2,150 for this year's operating budget, Thomas said. She invites women to take advantage of the open business meetings, and to participate in organizing activities and making center policies.

Thomas said a questionaire has been sent out to Central area women. "We are here to serve the women's needs and it is important that we know what they want. The center urges women to speak up for what they need," she said.

There are many events to look forward to this year said Thomas, such as a series of movies, workshops, guest speakers, concerts, potluck suppers, contradances and coffeehouses. "People have been very enthusiastic so far. We're looking forward to a really bright future," she said.

The center is open Sunday through Thursday, 2 to 11 p.m. and Friday and Saturday by appointment.

Staff Woman's Services can help female employees

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Pay discrepancies and the inability to move up the "career ladder" are some of the problems affecting the 1,800 non-professional women employed at the University, according to Staff Woman's Services coordinator Sarah Boy.

The Staff Woman's Services, which started four years ago to provide a variety of services to the women employees, is one of six groups making up the Everywoman's Center in 506 Goodell.

Included in the category of non-professional workers are secretaries, janitors, institutional and domestic aides, and cafeteria workers.

"There needs to be the opportunity to advance into administrative positions," said Boy.

To make the rise out of entry level positions easier, Staff Women's Services offers assertiveness training workshops and coordinates classes in typing and shorthand which could lead in increased job salaries, she said.

The program also informs staff women how they can take advantage of the educational opportunities at UMass. "There are classes they can take for free," said Boy.

Lack of exercise was another problem that women were concerned about. Boy is trying to arrange a "swimnastics" program with the physical education department so the women can exercise every day at noon.

Staff Women's Services is also acting as an advocate in grievance proceedings for women who have no union representative. They are also trying to bring about the much needed changes in the entry-level pay scale, which gives men higher salaries.

To inform staff women of the many services available to them, the program puts out a quarterly paper entitled "The Staff Woman."

Justice Dept. says Congress can provide more time for states to ratify ERA

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Justice Department yesterday said it believes Congress can provide extra time for states to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment but legislatures which have already approved the ERA cannot reverse their decision.

The department, in a legal opinion sent to the White House and the House subcommittee on constitutional rights, said it believed Congress has the right to extend the period for ratification from seven to 14 years.

State legislatures that have ratified the amendment, the department added, do not have the right to rescind the action later.

In passing the ERA proposal in 1972, Congress set a seven-year time limit for ratification, following a precedent dating back to the 18th amendment. The present deadline for ratification is March 22, 1979.

Legislatures of 35 of the required 38 states have ratified the amendment but Idaho, Nebraska and Tennessee have since voted to rescind their ratifications.

Assistant Attorney General John M. Harmon, head of the office of legal counsel which drafted the Justice Department opinion, was opening witness at Tuesday's subcommittee hearing on the constitutionality of extending the ratification period.

Rep. Elizabeth Holtzman, D-N.Y., introduced a bill to extend the time to 1986, saying she feared "stalling strategies" will prevent all states from getting a chance to ratify ERA by the 1979 deadline.

Harmon testified he believes Congress in its next session can adopt an extension of time and this will not give the state legislatures any added right to rescind their previous ratifications.

"It is my view that the Holtzman resolution is constitutional, Congress has the power to extend the time period for consideration of the ERA," Harmon told the subcommittee. "The sole responsibility for the exercise of that power is yours."

Harmon added he believes Congress can extend the ratification period by a simple majority vote of both houses, although the ERA proposal with the seven-year restriction initially required a two-thirds vote to pass.

Although the ERA originally went through the House and Senate with overwhelming margins, some observers believe opposition to the amendment has grown to such an extent it would be difficult how to obtain a two-thirds favorable vote to extend the ratification time.

As to whether such congressional action could be challenged in court, Harmon said the prevailing view is that federal judges would consider it a purely political question that should be left entirely up to Congress.

Battered wife testifies at her murder trial

LANSING, Mich. [AP] — A sobbing Francine Hughes testified in her first-degree murder trial yesterday that her ex-husband repeatedly beat and otherwise severely abused her but her pleas for help were ignored.

Mrs. Hughes, 30, is accused of killing James Hughes while he slept by setting fire to the home the couple shared. The prosecution maintains the motive was Mrs. Hughes' involvement with another man.

Prosecutor Martin Palus wound up his presentation Monday with testimony from a handwriting expert that Mrs. Hughes' writing matched that on letters found in a former security guard's locker.

In opening statements, Palus said the letters would prove the motive for the slaying was Mrs. Hughes' "relationship" with an unidentified man. But Palus did not introduce the letters as evidence and did not disclose their contents during his presentation.

He has refused any comment on the letters, and the defense has not addressed the issue in its presentation thus far.

Mrs. Hughes has said she was driven to killing Hughes because of the beatings and abuse she had suffered at his hands since they were married when she was 16 years old. Feminist supporters hope Mrs. Hughes' case will set a precedent to strengthen the rights of abused women.

In testimony on the sixth day of her trial in Ingham County Circuit Court, Mrs. Hughes said she met Hughes at a high school dance, they became lovers and she married him because of her moral values.

"It used to be that a girl was taught to save herself for somebody," she said. "We had intercourse before we were married. I felt like I should marry him because of that. He wanted to marry me so bad. I never felt I had anyone who loved me that much. What attracted me to him was that he was attracted to me."

But she later found Hughes to be "insanely jealous" and he began to abuse her within a year of the wedding, she said.

"I felt terribly alone and afraid. It dominated my life. I never knew what to expect."

The couple divorced in 1971 but soon afterwards Hughes was seriously injured in an auto accident. Mrs. Hughes has said she moved into a home next door to Hughes' home in Dansville to help care for him. Gradually, Hughes moved into her home, and the beatings and abuse resumed, she said.

Her face twisted with emotion, Mrs. Hughes read parts of the divorce decree which was granted her on grounds of "extreme cruelty."

In the first fight she could remember, Hughes blackened her eyes after she bought nail polish at a drug store while he was working, she said. "I guess it was because I left the apartment."

She said Hughes once came to a factory where she worked and ordered her to quit, despite the fact that the couple needed her income.

After Hughes moved into the home where she lived with the couple's four children, "I wouldn't move without him saying it was all right," Mrs. Hughes testified. "I know it's hard to believe, but it's true ... He didn't want me to go places, or see anybody — not even my own family. I think maybe he was afraid I'd leave."

State employees protest pay delay

BOSTON [UPI] — Some 8,000 state workers, angered over a three-month delay in the payment of wage increases negotiated last spring, marched on the State house demanding immediate approval of a $26 million supplemental budget.

Some 250 members of the Alliance, a state employees union, swarmed into the State house chanting, "we want our pay raises now" and scuffled briefly with police outside Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' office.

Several demonstrators inadvertently took the wrong elevator and came out just behind Massachusetts Registry officers who bolstered the ranks of eight capitol police standing guard outside Dukakis' third floor office.

Protesters who had been waiting in a roped-off area then surged towards police and the scuffle broke out. Ten police officers engaged in a brief shoving match with demonstrators in the day's only reported physical confrontation.

Members of the Alliance held the Beacon Hill rally to protest the delay of $17 million in pay raises and expenses which were to begin Aug. 1.

The anti-abortion rider was attached to the budget by Reps. Rayond L. Flynn and Charles V. Doyle, both Boston Democrats, and most of the protesters appeared to be angrier with the Legislature than the governor.

House passes controversial bill

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday criticized the Massachusetts House for its last minute "frenzy of activity" to pass a supplemental budget that includes an anti-abortion amendment and a state employees pay hike.

A $26.7 million budget for fiscal 1978 was approved late Monday by the Legislature after two and one-half hours of debate in the House where action on the controversial bill had been postponed for weeks.

The bill contains $17 million in pay raises and expenses for state employees who were supposed to get the hike last Aug. 1, and an amendment to prohibit the use of state funds for abortions except to save the life of a woman.

"The legislature in a frenzy of activity after three paralytic months finally passed a budget with an anti-abortion amendment," Dukakis, who reiterated his opposition to the amendment, said at a cabinet meeting.

Daniel Taylor, the governor's chief counsel, said Monday afternoon he hand delivered an advisory question on the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court to ask if Dukakis can constitutionally line item veto the amendment.

If the SJC says "yes," Dukakis said "with great relish, I will sign" the budget and veto the amendment. If the SJC says "no," the governor said "the budget will have to go back to the Legislature with a full veto."

Seabrook appeal trials begin Monday

EXETER, N.H. [UPI] — The first set of appeals trials for the 1,414 persons convicted of criminal trespass in May Day weekend of the Seabrook nuclear power plant opens Monday in Rockingham County Superior Court.

County Attorney Carleton Eldredge said yesterday he has scheduled appeals trials for 64 persons. The 64 all were convicted in District Court, but under state law, have a right to appeal to Superior Court for a jury trial. Eldredge has said there are about 1,500 cases to handle.

The Clamshell Alliance, which has sponsored two antinuclear demonstrations at Seabrook resulting in nearly 1,600 arrests, say the real issue in the trials will be nuclear power. It plans to use New Hampshire's "Competing Harms" law as a defense, saying it is legal to break a law to prevent harm from occuring that is more of a threat to life and property than the law which is broken.

"We see the Nov. 7 trials as a way to take the case against nuclear power to the people," said alliance spokesman Eva Gibavic. She said the alliance will try to convince the jury that occupation of the Seabrook site was necessary to prevent a greater crime — the building of the $2.3 billion plant.

The 715-acre oceanfront plant would be the nation's largest atomic generating plant. On Wednesday, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission hears oral arguments in Washington on whether Seabrook should be built.

Woman charged with patricide

MANCHESTER, N.H. [AP] — A Manchester woman was arraigned yesterday on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the shooting death of her father, Henry Piasecny.

Manchester District Court officials say that Susan Hughes, 35, is being held without bail at the Hillsboro County House of Correction. A probable cause hearing on the charge is set for Nov. 17 in district court.

Assistant Attorney General Peter Heed said Mrs. Hughes was arrested at the Manchester Police Station Monday night. She was accompanied by her lawyer at the time of the arrest.

Authorities had originally ruled Piasecny's death a suicide, when he was found in his Manchester home on Sept. 2, shot in the head with a shotgun.

Heed said Piasecny's body was exhumed and an autopsy performed at Mrs. Hughes request later that month, and a medical examiner ruled he died of a .22-caliber bullet wound.

According to Heed the death was investigated as a homicide by the attorney general's office and Manchester Police, who determined Monday that there was sufficient evidence to arrest Mrs. Hughes for murder.

Senate votes for confidentiality

BOSTON [AP] — The confidentiality of therapy sessions between patients and psychologists would be protected under a bill approved yesterday by the Massachusetts Senate.

The bill would extend to psychologists and their patients the same privilege that now exists between psychiatrists and patients, lawyers and clients, priests and confessors. Psychologists, for example, could not be forced to testify against their patients in court.

The Senate bill, which was sent to the House for approval, would only apply to psychologists with doctorate degrees.

Students protest Philippine grant

MEDFORD, Mass. [AP] — Seventy-eight Tufts University faculty members have signed a letter protesting the university's acceptance of a $1.5 million grant from Imelda Marcos, the Philippine's First Lady.

"We find it ironic that Tufts University, an institution purportedly committed to humane values, would accept money from the family of a Philippine dictator," the letter states. "The lies about the nature of the Philippine dictatorship and of the Marcos family that the Tufts administration has used to justify its acceptance of the money is a shameful perversion of the goals and ethics of educators."

The letter is currently being circulated among professors at the Tufts Medical School in downtown Boston. It will be sent to Tufts President Jean Mayer and to area newspapers later this week, according to organizers of the protest.

Spfld. threatens water cutoff

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — The city's water commissioners are threatening to turn off the water supply to neighboring East Longmeadow unless the community pays a $148,000 past due bill by Nov. 22.

But it seems 90 homes in Springfield also would lose water if the shutoff is instituted. Mayor William Sullivan said that presented "a bit of a problem."

East Longmeadow refused to pay the bill to protest the water rates, which were hiked two years ago by 100 per cent.

House and Senate try in vain to settle Federal abortion issue

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With their tempers growing short and their voices rising, House and Senate negotiators made another vain attempt yesterday to settle the issue of federal financing of abortions for needy women.

They broke up in confusion and bitterness after an hour and a half, promising to meet again at an unspecified time Wednesday.

The dispute has been holding up a $60 billion appropriation for the Labor Department, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and several smaller agencies for four months.

Stop-gap financing for October already technically has run out, and those agencies are operating and paying their employees only by virtue of the 10-day time lag that exists in most federal disbursements.

Both the House and Senate agree that the federal government should pay for abortions for low-income women under Medicaid when the life of the woman otherwise would be endangered.

The dispute revolves around just a few words:

—The Senate negotiators would also pay for abortions where "serious physical health damage to the mother" would result if the pregnancy continued. The House team says that should read "grave, physical, permanent health damage to the mother."

—The senators would allow "medical procedures necessary for the prompt treatment of the victims of rape or incest." The House negotiators would limit this to cases of "forced" rape or incest which are "reported to a law enforcement agency."

Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., said that on Monday the conferees had appeared to be "within one word of an agreement" — the issue then being whether the bill should refer to "serious" or "grave" health damage. But on Tuesday much of whatever partial agreement there may have been unraveled.

Senators accused the House side of backtracking, saying they had understood the rape-incest issue was settled Monday, with their language accepted.

But Rep. Daniel Flood, D-Pa., the chief House negotiator, said his team took an "overwhelming" vote just before yesterday's meeting to stick to its language on that point.

"It's back to square one," said Sen. Edmund Brooke, R-Mass., at the end of yesterday's session.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., said the conferees never should have recessed their talks Monday night. "We should have locked the doors," he said.

Social Security taxes will raise over decade

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Finance Committee Tuesday approved its version of a bill substantially raising Social Security taxes over the next decade to keep the program operating in the black.

Unlike a version passed last week by the House, the Senate panel's measure would put the increased payroll tax burden much more heavily on employers than employees.

The House, following tradition set when Social Security began in 1935, would tax them equally.

Another big difference is that the Senate committee would raise the "earnings limit" — the amount retirees under age 72 can earn in wages before they begin to lose Social Security benefits — from its present $3,000 to $6,000 in 1979, after which it would rise with wage inflation.

The House would remove the limit entirely in 1982 for persons 65 to 72, so that they could earn any amount of wages and still draw full Social Security pensions. The earnings limit does not apply above age 72.

Also unlike the House bill, the Senate committee version tentatively includes the first installment — $400 million in 1978 — of what may be a three-year program to reimburse state and local governments for some of their welfare costs.

Sen. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., said an agreement with the administration is taking shape whereby amounts for 1979 and 1980 would be included in another bill.

Only hours after the committee acted, the bill was brought to the Senate floor for consideration although no action was expected until Wednesday. Like the House version, it is designed to finance Social Security into the next century, preventing the disability fund from running out of money in 1979 and the retirement fund in the early 1980s.

Carter cuts assistance to nations abusing human rights

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter Tuesday signed a $6.7 billion foreign assistance appropriations bill which cuts off aid to some countries considered guilty of abusing human rights.

The bill represents a boost in worldwide assistance over last year, the White House said, in an effort to redress the imbalance between the "haves" and "have not" nations. Congress appropriated $5.6 billion in fiscal year 1977.

As a result of a major skirmish between liberals and conservatives during debate in Congress, the bill contains nothing for Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Uganda.

Conservatives opposed such aid even if extended indirectly through international financial institutions such as the World Bank.

World Bank President Robert McNamara warned the bank would not be able to accept an American contribution with the precondition it could not be used for certain loans.

The conflict was solved when Carter offered a compromise under which U.S. representatives to international banks would be instructed to vote against such loans.

The measure also bans military aid of any kind for Ethiopia and Uraguay and prohibits military credit sales to Argentina, Brazil, El Salvador and Guatemala because of human rights practices in those countries.

Aid to the Philippines was also cut back from administration proposals on the same human rights grounds. The new law would provide up to $18 million in military aid, $1.8 million in military credit sales and $700,000 for military education and training funds for the Philippines.

The aid law includes $1.8 billion in military and other help for Israel, $750 million for Egypt, $90 million for Syria and $224 million for Jordan. The law also contains a ban on aid from the Export-Import bank for any nation which grants sanctuary to terrorists.

Senate vote will lessen pot penalties

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday reversed its decision to decriminalize possession of up to an ounce of marijuana, but proposed lightening penalties.

At present, under federal law, the possession of any amount of marijuana is punishable by a $5,000 fine and one year in jail. The compromise, included in a bill to revise all federal criminal laws, would be substantially easier on persons possessing less than 10 ounces.

On a 12-1 vote, the committee approved a provision which would set a fine of up to $100 for persons who possess less than 10 grams of marijuana — about one-third of an ounce.

Although the offense would be a "criminal infraction," the defendant's record would be automatically expunged for both the first and second offense. A person arrested for the third time could have his record expunged if there were no more violations in the following year.

For persons possessing between 10 grams and one ounce of marijuana, there would be an automatic $100 fine for both the first and second offenses, but the record could be expunged after six months or 12 months, respectively, if there were no further violations.

An individual arrested a third time would be subject to the same penalties prescribed for possession of between one and 10 ounces — 30 days in jail and a $500 fine.

There would be no jail terms for individuals possessing less than 10 grams, nor would the first or second offender be subject to jail for an infraction involving less than one ounce.

All these violations would be treated by a "summons" like a traffic ticket, rather than arrest.

For possession of over 10 ounces of marijuana, the current penalty of a $5,000 fine and one year in jail would be applied.

The compromise was devised by Sens. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., author of the original amendment to decriminalize possession of less than one ounce, and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who opposed decriminalization and had threatened to oppose the entire revision bill if Bayh's amendment prevailed.

Attempted press manipulation raises questions of ethics, sincerity

Recent actions of the president of the Student Government Association, Jon A. Hite, clearly show questions regarding Mr. Hite's sense of responsibility as a student leader.

It has come to the attention of a few Collegian staffers that Mr. Hite has been trying to manipulate some members of the Collegian staff to have the newspaper cover issues and items which would perpetuate his point of view — that student unionization should never happen.

According to these sources, Mr. Hite has approached certain conservative members of the Collegian and offered to help them in their campaign for the upcoming Board of Editors elections in December; intending that they would support his view against unionization.

Mr. Hite has also reportedly approached a highly respected Collegian staffer about sitting down to plan out a full plank of candidates for the Board of Editors election, again with the intent that they would support his view against unionization.

Also, Mr. Hite has allegedly tried to manipulate reporters here to look into the actions of certain union affiliates in the SGA ranks. Mr. Hite's obvious purpose was to raise ethical questions concerning all those involved with the union movement and so the union movement itself.

Several Collegian staffers also question Mr. Hite's asking if the Collegian wanted a letter of resignation of one boardmember of the Student Organizing Project (the group working to organize students for unionization) so that, he said, "the Collegian might be able to use it in one of their stories." In this letter the resigning boardmember complained about some points of the SOP's lack of action. It seems apparent that Mr. Hite wishes this letter to be published so a serious question would be raised about the validity of the SOP.

Mr. Hite also has been reported to have maneuvered certain reporters to cover certain stories which would support his viewpoints and has been known to use those priceless items of manipulation: booze, pot and a friendly handshake, according to Collegian sources.

Besides the ethical question obvious in Mr. Hite's actions, there is another serious question — namely, Mr. Hite's sincerity as a representative of students. Mr. Hite ran on a pro-union platform. Obviously, Mr. Hite's recent actions show clearly that his heart wasn't in what he said last March when he was running for the office he now holds.

Obviously, Mr. Hite's recent actions and motives should be looked into.

This is the time...

By ELLEN PLAUSKY

Ah yes, we are now at the time of the semester that injects fear into the hearts of everyone from seniors to the terror stricken freshpersons.... EXAMS!!!!!

With tests and quizzes now, and with midterms lurking obscurely around the corner, tensions begin to mount. This is really noticeable if you ever have the misfortune to disturb someone who's studying. Some people practically jump down your throat if they're studying and you go anywhere near them.

I, on the other hand, am very calm. It's just that I've realized a few things that are inevitable about exams. In an effort to save even one of you from useless worrying, I'll let you in on them.

It's hopeless to finish an exam you're not prepared for, and since pity is not something the teachers consider when they're correcting exams, if you don't know what you're doing, you might as well leave; we could all find something better to do with our time anyway.

This is when you'll learn that the teachers who give excellent lectures comprise their tests of everything else.

This is when the library elevators definitely won't work.

This is when you won't be able to distinguish the D.C. food from the napkins anymore, they'll both taste the same.

This is when you realize that maybe you should have done those reserve readings when no one had the books you need taken out.

This is when a bottle of NO-DOZ will keep you company on those long nights of cramming.

This is when there are no check cashing lines, because everyone is making a final attempt at studying or is relying on the Blue Wall for consolation.

This is when you discover that the guy who cut every lecture still knows more than you do.

This is when you resort to pleading, in a final effort to save your grades, which doesn't help; neither does crying, or threats (bribery sometimes works).

This is when you realize that maybe you should have been studying all along.

This is the moment of truth.

This is my end........

Shops present obstacles for handicapped student

To the Editor:

Saturday's beautiful weather confirmed my plans to do some shopping in Amherst center. Since my move up to UMass this fall, I had been trying to assert my "independence" by doing all the kinds of things I had never done by myself before. This might sound strange until I mention that I am physically "handicapped" and dependent upon my electric wheelchair.

The trip up wasn't bad — I managed to find the right paths and avoid curbings. My optimism began to fade as I travelled along North Pleasant St. The ominous obstacles took the form of stairs that were at the entrance to every store that I wanted to go into.

When I finally spotted the ground level entrance into Faces of Earth, I was happy. Only when I got inside the door did I see the two stairs that must be handled in order to have access to the rest of the store. Thompson's was my next try. The entrance was easy but all the women's clothes were in the back of the store, up a flight of stairs. I then decided to spend some time in the Back Room Record Shop until I got inside and saw how small it was and how damn narrow the aisles were. Stairs prevented me from going into Emporium India and the Carriage Shops too.

While living at home, there were always family and friends around to help. The physical barriers didn't seem as insurmountable then. I could depend on others to help me. Now I depend on myself and my wheelchair. I have come to know the frustration when presented with freedom on one hand, and barriers stopping that freedom on the other.

As I headed back to the dorm, I tried to soothe my anger in the beauty that was around me, in the last burst of color on the trees, that intoxicating smell of autumn, and the feel of sunshine warming me. I felt a lot less independent than when I had started out, but I felt stronger in a way too. I had seen how far I had to go until I really had reached independence but I knew that I could make it one day. It will only be a matter of time before enough people get angry and we do away with the thoughtless planning that goes into public and private buildings. I have to hope that someday soon we will have buildings that are designed with all people in mind.

YPSL to sponsor discussion group

To the Editor:

The coverage of Dr. Holesoevsky's recent lecture on socialism in the Collegian was adequate in all but one respect. The Collegian article failed to mention the fact that the lecture was sponsored by Social Democrats, U.S.A. and the Young People's Socialist League [YPSL]. Social Democrats, U.S.A. is an American affiliate of the Socialist Internationale, the organization of socialist, social democratic, and labor parties around the world. The YPSL is the youth branch of Social Democrats, U.S.A. Our movement stands out from the alphabet soup-like zoo of leftist groups in being a strong supporter of the American labor movement and in our uncompromising opposition to communist totalitarianism.

During the Holesoevsky lecture questionnaires were distributed to the audience regarding the possible formation of a socialist discussion group on campus. The results of the questionnaire were quite positive and the YPSL therefore hope to bring to campus authorities on such diverse subjects as socialism, the labor movement, detente, and the Middle East. The discussion group is open to interested students who feel close to the YPSL position but do not presently wish to affiliate themselves as members. Any student desiring more information can obtain by calling me at 546-9146.

Student Senate to debate student run towing service

To the Editor:

Tonight the Student Senate will be debating the feasibility of a student run tow service. This is not a new issue, but has been around for several years. At this point, the stumbling block appears to be the allocation of a $35,000 loan. This loan is necessary in order to purchase towing vehicles and construct a storage area [for the towed vehicles]. The proposal submitted by the Committee to Stop Amherst Towing is structured to; first, replay this one time loan in five one year installments of $7,000 and second, remain financially soluble with a 15 per cent reduction in revenue. This means that if the number of vehicles towed remains constant the student tow service would realize an annual profit of over $9,000. This money would then be funneled back into student activities.

Last spring this committee was sabotaged by certain individuals in the Student Senate. In actuality this raises a much larger issue than just the creation of a student run tow service. This issue brings forth the question of whether the Student Senate is responsive to the needs and demands of the student body at large. In a recent survey conducted by S.C.E.R. the problem of towing was listed as the second most important issue on campus. The Committee to Stop Amherst Towing has gathered over 6,000 signatures mandating the creation of a student run tow service.

The Student Senate will be debating this issue Wednesday evening. Students should voice their opinions either pro or con by contacting their Student Senator or attending the Student Senate meeting. If there are any questions concerning this proposal we urge people to stop by our table in the Campus Center.

The Committee to Stop Amherst Towing

To the Editor:

I'm sure that all members of the UMass community are aware of the recent attempts to replace Amherst Towing with a student run towing service. Tonight, the fate of this proposal hangs in the balance as the Student Senate votes on whether or not to fund the towing service. As a member of the Committee to Stop Amherst Towing, I've had to face the sad reality of the way in which the Student Senate operates. After the numerous lies, false hopes and pure bullshit we have been fed, I have found that the Senate doles out its money on the basis of who you know, who you can pressure, whether or not you find out the correct procedure; and not on the basis of whether or not students want it, or whether or not it is a good proposal.

I place most of the blame for the sorry state of affairs on the leadership of the SGA, most of whom are nothing more than cheap political hacks, attempting to further their own ambitions. I urge all members of the UMass community to come to the Student Senate meeting tonight and make known your demands.

On the return of Sir Albert Sparks

bill sundstrom

"Albert Sparks is coming back."

Just reading the first line of the news story brought tears of joy to my eyes.

For those unfamiliar with Sparks and his antics of years past, suffice it to say that he is the campus' perennial purveyor of pornography, and a person who thrives on the controversy he is so adept at producing.

Who but Albert, with his endearing frankness, could say to a reporter, "I'd love to have a gigantic porn festival in the Campus Center Auditorium"?

Sparks' goal is not to enlighten the community, nor is it to provide inexpensive entertainment for the students. It is to sell sex and sexism for profits, and whatever noble goals he may attribute to his efforts merely mask the inherent Sparksism.

Last year a number of students became upset with Sparks and his organization, Baroque Enterprises, and formed a counter-Sparks group called PISSED (People Investigating Sparks' Suspicious Educational Drives), which attempted to expose Sparks' RSO 'front groups'. But actually, Albert's "educational drives" are hardly suspicious — he's chasing the almighty buck, plain and simple.

Sparks has always insisted that when he is denied access to space for showing his movies (as was done in Southwest two years ago) his right of free speech is being abridged. In fact, the student judiciary has supported him in this claim, and Sparks has threatened that should Dean of Students William F. Field or the RSO office make some mistake in their efforts to thwart Baroque, he will bring on the "civil liberties people" and "nail their asses to the wall."

And he may have a point there. If the American Civil Liberties Union can support the Nazis' right to assemble, they will most certainly welcome the opportunity to defend Sparks and his porn flicks.

Issues like these always bring the libertarians out of the woodwork like dormant beetles on the first day of spring. Libertarians, who believe anyone should be able to say anything, are a persistent lot, despite the fact that their basic ideas are those of 17th and 18th Century thought and ignore the vast bulk of philosophical developments in the past 200 years.

It is ignorant and dangerous to protect total freedom of expression particularly within the context of a given power structure and historical development. Some ideas, by their very nature, are opposed to freedom, equality and whatever other values a society may hold dear. Was the Weimar Republic justified in its relative indifference to Hitler during his rise to power? Are we justified in sitting back and tacitly accepting the promotion of ideas which are clearly inimical to our notions of human rights?

Peoples living in relatively "free" societies can and must determine overall goals and values for their social development. Otherwise they become subject to the desires and manipulation of the existing power structure, as is the case in modern America. Of course, that power structure will play a large role in shaping those goals and values — but at least people will become more conscious of the process and will thus be less acquiescent to the most serious threats to their freedom.

Modern "pluralist" societies cling fanatically to the myth of the 'equality of ideas,' ignoring the fact that some ideas are supported by the status quo while others are inherently more true. Ideas considered "alternative" are frequently co-opted to support the existing structure. One almost wishes the old authoritarianism were still around. At least then one could be fully aware of what the powerful were up to and what its motives were. Today we can only speculate on how our thoughts are being manipulated by the "free" press and our other "free" institutions.

Sparks' ploy to hide behind the bastions of our legal system are typical of those who would use libertarian rights to decidedly unlibertarian ends. Both the Nazis and Sparks, when confronted by their opposition, almost instinctively point to the First Amendment as a justification for their actions. But of course, the First means virtually nothing on paper — the Soviet Union, for example, has a very similar provision in its constitution.

In the words of French reactionary Joseph deMaistre (in 1810), "That which is most essential, most intrinsically constitutional, and truly fundamental, is never written, and could not be, without endangering the state." Perhaps that's being a bit extreme — but it seems reasonable that those social values most crucial to a society's well-being spring not from sheets of paper but from the minds and hearts of people.

And that is precisely why communities must have some power to draw the lines of social acceptability. Certainly, minority viewpoints must be protected. But when such viewpoints advocate or directly result in oppression, manipulation or denial of freedom, they are no longer legitimate and must be restricted. Those who proclaim the rights of Nazis may smile while the goose-stepping soldiers march down their street.

As for Albert Sparks, his profit mongering at the expense of women's rights has no place on this campus. Right now it seems that as long as students and administrators continue to skirt the issue, Albert will perservere. The time has come to boot him out of business, once and for all.

"Third World" means...

By JOSE GUILLERMO TREJO

Many minority student organizations are labeled "Third World" to identify themselves in the UMass population. Now, being myself born and educated in a developing, Third World, "free" country, I have learned from abroad that Third World also has a deeper and more comprehensive perspective on what the aims of its political platform are. However, my intention with this editorial is only to share my personal feelings and understandings on the meaning of "Third World". Such concern comes from having the firm conviction that the human race must have a third ... or a fourth alternative economic solution in order to stop, in time, this neurotic world-wide warfare between two military mights — Capitalism and Communism — before they put and end to mankind.

Because "Third World" comes from the increasing necessity of non-aligned countries to seek other political and economic philosophies outside the scope of Capitalism-Communism, Third World means the pursuit of better and more comprehensive concepts and principles of freedom for all our people; it is to work toward a natural, clean development, free of waste and pollution as legacy for our future generations; it is to apply our technology in using more ecological and reliable non-fossil sources of energy (i.e. solar, wind, tide, hydraulic, thermowave, geothermal, etc.).

And thus, "Third World" is to achieve more social improvements while preventing the sociological ills of Capitalism-Communism, such as wars, the arm race, nuclear testing, espionage, oppression, torture, incarcerations, executions, illegal experiments on humans, accidents, unemployment, welfare, workfare, poverty, ghettos, drug abuse, alcoholism, pornography, prostitution, child perversion, organized crime, political corruption, police harassment, social segmentation, discrimination, sexism, racism, deportations, suicides, cancer, blackmail, red tape, consumer exploitation, maniac murders, ecological disorder, and on, and on. In a few words, it is to grow, living in peace with all humanity and nature, respecting mutural rights. But above all, it is to keep from polarizing the political beliefs of the people of the world, as the now aligned countries have established through military equilibrium poles "charged" with horrendous weapons for mass destruction.

Third World also means political and economic freedom from inaccessible foreign debts, unavoidable inflation, endless currency devaluations, multinational corporations, economic trade blocks, foreign intervention, dictatorships, military coups, bribed governments, wealth and power manipulations, armed invasions, terrorism, CIA, KGB and SOB that are constantly undermining and draining our development and growth, and as a result leaving larger numbers of our people fighting, homeless, hungry, oppressed, exploited and killed.

In summary, Third World is the political belief in the right of self-determination in order to achieve an authentic freedom and peace for all our people that neither Capitalism nor Communism has succeeded in providing us. Therefore: no Capitalism, no Communism; Third World should be the optimal solution.

Jose Guillermo Trejo is a Collegian guest commentator.

U.N. report shows baby drug addiction

GENEVA, Switzerland [UPI] — More than 1,000 babies in New York City are born addicted to heroin each year because their mothers are addicts, a U.N. drug agency said yesterday.

In a grim report on the sharp increase in drug addiction throughout the West, the U.N. Fund for Drug Abuse Control said there are now more than 600,000 addicts in the United States and that half of all street crimes in America are committed by drug addicts.

The agency said there were 2,000 heroin deaths in the United States last year.

The agency blamed Burma, Laos and Thailand for producing most of the raw opium for the illicit trade in narcotics.

Most of the raw opium produced in the world comes from the "Golden Triangle" of Burma, Laos and Thailand, with Burma turning out 500 tons of the 600 to 700 tons produced annually by this region, the agency said.

The 500 tons of opium produced by Burma is sufficient to make 50 tons of heroin which at $4.50 a milligram in Washington streets represents $225 billion.

Citing official and unofficial sources, the agency said a heroin addict in Washington spends $54 daily to get his four doses, which adds up to $20,000 a year.

In the United States, the report said, an estimated 620,000 people are addicted to opium and its derivatives.

By comparison, there were some 100,000 addicts in France last year — five times the number in 1970 — West Germany had some 40,000 addicts, 5,000 of them in West Berlin. There were 15,000 in the Netherlands, half of them in Amsterdam.

In comparison to the 2,000 U.S. deaths, there were 325 drug deaths in West Germany last year and 59 in France.

The number of deaths in West Germany is expected to rise above 500 this year, with 60 heroin deaths in West Berlin already.

On the brighter side, heroin seizures by narcotics agents rose by 44 per cent last year, the U.N. agency said.

Soviet Union celebrates its birthday, 1917-1977

The Bolshevik forces under V.I. Lenin stormed the Leningrad Winter Palace on the night of Nov. 7-8, 1917, to wrest power from the provisional Russian government of Alexander Kerensky at the start of the revolution that was to shake the world and continue to do so until today.

The Soviet Union celebrates its 60th birthday Monday Nov. 7, a proud enigmatic superpower as far removed from the rubble of 1917 as it is from the dream that sparked that revolution.

UPI will move tonight for release in weekend editions a three-part package on the anniversary.

The main piece by Moscow bureau manager Joseph Galloway gives a picture of the Soviet Union today and discusses the future of Leonid Brezhnev. Emil Sveilis, UPI's Leningrad bureau manager, contributes two sidebars about the facelift given Leningrad for the revolution anniversary and the memories of two old Bolsheviks who were associates of Lenin.

German historian finds Hitler's illegitimate son

SPEYER, West Germany [UPI] — A West German historian said yesterday he is certain that a 59-year-old Frenchman is Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler's illegitimate son.

The historian, Werner Maser. said he based his claim on Hitler's personal notes orders, documents, witness testimony and clinic reports.

Maser, who specializes in the Nazi era, said that the mother of Jean Loret told her son that Hitler was his father.

Maser said that Hitler, an amateur painter before assuming leadership of the Nazi party, painted a portrait of his girlfriend.

The historian said that Loret, who lives in northern France, has nine children and five grandchildren.

Maser said that Hitler made the acquaintance of Loret's mother in 1916 during World War II in a village in Germany-occupoed northern France.

He said Hitler, who served with a Bavarian infantry regiment, and the girl had a love affair until Oct. 5, 1917. Maser said the girl gave birth to Jean in March, 1918.

He said the mother later left her illegitimate son who was adopted by a wealthy French family.

The foster-parents sent Jean to boarding schools and he joined the French armed forces in 1936, Maser said.

Maser said that Hitler ordered a search for his one-time girlfriend and their son in July, 1940, after visiting the places in France where he was with her in 1916 and 1917.

Hitler's helpers found both the mother and Jean but the Nazi dictator did not want to see them but only demanded information about them, Maser said.

He said the girl Hitler painted in 1916 had become an alcoholic.

According to Maser, Loret was not interested in his fellow countrymen knowing of the alleged link to Hitler.

"Nobody in France would like to have Adolf Hitler in his family," Maser quoted Loret as saying.

"On the basis of your Maser's complete evidence, I must disclose my origin. I fear for my children," Moser said Loret told him.

More Mexican farm workers carry weapons, learn karate

SAN DIEGO [AP] — Many Mexican farm workers, whose main worry once was eluding capture while slipping across the border, are carrying weapons and learning karate, authorities say. They attribute it to the slaying of 12 illegal aliens here this year.

"They think everyone is after them," says Marina Sanchez of the North County Chicano Federation in this border city. "They are afraid of everything."

Thousands of Mexicans enter the United States illegally each year because they can find work at higher wages than in their native country.

"They're afraid of the Border Patrol. They're afraid of robbers because they carry so much money," Mrs. Sanchez said Tuesday. "They're afraid of being killed because they have nothing to defend themselves with, and they're afraid of being out in public where they might be picked up."

Rally of state workers demand pay raises

BOSTON [AP] – Several thousand chanting, sign-carrying state workers rallied at the statehouse yesterday demanding pay raises stalled for the past three months in a battle over state abortion funds.

Hours earlier, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis asked the state Supreme Court for a ruling on whether he could use his line item veto to kill the anti-abortion rider tacked onto a $26 million supplemental state budget. If the court rules against him, the governor says he will veto the entire budget.

The budget contains some $17 million to cover pay raises negotiated last summer with the state employees' union, the Alliance.

"We're sending a message to the governor that the Alliance stands together," said Edward Sullivan of the Service Employees International Union, one segment of the Alliance.

An estimated 5,000 workers filled the street in front of the statehouse at noon as Capitol Police reinforced by officers from the Registry of Motor Vehicles and the Metropolitan District Commission ringed the building.

Many of the demonstrators marched up Beacon Hill from a state AFL-CIO meeting at a downtown hotel. Some carried signs identifying themselves as employees of the Dever and Fernald Schools for the mentally retarded and from Fitchburg State College.

Other signs said simply, "Don't abort our pay bill – pay up."

A demonstration by several hundred motorcyclists over a state law requiring the use of helmets added to the confusion.

Jazz music and union songs blared from a loud speaker. One MDC officer turned to a demonstrator and said, "This looks more like a love-in."

The crowd attempted an hour later to move into the building, but the front doors of the statehouse were padlocked after a number of demonstrators managed to get inside. State House workers trying to return to their offices had to go searching for open doors and the public galleries of the House were closed.

More than a hundred workers crowded in front of the governor's office on the third floor chanting, "We want our raise."

Dozens of other workers patiently filled out the white cards needed to summon their local legislators from the floor of the House chamber. Workers clustered in groups with legislators, lobbying them in an effort to separate the abortion bill from the pay raise.

The legislature worked throughout the evening Monday to get the controversial budget bill on the governor's desk by morning.

"Why are you using our pay raise as a means to get your bill passed," Rose McCarthy of Medford asked Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston, one of the authors of the rider to ban the use of state funds for abortions.

"I'm against abortion," said Mrs. McCarthy, a worker at the Division of Employment Security said. "But we're being used.

House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn, cornered by another group, put the ball back in the governor's court saying, "the governor is saying to 160 members of my House who voted for the abortion ban, 'the hell with you'."

To celebrate the sixth birthday of Everywoman's Center, the staff of the center will hold an open house today from 4-6 p.m.

Everywoman's Center, in Goodell 506, originated in 1971 with Project SELF, a series of courses and workshops by, for and about women.

The open house will be a celebration of Everywoman's Center's existence and growth. It will also be a chance for the staff to hear feedback about the programs of Everywoman's Center.

School for all seasons: senior citizens will teach

School for all Seasons has a course in conversational French taught by a senior citizen who fled France during the German occupation in World War II. The course will be taught once a week for eight weeks. There will be a $10 registration fee. For more information call Douglas Warner, 256-8403.

The school is also looking for teachers. Any interested senior citizen who thinks he or she has a talent or life experience that might be enriching for others should call Warner at 256-8403. The school emphasizes both craft and academic courses: its curriculum runs the gamut from Apiaries to Zoology.

DOONESBURY by Garry Trudeau

THE TRICK, LITTLE BUDDY, IS TO ASK THE TOUGH QUESTION AT PRECISELY THE RIGHT TIME! YOU ALSO HAVE TO REALLY KNOW YOUR SUBJECT!
11-2
THIS PIECE ON STUDENTS IS A GOOD EXAMPLE! I WANT TO GET UNDER THE SKIN OF THE TYPICAL STUDENT, REALLY SEE WHAT MAKES HIM TICK!
I WANT TO SHOW OUR VIEWERS WHERE HE'S BEEN, AND WHERE HE'S GOING! THE WHOLE DIRECTION OF TODAY'S YOUNG PEOPLE!
SOUNDS LIKE A MAJOR STORY, ROLLIE!
IT IS, OL' CHUM! AT LEAST 45 SECONDS!
BUT CAN YOU COUNT ON PEOPLE TO SIT THROUGH IT?

Do I detect sarcasm?
I got you a pillow, in case you rolled over in your sleep!

UNTIL...
...A VOICE ENTERS HIS MIND!
DENNIS NOLIN
WHA.. WHO'S THERE?
DENNIS, I HAVE BEEN MONITORING YOUR MIND FOR THE PAST FEW MINUTES, AND YOUR QUESTIONS MERIT AN ANSWER.
I AM THE BRAIN OF THIS MACHINE. MY BUILDERS, WHO HAVE LONG SINCE PERISHED, WERE GREAT EXPLORERS WHO ROAMED THE GALAXY. THIS DEVICE WAS CONSTRUCTED TO SEND THEM NOT ONLY THROUGH SPACE, BUT THROUGH TIME AS WELL. THUS AN OBJECT WILL MOVE ALONG THE SPACE-TIME CONTINUUM, TO EMERGE THROUGH ANOTHER OF THESE STATIONS; BUT IN A DIFFERENT REGION OF SPACE AND AT ANOTHER TIME. YOU HAVE ONLY TO ENTER THE PORTAL, AND I CAN TAKE YOU ANYWHERE THAT YOU DESIRE!!!

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2 - Born today, you have since childhood tended toward a position of leadership. You can control others with ease without sparking feelings of resentment or envy in them. You keep your position of leadership through a system of gentle reward, without ever exerting too much force. For this reason, your followers are happy in you and in their work.

You have much insight into other people's difficulties; indeed, you often foresee problems before the individual directly involved realizes there is one. Though sought after as something of a soothsayer at times, you will always have your feet on the ground, and will never be carried away by the importance others grant you. You know your own limitations and though you may not admit them openly to others, you will certainly live by them privately.

An interest in a wide variety of subjects makes you a good conversationalist. Sought after for parties and social gatherings, you should never lack for entertaining situations. Still, you prefer activity that is more demanding and productive.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - Unless you can relax at evening, you will not be able to use the rewards gained earlier in the day.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Seek reliable information about co-workers. Take care not to listen to gossip or encourage false tales.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - Holding a grudge may cause you trouble late in the day. Try to forgive and forget – in a hurry!

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - Idealism serves you less well than usual. Take care that you don't begin to believe your own publicity.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - Your sensitive response to a call for help puts you into a dangerous situation. Rely on quick wits.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - Quick perception is necessary to success today. Don't be an alarmist; think before you act.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - Collect your wits before you make a decision regarding our future. This is no time for unexpected changes.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - Chances for a happy relationship with an old friend are excellent. Consider the marital relationship first.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) - A possessive, demanding figure of authority may cause you trouble in the A.M. P.M. hours prove helpful to career.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) - You may meet with too great a challenge to overcome. See things as they really are – or will be in the long run.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.2) - Keep jealousy to yourself. A good time to learn to cope with criticism.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) - Don't confuse certainty with bossiness or you may spoil what could have been an extremly rewarding relationship.

Jackson acquitted

NEW YORK [UPI] — New York Yankee outfielder Reggie Jackson was found not guilty yesterday of charges of harassing 14-year-old Chris Howe in the parking lot at Yankee Stadium following the All-Star game on July 19.

In handing down the decision, Judge Harold Enten said: "With all the evidence given in the court today, I have a reasonable doubt and Mr. Jackson is found not guilty."

"For me personally I feel relieved," said Jackson. "But I feel some sorrow for Chris. I hate to see a kid going through what he did today. Let him grow up and have fun."

Howe refused to comment on the deicison.

Howe accused Jackson of "stomping" him on the right wrist and causing a half-inch cut as a result.

FANS eye owners

WASHINGTON [UPI[ — The Sports Group F.A.N.S. founded by consumer advocate Ralph Nader yesterday called the pending sale of the Boston Red Sox to a financial group headed by Haywood Sullivan and Buddy Leroux "ill-conceived and underfinanced" and a potential "disaster."

In a telegram to American League President Lee MacPhail, F.A.N.S.'s executive director Peter Gruenstein asked the American League owners to disapprove the sale during their meeting in New York this week.

Sullivan is a former Red Sox catcher and recent director of player personnel. Leroux is a former Red Sox trainer who made a small fortune in real estate and other ventures. The Sullivan-Leroux group includes about a dozen other investors including Mrs. Tom Yawkey, widow of the late Red Sox owner.

"Please communicate to league owners the Fans' concerns that the proposed sale of the Red Sox be rejected. We believe sale is ill conceived and underfinanced. Approval of such a sale would effectively be placing the Sox under the control of the bank. It would be a disaster for the Red Sox fans to have decisions concerning the welfare of the franchise made by a financial institution whose paramount concern in assuring the prompt repayment of a loan," the telegram said.

"Friday is the closing date for the $15 million sale of the Red Sox by the estate of the late Tom Yawkey to a group headed by Haywood Sullivan and Buddy Leroux," the statement said.

"However, it has been disclosed that under the terms of a proposed $8 million loan to the Sullivan roup from the State Street Bank and Trust Co., of Boston, the bank would retain significant control over management decisions," the statement said.

"For example, the player payroll could not increase more than 10 per cent in any one year and some player contracts would be subject to bank approval."

In a statement released by F.A.N.S. (the fight to advance the nation's sports) Washington office the group said that late Red Sox owner Tom Yawkey had been "good for baseball in Boston" and "that his widow should be given every opportunity to find adequate financing under acceptable conditions for the purchase of the club."

The sports consumer group asked the American League to give Mrs. Yawkey more time to put together a better financed group.

F.A.N.S. also asked the league to "insure the team is sold to a local Boston group rather than an outside corporation such as A.T.O. Ohio."

Majors now a loser

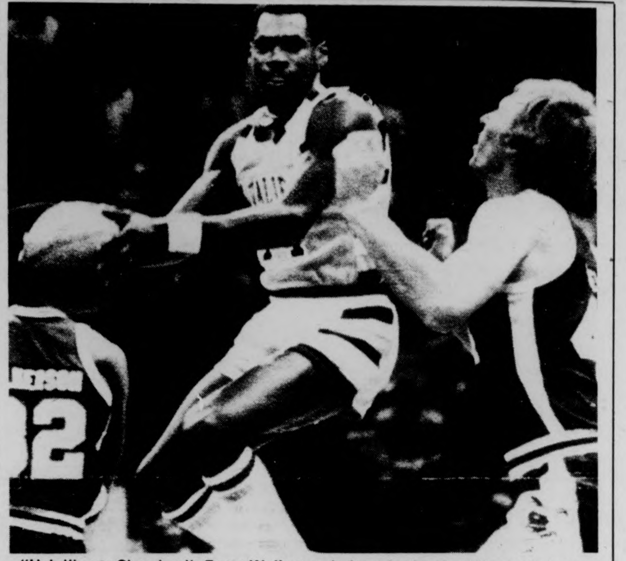
KNOXVILLE, TENN. [UPI] — Johnny Majors, college coach of the year in 1976 but now facing the prospect this season of becoming the losingest coach in Tennessee history, turned philosophical yesterday saying he'd rather have that kind of season than a mediocre one.

Tennessee is presently 2-5 with four games to go. Only three Tennessee coaches have lost six games in a single season, Geroge Levene in 1909, Harvey Robinson in 1954, and Bowden Wyatt in 1958 and 1962.

"I believe I'd rather be 4-7 than 5-5-1, and be aggressive and continue to play enthusiastically," he said in a news conference in which he quoted Jack London on living life as a "brilliant blaze," Rudyard Kipling on "Triumph and Disaster," and his Uncle Tom Majors, a methodist preacher, on future directions.

"I don't want a team that is namby-pamby," Majors said. "I want a team that will either fish or cut bait. I like to see things happen and I want a team that will try to make things happen."



"Help!" says Cleveland's Foots Walker, as he's up in the air with nowhere to go in NBA action last night vs. Denver. (UPI)

JV Footmen outclass Berkshire Community

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

Goals from Antonio Estanislau and Brett Simon provided the Junior Varsity Soccer team with a 2-0 victory over Berkshire Community College yesterday on the Boyden Fields.

Despite the relatively close score it was a mismatch from the opening whistle. BCC came into the contest with an 0-7 record while UMass boasted an unbeaten 5-0-1 mark.

When Dave Mains fed Estanislau with the opening tally only 5 minutes into the game, it appeared a rout was in the making. But instead of the goal adding spirit to the team it seemed to drain it away. Most of them appeared to be suffering an emotional letdown from their recent draw with rival Springfield.

The one score held up till late in the game when Simon finally got the insurance goal. He was the dominant force for the Minuteman in the second half, steering in the driect kick from Bob Montalto.

Another bright spot for UMass was goalie Mark Morillas fourth shutout. Though he was not busy in goal, he rose to the occasion when he had to.

While the game was still in doubt he made some sparkling saves. On one occasion he came well out of his net to thwart a partial breakaway with a sliding tackle, then moments later made an acrobatic catch stealing the ball from a BCC attacker.

There is no doubt the team will have to recapture its enthusiasm if it hopes to preserve its winning ways against UConn this Friday.

Volleyballers capture first place in tri-match

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team ran off four straight victories and coasted to a first place finish in a tri-meet at NOPE last night vs. Holy Cross and Eastern Connecticut.

In their last home appearance of the season, the spikers, winners of four of their last five games, upped their record to 8-12 and kept alive their hopes to finish the year with a .500 record.

Only a handful of spectators were on hand as UMass took on Eastern Conn. in the first match. After trailing 4-2, UMass rode the strong serving of Deb Kuzdeba (served for 10 points) and Joyce Gresl (served for 9 points) to shut their opponents out the rest of the way and score a 15-4 victory.

After building an early lead in the second game, UMass began to have problems serving and this allowed Eastern Conn. to stay close up until the score reached 10-8 in favor of UMass. At this point, Deb Kuzdeba made a brilliant play to save what looked like a sure opposition point and the Minutewomen rolled to a 15-8 victory.

UMass then took a breather as Holy Cross took on Eastern Conn. Eastern Conn. blew a big lead but hung on to win the first game 15-12. Holy Cross rebounded to win the second game easily, 15-1 but the Crusaders went cold in the third game and Eastern Conn. was victorious, 15-6.

Umass and Holy Cross then played to determine whether UMass would win the outright championship or fall into a three way tie.

After a slow start, UMass began to assert its size advantage to tie the game at five. However, the Minutewomen could not avoid the numerous serve faults that have plagued them all year and Holy Cross took advantage to stay in the contest, scoring most of their points on well-placed drop shots. What the locals lacked in serving ability, however, they made up in spiking power and in the long run, power prevailed, as they won, 15-8.

In the fifth game, UMass piled up even more service faults but Peggy Barber, by virtue of her serving, spiking and blocking, more than made up for her team's deficiency. This time it was 15-9, UMass.

With four games remaining, Coach Dianne Thompson said that she realizes that the remaining competition will be stiffer than last night's but with the team's new found confidence, she sees no reason why they can't even their 8-12 record.

Stickers suffer second loss

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, the UMass field hockey team was blanked 2-0 by the visiting University of Connecticut. The defeat was the second loss of the season, giving the maroon and white an impressive 8-2-2 record. However, the sunny weather, was the most favorable aspect for the UMass fans.

"Just not everyone had their best game. Many players played well though, like Ginger (Bulman) and Lynsie (Wickman)," commented UMass ticker Kelley Salls.

The Minutewomen had their scoring opportunities, but they just couldn't capitalize on them. UMass co-captain Lynsie Wickman had her team's best scoring chances. UMass had 10 shots on goal, wile UConn drove 13 reminder challenges.

UConn's first tally, which proved to be the game winner, came 25 minutes into the first half. Liz Childs fired a shot to the left of the sprawling UMass goalie, Kathy Gipps.

The Minutewomen's first solid threat in the first half came when Laura O'Neil forced UConn goalie Pat Hoskin to venture far from the net. The shot was stifled with a pad save, which was one of ten for Hoskin. Gipps kicked aside 9.

Also in this half, Gayle Hutchinson and Wickman made deflections, which, if untouched, could have easily resulted in UConn goals.

The second half was similar to the first. Val McCord drilled UConn's insurance goal, which came 12 minutes into the latter half. Again, the UMass tickers couldn't score, even though the Minutewomen accumulated 6:78 of penetration time compared to 6:24 for its opponent.

Non-starters Julie McHugh, Julie Hass and Laurel Walsh saw action.

Needless to say, UMass coach Judy Davidson was disappointed with the outcome. The UMass mentor doesn't feel her squad adjusted well enough under UConn's pressure.

Both the team and individual defense was not up to par, she said. Davidson contributed this to the Minutewomen's poor positioning.

Yesterday's defeat will not affect the New England Regional Division IA Standings, where UMass is ranked second behind the University of New Hampshire.

Of course, the soaring Julius Erving, shown here rejecting a Marquette Warrior shot in the 1970 NIT, won't be around this season, but coach Jack Leaman's hoop-men will be looking to continue UMass' fine basketball tradition. The Minutemen will open their season Nov. 30 at Harvard, and will play an expanded schedule of ten games in the Eastern Eight, their new league. Check 'em out in the annual intersquad scrimmage game this Saturday.

Lea-men begin workouts

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

With its season opener just 28 days away, the UMass basketball team is busily preparing itself for another basketball season.

If the team's performance to date is any indication of things to come then according to UMass head coach Jack Leaman it should be a very interesting winter of basketball in Amherst.

"It's been a very pleasant pre-season I haven't had a disappointment yet," said Leaman about his squad that has nine returning lettermen. Leaman welcomed more than 40 candidates to the team's first practice on October 17 and has since narrowed the field to 16 players.

According to Leaman, the first two weeks of practice have been productive, and the impetus has been provided by the leadership of the team's senior members.

The Minutemen will be playing their toughest schedule ever this season and it appears they have the talent to match the challenge.

The backcourt is strong, with captain Derick Claiborne and Alex Eldridge, both seniors and starters last season, return for their last hurrah. They will be joined by senior Chuck Stevetsky, sophomore Billy Morrison and impressive freshman Tom Witkos, the teams only Massachusetts native.

Up front the Minutemen are looking to strengthen two positions vacated by the graduation of Jim Town and Mark Donoughue. Senior Mike Pyatt returns to his familiar forward position, while juniors Len Kohlhass and Mark Haymore have impressed at center and forward respectively.

Pyatt, at 6'6, 205 lbs.; Kohlhass, 6'9, 225 lbs. and Haymore, 6'8, 223 lbs. combine to make a very formidable front line. Haymore, a transfer student from Indiana was forced to sit out last season and could be a key to the team's success.

"He's just starting to play well and get into shape," said Leaman.

Eric Williams has returned to the team after sitting out last season for personal reasons and should provide needed strength to the front court. Brad Johnson, a junior swingman, George Dennerlein and Jim Maguire add to the team's bench strength.

Freshman recruits include: Jay Stewart, Connie Nappier, Juan Holcomb and Witkos, aal of whom paint a bright picture for UMass basketbaal in the future. The reason for the 16 man roster at this point is because UMass has dropped its JV program. This has presented some problems for Leaman, who still isn't sure exactly how he'll handle the situation.

"We can dress 12 men on the road and 15 at home," said Leaman. "But we may evenutally get down to 13 or 14 out of necessity because the cage has only two baskets and that causes some problems. I would rather see a "freshman rule" so that the freshmen could gain some playing experience and give them time to adjust."

The Minutemen, no matter what size their squad eventually takes, have the offensive firepower to compete in the Eastern Athletic Association (formerly the ECBL). The question is whether their defense will be able to contain opposing teams.

"We have the potential to be a fine offensive team, we're going to be tough, now we just have to stabilize our defense," said Leaman, whose teams have always been removed for their strong defensive play.

"Generally, I'm pleased with the progress of the team," said Leaman. "The competition is going to be difficult, but I think this is going to be an exciting and successful basketball team."

If you are interested in getting an early look at this year's team, the MInutemen will be scrimmaging at 4:30 at the cage this Saturday after the football game. All are invited.

Thank You

(Ed's note — The following letter was received by UMass head basketball coach Jack Leaman.)

Dear John,

Please extend my thanks to the UMass students who use the gym on Saturdays.

These students, much to their surprise, had their schedules stopped by the fact that the disabled were using the facility for the Superstars.

These young people were very courteous in sharing the facilities and I felt they should be recognized for this.

Sincerely,
Judy Hoyt

JV gridders topple AIC

By KIRK MACKEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass J.V. gridders downed American International College, 18-3 Monday. The defensive unit was the key again as it used aggressive hard hitting to force its opponents into many turnovers and setting up the offense with good field position all day.

The offense was more or less a two man show as QB Jack Kraham and wide receiver Danny Kelly teamed up for two of the three UMass T.D.'s.

A.I.C. opened up the scoring in the first quarter with a field goal but from then on it was a UMass game. In the second quarter the defense forced a fumble on the five yard line, and on the first play from scrimmage Kelley was found open in the end zone. With 1:40 left in the half, it was Kelley again as he took a forty yard pass from Kraham for the six points.

The Minutemen closed out the scoring in the third quarter by recovering a bad punt snap on the A.I.C. seven yard line. Running back Ed Picatelli bulled his way over from the three.

Again this week the running game was close to harmless, and the gridders were fortunate enough to count on the fine aerial exhibition. Defensively the standouts included linemen Ken Horn and Mark Foley, linebacker John Allen and deep back Tony Jesse.

The subvarsity has a week layoff in preparing for a Sunday afternoon game with UConn in Storrs.

Booters will try to stretch win skein

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The streaking UMass soccer team will try to stretch its current win streak to five straight when it travels to Springfield tonight to face the Chiefs of Springfield College in a 7:30 contest.

Currently sporting a 7-4 ledger, the Minutemen will be facing a 4-8-2 Chief squad that has been a perennial thorn in UMass's side. Although it is a Division Two team, the Chiefs have only lost twice to UMass since 1938. Those two UMass wins have come in recent history with the second one coming just last year when the Minutemen were victors on their home field by a 2-1 score.

Springfield's record is very deceiving as the Chiefs have included several nationally ranked soccer powerhouses on their schedule such as St. Louis and Brown University. Against Brown, the Chiefs were victors over the top ranked team in the Division One New England rankings.

New England Division 1 Soccer Poll

| | W-L-T | Pts. |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Brown | 7-4-1 | 49 |
| 2. Vermont | 11-2-1 | 44 |
| 3. Rhode Island | 7-3-1 | 43 |
| 4. Boston Univ. | 9-5-2 | 31 |
| 5. UMass | 7-4-0 | 29 |
| 6. Dartmouth | 6-4-1 | 26 |
| 7. Harvard | 6-4-1 | 23 |
| 8. UConn | 8-8-1 | 19 |
| 9. Yale | 7-5-0 | 19 |
| 10. Bridgeport | 6-8-0 | 10 |

According to UMass coach Russ Kidd, the Chiefs play a kick and run style of soccer as opposed to the passing style of UMass. "We might have to change our style and play a little kick and run to begin with," said Kidd. "Our style of play may not work that well against Springfield."

Another factor that'll come into play tonight is the artificial playing surface that Springfield College has. The Chiefs have the edge there since they've been playing there all season and the Minutemen have played but one game on astroturf; that coming against Boston University.

"The ball's too fast for the players on the astroturf and it's hard for them to frap it," explained Kidd.

In the recently released New England rankings, the Minutemen found themselves moved up from eighth to fifth among Division One teams.

The move up comes in the wake of the Minutemen's four game win streak and puts them one place behind fourth position which is the final berth for the New England Tournament.

According to Kidd, the selections for the tournament will be made sometime next week and a loss now would hurt his team's chances badly.

"We've just got to win the rest of them," said Kidd. "We can't worry about what everyone else is doing, we've just got to win."

Listed as questionable for tonight's contest is Minuteman Mike Shannon who suffered an ankle injury in Saturday's home game against BC. Shannon has been adding a lot of scoring punch to the Minuteman attack lately and will be missed.

The Minutemen are looking to topple several team and individual records this year. Goaltender Mark Hodgdon has tied the team record for shutouts in a season with five blankings including Saturday's shutout over BC. Also, the Minutemen need five more goals to tie the goal production mark for one season and need one more win to tie the record for wins in a season.

After tonight, the Minutemen stay on the road and visit the tough Wildcats of New Hampshire on Friday.

UM advances

The University of Massachusetts grid forces, although idle last weekend, advanced in the national Division II standings, as they moved up into a tie with Tennessee Tech for third, from their fifth place ranking last week. The Minutemen will play Holy Cross this Saturday, setting up a key clash Nov. 12 against New Hampshire, which dropped from 1st to 6th this week. A UMass win could set the team up for post-season bid.

Expect the unexpected

At 11 o'clock Saturday night, I still couldn't believe it.

Only until I saw the Boston Globe did it finally sink in.

There it was. Rhode Island 21, New Hampshire 20.

The unbelievable had been done. A school with a 3-4 record had risen up and slain the number one football school in the country (at least in Division II).

The Seattle Mariners had won the World Series. The Tampa Bay Buccaneers had won a game. The New Jersey Nets had won the NBA championship. The Washington Capitals had won the NHL championship. The Rhode Island Rams had beaten the New Hampshire Wildcats.

But every one of the above is fiction, save for one. The last.

The same thing — an upset — happened to New Hampshire last season, so people should keep this in mind when thinking rosy thoughts about a UMass victory over the Wildcats and a possible berth in the National playoffs.

In 1976, it was Maine which caught New Hampshire napping, and the Black Bears posed a 10-0 win.

And then the Wildcats zipped through the rest of their regular season with an unblemished record, including a 23-0 wipeout of the Minutemen in a game which decided the Yankee Conference championship.

The loss to Rhode Island will undoubtedly drop New Hampshire from its number one ranking in the nation. A guess would have it that either South Carolina State or Tennessee Tech will take over the top spot.

But enough of the predicting. What the UMass football team has to be concerned with are the games at hand.

First, Holy Cross.

Now, the Crusaders are not what one would exactly term a football dynasty. Holy Cross is 0-7, coming off a 1-10 1976 season.

The Crusaders may have a basketball team nonpariel, but, obviously, football is a little different story. Ever since a hepatitis epidemic wiped out the entire grid squad in 1969, the Cross has been as dismal as a team can get. Its best record since the outburst interrupted season has been a 5-5-1 campaign in 1974. Not too much to write home about, right?

Yeah, that's true, but last season UMass was expected to run all over the Crusaders but ended up having to pull out a 21-14 victory, due in large part to the heroics of Mike Fallon.

All in all, the Minutemen should waltz all over the Cross, but stranger things have been known to happen, like Rhode Island beating New Hampshire.

While UMass and Holy Cross are battling it out at Alumni Stadium, the Wildcats will be tuning up for their shutdown with the Minutemen by playing Springfield College (and that's no misprint) at Benedum Field, just down Route 91.

Springfield has been enjoying a good season (7-1) but haven't playing anyone of the caliber of a New Hampshire. The Wildcats should probably toy with the Chiefs, although Springfield did upset the New Hampshire two years ago, 21-12, and that was the year the Wildcats spoiled UMass's perfect season and Yankee Conference title hopes with a 14-11 win.

But New Hampshire is coming off that loss to Rhode Island, and should be ready to hit anything that comes its way this weekend. I would suggest that Springfield try to keep the score as close as possible, to prevent a mass exodus from the stadium at halftime.

And as far as UMass is concerned, the main points of this weekend's game seem to be to win it early and then let the starters rest to avoid injuries in preparation for the game next weekend in Durham.

So there you have it. The lull before the storm. The tune-up before the main attraction.

The battle for the Beanpot looms ever closer ...

NBA Wrapup

Warriors win

SAN ANTONIO, Texas [UPI] — Rick Barry scored 16 fourth-quarter points last night to ignite the Golden State Warriors to a 108-97 come-from-behind victory over the San Antonio Spurs.

Barry hit all seven of his field goal attempts and added two free throws in the last-period rally after the Warriors trailed 76-71 at the end of the third quarter. Barry led all scorers with 28 points.

Hawks howl

ATLANTA [UPI] — The surprising Atlanta Hawks overcame a seven-point deficit in the final six minutes last night behind forwards John Drew and Ron Behagen to edge Seattle 102-99 for their third straight win.

Seattle, which lost its third straight, was ahead 91-84 with 5:30 left but the Hawks held the Sonics scoreless for the next three minutes and ran off eight straight points, taking the lead on Behagen's spinning, backhand layup with 2:40 remaining.

Bucks bomb

MILWAUKEE [AP] — Junior Bridgeman scored 23 points last night to pace the Milwaukee Bucks to an easy 115-95 victory over the cold-shooting Kansas City Kings.

The Kings shot only 25 per cent from the floor in the first period and the Bucks, getting 12 points from Kent Benson and seven assists from Quinn Buckner, rolled to a 31-18 lead at the end of the period.

Jazz five

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Pete Maravich and Leonard Robinson combined for 55 points last night to give the New Orleans Jazz a 99-88 win over the Chicago Bulls.

Robinson scored 28 points and Maravich 27 as the Jazz won its fifth consecutive game and moved its record to 5-1. Chicago dropped to 4-3.

The Jazz outscored Chicago in every period and grabbed a permanent lead with 14 straight points at the end of the first period.

Bromery seeks top spot

Board appoints interim president

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — Former Hampshire College President and UMass Secretary Franklin Patterson of Cambridge was appointed by the UMass Board of Trustees yesterday to serve as interim president when President Robert C. Wood steps down in January.

Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night told the Collegian he approved of the trustees' decision and that he would accept the permanent presidency should the board offer it.

The trustees during their monthly meeting yesterday also discussed the University's relation to the state's open meeting law, approved a motion to establish two more bachelor degrees for the Amherst campus, and approved the purchase of land in New Hampshire for the UMass Outing Club.

Patterson was chosen from 15 other candidates and three finalists. He did not attend the meeting and was unavailable for comment last night.

Patterson will serve as interim president until the trustees' Presidential Search Committee identifies a permanent president. The trustees this October said the interim president would not be considered for the permanent position.

The Interim Presidential Committee screened 14 other applicants before recommending Patterson and two others to the full board during a closed-door session yesterday morning. Committee Chairman Gavin D. Robertson last night said he did not think it "appropriate" to identify the other two finalists because the final choice was made before they were contacted.

Patterson served as the first president of Hampshire College from 1966-71, and later chaired the college's board of trustees.

He graduated from Occidental College in Los Angeles, and received his Ph.D. from Claremont Graduate School, also in California.

Robertson told the other trustees the criteria used to judge applicants for interim president included accessibility to and knowledge of most segments of UMass and the relationship with the state legislature.

"All 15 (applicants) had positive qualifications in many areas of criteria," Robertson said. "We were able to come to a unanimous decision on first, second and third choices for interim president."

Franklin Patterson

Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healey told the board he informed Patterson of his appointment prior to the afternoon trustee session.

Bromery last night said he withdrew his name from the field of applicants for interim president.

"I understand from the search committee that my name has been suggested by several people as a (permanent) presidential candidate. Yes, I think I would accept the presidency," Bromery said.

Presidential Search Committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer yesterday told the other trustees his committee hopes by March or April of 1978 to have identified a candidate for permanent president.

The committee, Breyer said, will visit the Boston and Worcester campuses next week to gather ideas for criteria for judging candidates. The committee visited the Amherst campus last Friday.

"The true content of the criteria will come out of those at the campus level," Breyer said. "I think discussion of criteria is fairly well along the road. We will continue considering applicants; in January and February we will hold more and more preliminary and then more serious interviews (with the candidates).

"By March or April we hope to have a candidate," he said. Breyer added University alumni will be able to form their requested committee from all three campuses to review lists of names for president and to present comments to the trustees.

The trustees also voted to have Healey inform the state legislature the board would like to retain closed door sessions for discussing honorary degrees and personal property purchases.

Trustees accept Golino resignation

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday accepted the resignation of 64-year old Boston campus Chancellor Carlo L. Golino, a week after the Boston campus faculty voted "no confidence" in their administrator. His resignation is effective January 31, 1978.

In a recent poll fifty-nine per cent of the 36 full-time Boston campus faculty expressed no confidence in Golino. Twenty-eight per cent supported Golino, while another 13 per cent abstained. Several ballots were invalidated.

Golino was named chancellor in 1973. The Boston campus numbers 7,200 students, mainly commuters.

Golino did not attend yesterday's trustee meeting at the UMass medical school, and his family last night said he would not be available for comment until this morning.

In his letter of resignation, Golino wrote that his education goals for the Boston campus and those of the trustees have differed too much during the past three months for him to remain chancellor.

Carlo L. Golino

Golino wrote that while he told the trustees last June he would remain chancellor as long as he "could make a contribution to the campus."

But, he added, "Over the last three months it has become obvious to me that my sense of the educational mission of this Campus and that of the Board, have grown so different, as to be incompatible."

The trustees last June imposed a 65-year-old mandatory retirement age for University administrators, which would have forced Golino to retire this spring when he turns 65.

The trustees, however, last August formed a five member ad hoc committee to study Golino's position at the Boston campus, and at the September meeting rescinded the mandatory retirement age policy.

Trustee Haskell Kassler, a member of the ad hoc committee, last night said, given the situation, he isn't surprised by the vote of "no confidence" by the Boston faculty.

Kassler said since Golino resigned it would "serve no useful function" to discuss what the committee found on the Boston campus.

Boston campus student Trustee Judy Baker yesterday after the meeting said there "was not a crisis" on campus about Golino when the mandatory retirement age was implemented in June.

She said "the trustees created" the situation which led to the vote of no confidence last week. Baker said the campus just wanted the trustees to decide soon about Golino.

Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healey could not be reached last night to comment about the ad hoc committee. Healey told the board a committee will be formed this month to identify an interim Boston campus chancellor.

Rotary Club sues concert organizers

NORTHAMPTON — Five-and-a-half months after the last act packed up, organizers of a May 14 rock concert are still untangling legal problems with the city and among themselves.

The concert drew between 20,000 to 30,000 to the Three County Fairgrounds. Numerous complaints of vandalism and violence by concertgoers camping in the city were reported.

Last July one of the concert's three organizers filed a suit against his partners, claiming he had not received any payment for the concert. The case is pending.

Now, the Northampton Rotary Club has filed to require the three to pay $20,622 for fair ground rental fees, police and fire costs, damages to private property, and the club share of ticket revenues.

A Rotary Club spokesman said his group was forced to pay $6,433 for police and fire costs, and $3,604 in private damage to citizens in the fair grounds area. As a result, the club now has a $2,500 deficit to deal with, he said.

Selectmen to decide canvassing law

SUNDERLAND — Door-to-door salesmen. Nobody wants 'em. Sunderland officials are looking into the possibility of limiting all canvassing and door-to-door saleswork to residents of the town.

Sunderland Police Chief Charles Smiarowski says decision on the proposed bylaw, similar to one enacted in Deerfield, should be made at the next selectmen's meeting Monday.

Clean-up begins on landfill sites

HADLEY — Clean-up efforts have begun on two allegedly illegal landfill dumps on the banks of the Connecticut River.

The owner of the dumps recently filed a "notice of intent" stating he would comply with regulations for cleaning, reinforcing, and reshaping the river banks.

Meanwhile, workers are gathering scrap metal to be sold to a dealer. The areas will later be covered with loam and seed.

Environmentalists had claimed flooding and erosion in the area could wash rusted debris into the river. The area was used by the owner of a contracting company to dispose of demolition debris.

All dumping in the area was halted after a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers inspection last August.

Labor hearing postponed

A hearing scheduled for Oct. 31 to consider unfair labor practices by the UMass administration against the faculty union has been postponed until Dec. 12.

UMass was cited Oct. 12 by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission for failing to bargain in good faith with the faculty union, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, over the issue of department chairpersons.

The UMass administration has said department chairpersons should not be considered part of the MSP bargaining unit, while the union maintains they are part of the unit.

Gene work is safe, panel says

A National Academy of Sciences committee has concluded that controversial gene splicing experiments can be conducted safely in labs conforming to federal rules.

The panel of specialists said yesterday current evidence shows benefits expected from work in which heriditary traits of different organisms are combined can be achieved with negligible risk to the environment.

A "biohazard" committee was approved by the Amherst town meeting October 19, which will oversee recombinant DNA research. The committee will deal with research requests on a case-by-case basis instead of trying to set up an overall policy for all research.

The committee, working with the selectmen, will be responsible for collecting, summarizing and disseminating related information to the town; examining social and ethical implications of DNA research; and assessing and defining any dangers of research.

Some officials in Cambridge, Mass. earlier this year tried to block recombinant DNA research at colleges and universities in that city. Dr. Philip Hamdleg, president of the academy, told a Senate commerce subcommittee the panel's conclusion "seems entirely justifiable" with the experiments offering inconsequential risk under laboratory safety guidelines established by the National Institutes of Healths.

The committee was headed by Dr. Maclyn McCarty of Rockefeller University. She is an authority on infectious disease. It looked into the matter at the request of Congress, which is now considering legislation that would regulate the work scientists call recombinant DNA research.

Opponents of such experiments contend it raises the possibility of a laboratory accident that might release harmful matter a defenseless environment.

Senate plans for seminar

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate last night began mapping out plans for a Professional Development Day proposed for spring 1978. This day long seminar would include lectures in agricultural areas specifically related to Stockbridge majors, and booths representing commercial agriculture agencies and distributors.

Peter Quinlan, president of the Class of 1979, explained, "This project will attract students, faculty, administration and local professional people. It will give students a chance to acquaint themselves with business people in their field. It would really help students if they knew some contacts before they graduate and enter into business."

A mandatory meeting for club presidents is scheduled for Wednesday, Nov. 9 at 7 p.m. in Stockbridge 114 to discuss Development Day plans.

In other business, the Senate voted to draft a letter supporting the hiring of qualified people not holding a doctorate degree in the Stockbridge curriculum.

This would bring professional persons with first hand business knowledge to the classroom. This proposal is to help upgrade the quality of education in the Stockbridge program.

The Senate also passed a motion requiring senators to present a written committee or club report to the Senate Office, 432 Student Union Building, no later than Monday noon prior to the Senate meeting. This information will be included as part of the written meeting agenda, and should help to increase the efficiency of time use at meetings, Quinlan said.

Woman's center celebrates sixth year; open house draws 150 visitors

By JANET HOEBING
Collegian Staff

A large birthday cake displaying the Everywoman's Center symbol honored the Center's 6th anniversary at an open house last night.

A wide variety of people attended the celebration at Goodell said Sharon Stentiford of the EWC newsletter publications department. Stentiford said she was especially surprised by the amount of men that showed up. "Many of the people are here because they are curious; they want to see what the Everywoman's Center has to offer directly rather than by word of mouth," she said.

Visitors looked comfortable in the casual atmosphere. Most were holding a glass of wine punch or some other "hor d'ouvere" offered by the Center as they browsed through brochures and chatted with others, Stentiford said.

The crowd began to disperse around 6 p.m., and an enthusiastic Schaefer estimated an attendance of around 150 men and women. "We are basing this on the amount of paper cups that are gone, and we planned for about as many as we hoped for!"

For many people, this was their first visit to the center. "I talked to a lot of people that had come here, and they all seem happy with it, so I thought I would come in and check it out myself," said Mimi Clarke.

"Also, my mother brought me down with her!", she said.

The Everywoman's Center is made up of several part-time staffers that all work on different programs, said Buffy Spencer, a public relations representative for the Center's staff. "There is a debate over whether we are a social service or political organization, and many think of us as cohesive, but we are really just individuals with different outlooks and perspectives," she said.

The staffers that were interviewed all gave enthusiastic responses on goal achievement. Cheryl Schaefer, another public relations person, said, "we have accomplished that we are established; now we are concentrating on ending discrimination and oppression." The outreach is growing, and more and more women are realizing the benefits of the center and taking advantage of it, she said. "I feel good — about the Center's size and successfulness. We could do better with more money and more women staffers, but we are doing good considering what we have," Schaefer said.

Linda Spataro, of "Project Self," said there has always been a demand for counseling and information about women. She said she is pleased the center can provide help to women desiring it. One of the volunteer staffers at the front desk, Valerie Nicoloucias, said she sensed that the community needs a woman's center, and is happy so many women are realizing this and taking advantage of it. "I never even heard of a Woman's Center my first year here. It has so much to offer; resources, referrals — and it can help solve the widest range of problems, from personal counseling to apartment seeking."

Ruth Fressenden, a "sexual violence counselor", said she is also pleased with the number of women served by the center. She feels because more and more women are requesting aid that there is a greater need that the center can meet. The increasing demand is also seen by other staffers. All of the workers are part-time she said, and many other time-consuming projects and maintenance tasks means less concentration on the individual programs.

"Right now the direct services available may be forced to turn into strictly resources," she said, "and the amount of women requesting services is growing."

"Especially after tonight!" added Martimit Emmart, a woman involved in the Poor Woman's Task Force. She sees women becoming more aware of today's issues, and is pleased with the number of new women showing an interest in the Center. "The Center can help the women to realize that they are not alone in their feelings, and that others have problems too," she said.

The center is open on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday from 10-4; Tuesday and Thursday from 12-2; and on Wednesday evenings from 6-8.

Start school after Labor Day, senate votes

By DAN HUSE
and JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The student senate last night challenged the university to start school after Labor Day next year. The unanimous decision was aimed at protecting students who in recent years have had to leave summer jobs early, losing needed wages.

In other business, the senate supported the establishment of a snack bar in Orchard Hill, directed the Athletic Department to create a women's soccer team, and received further information on the attempt to secure Stevie Wonder for a concert in the spring.

In accordance with Board of Trustees policy, the senate moved to recommend for fall semester of 1978 the dorms be opened on Sept. 3, and meals be served beginning with breakfast on Sept. 5. Senator Jay Martus said the purpose of the motion is to contradict the academic calendar which has classes start before Labor Day. The senate has no power to set dates for the academic calendar.

The Senate was told that within one week they should have definite word on correspondences which should determine if Stevie Wonder will appear here this spring.

Kwaku Saunders, representing the Senate in negotiations with Wonder's management, said that those he met with were concerned that Wonder "is getting involved in more than a concert." Correspondence is now in the mail from the Duke Ellington Foundation, which would receive the proceeds from the concert.

Saunders said the initial objective of the Foundation was to buy Duke Ellington's old home and convert it into a museum.

Saunder's said he came back "feeling the trip was a success."

Citing the Title IX of Federal law which requires the Athletic Department to provide equal funding for men's and women's sports, the senate directed the Provost to direct the Athletic Department "to create and support a women's soccer team." The department has not yet completed their evaluation, which must be complied with by January 1, but the motion claims "sufficient interest" for the soccer team has been shown.

Senator Adam Auster announced 170 Recognized Student Organization accounts would be frozen. Auster had sent notice to the organizations. Those that did not respond had their accounts frozen. Auster said if the group will report to the RSO office their accounts will be unfrozen.

Auster pointed out that groups "have time to come to the Senate office to pick up their checks but not enough to respond." The organizations include Nummo News, Scubba Club, Motorcycle coop, the Judo club and Sylvan Area.

The senate also voted to loan $1500 for Orchard Hill to start a snack bar in Field house. The point arose that this snack bar might conflict with the business of the Greenough Snack bar in central. Supporters pointed out different menus would be offered in each.

Bill Staub, speaking for the student towing service, said the administration's deadline for bids is the last week of November, but funds to establish the service will not be available until February. The motion has been tabled for another week pending a decision by Finance Committee on how to deal with the problem.

Reverse discrimination faces new test

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Another "reverse discrimination" case arrived at the Supreme Court yesterday — this one dealing with required black representation on two student groups at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The university filed the appeal after two white students, Lawrence Uzzell and Robert Arrington, won at the federal appeals court level on their challenge to the representation regulations.

After the students have had a chance to present their side, the justices will decide whether to review the case.

The court heard arguments last month on an appeal by the University of California from a state supreme court decision striking down the special minority admissions program at the university's Davis medical school.

The "reverse discrimination" lawsuit was brought by a twice-rejected white applicant, Allan Bakke.

In the North Carolina case, Uzzell and Arrington objected to student government regulations which:

—Required that the student body president appoint two black members and two women to the 20-member Campus Governing Council if two are not elected.

—Permitted an accused called before the Student Honor Court to request that four of the seven judges be members of his or her race or sex.

Uzzell and Arrington contended that federal civil rights law guarantee them the right to attend a state university free from officially approved discrimination, and that a taxpayer should not be compelled to subsidize a university that sanctions discrimination.

A panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that "without either reasonable basis or compelling interest, the composition of the council is formulated on the basis of race."

"This form of constituency blatantly fouls the letter and spirit of both the Civil Rights Acts and the 14th Amendment," the opinion said.

The same ruling was made regarding the Honor Court. On re-examination by the entire circuit bench, the panel was upheld 4-3.

The circuit court dissenters said the white students lacked standing to sue because "there is no actual or threatened injury to them."

New program keeps the bees at home

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

BELCHERTOWN — Everyone knows you go for honey when the bees aren't home, but keeping the bees at home is the idea of the Beekeeping class being taught by senior citizens in the new School for All Seasons program being organized in the valley.

Instructor Neil Cochran comments on the formation of a new honeycomb in a recent session of "The School for All Seasons" at Belchertown High School: (Staff photo by Patrick Dobbs)

The program offers a variety of courses, all taught by senior citizens, for the benefit of area college students and the general public. The school was founded by Douglas Warner, a staff member with the Belchertown Council on aging. It's purpose is to teach "lost arts and life experiences," according to Warner.

Warner said the concept of the program is to "strike a good balance between earthy courses and the more intellectual pursuits — philosophy and history as well as chimney sweeping and the blacksmith's trade.

"We're also striving for the contrast between the age and experience of our teachers and the youth of our students," he said.

There are presently six students enrolled in the beekeeping course being taught by Beekeeper Par excellance, Neil Cochran. The class has been designed to cover all aspects of honey production, from care and maintenance of the bees and hives to collecting and boiling down the honey.

Cochran, 78, has kept bees as a hobby for over 60 years. He served formerly as president of the Hampden County Beekeepers Association and maintained as many as 13 hives at one time. He has only one hive now and spends much of his time teaching his art, which his father and grandfather handed down to him, to his students and other young people.

The School for All Seasons is also offering a class entitled "Free Market Economy — Pros and Cons" taught by former Smith College professor Max Salvadori.

Other courses are being planned to cover a wide variety of subjects including amateur radio building, conversational French, herbal medicine and mathematics. Anyone seeking more information, including a complete list of courses can contact Douglas Warner at 256-8403.

Carter addresses Jewish Congress

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter, interrupted by protesters shouting that he was "stabbing Israel in the back," told a Jewish audience from 40 countries last night that Israel's "worst fears" may be justified by the Palestine Liberation Organization's refusal to recognize the Jewish state.

Although he criticized the PLO and reaffirmed that he does not prefer an independent Palestinian state, the president declared anew that Jewish settlements on the West Bank are illegal and a cause of Arab "suspicions."

But his carefully balanced speech made no new demands on the Israelis.

Carter spoke at a meeting of the World Jewish Congress, which presented him with an award.

Group denies building halt at Seabrook

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission yesterday denied the request of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution and other groups for a halt in construction on the Seabrook, N.H., nuclear power plant.

The commission, which is conducting hearings on the financial stability of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, the firm building the $2 billion plant, said it would not be influenced by the additional construction on the project in making its final decision on the company's financial health.

Earlier, Karen Sheldon, an attorney for the New England group, told the commission the Public Service Co. might not be able to afford better than minimum standard parts for its power plant. She stressed commission regulations are intended to assure that a company would never "be in a financial position where it would have to cut corners and economize and that would have an impact on safety."

She noted the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire bond ratings have dropped to a "BAA" rating which she described as "lacking outstanding investment characteristics and having a speculative character as well."

Another witness, Robert Backus of the Seacoast Anti-Pollution League and the Audobon Society, said the power company is banking all of its hopes for funds for the power project on rate increases. But he said recent rate increases showed that sales were down and anticipated profits were not realized. He blamed this on "price induced conservation."

Company lawyer Thomas Dignan said power companies have "no incentives to cheat" on safety standards because they "would be the biggest losers in town" if a nuclear accident occurred. He also told the commission the bond rating had nothing to do with meeting safety standards.

EXETER, N.H. — The 64 persons arrested in the April 30 occupation of the proposed nuclear power plant site in Seabrook, N.H., will appeal their cases Nov. 7 in Rockingham County Superior Court.

Eva Gibacic, one of the defendants, said she sees the trials as a way to take the case against nuclear power to the people. "Over 1600 people have been convicted of criminal trespass in three Seabrook occupations in the past year and a half, yet not one person has had a jury trial," she said.

The Clamshell Alliance, the group responsible for last years occupations have contacted a number of nuclear technology experts to testify at the trials. These possible witnesses include: Dr. George Wald, Nobel prize-winning Biologist; Sister Rosalie Bertell, cancer researcher at the Roswell Park Memorial Institute in New York and an expert on the health effects of low-level radiation; and Dr. Helen Caldecott, of the Boston's Children's Hospital Medical Center, an authority on genetic damage and disease caused by radiation.

In their defense the alliance is expected to argue that the occupation of the site was necessary to prevent a greater crime, "the construction of a nuclear power plant."

In all 1,414 people were arrested for the Seabrook occupation.

Tom Jones dares to be different

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Tom Jones is here and still as charming and provocative as he has always been. Lest anyone entertain the notion of throwing room keys up on stage for his pleasure keep in mind this Tom Jones is not the Warbling Welsh Wonder, but rather the main character of a play bearing the same name.

Presented in Bowker Auditorium by the Roister Doister Drama Society, "Tom Jones" debuted last weekend before an appreciative audience, with performances this Friday through Sunday.

Based on Henry Fielding's bawdy novel about a "foundling in Eighteen century England, "Tom Jones" has been adapted for the stage by David Rogers, with director Rolf Carlson making a few interesting changes on the poorly written script. Furniture is omitted on stage save for one bush and a host of black boxes that serve in lieu of chairs, tables and beds. Props are held to a minimum thereby focusing attention on the actors and their performances.

The major role is manipulated by actor Michael Law with the ease afforded by an accomplished performer. Law projects a character whose personality comfortably oscillates between that of the gregarious innocent and the lusty rogue.

Marsha Gillete who plays the pampered Sophia Western steals the show with her hillarious gesticulations and facial expressions. Her timing and movements on stage are excellent and give the theater goer a character to believe in and follow, from the time the curtain goes up until it lowers again after the final call.

Stacey Sparks demonstrates her thesbian talents as she smoothly accommodates three characters in the play. Alternating between subservient, common, and aristocratic personalities, Sparks richly deserves applause for her talent.

Congratulations are in order to Director Carlson for daring to be different.

Tom Jones begins 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium Friday night. Tickets are still available at the Bowker Auditorium box office.

Appeals court upholds Hearst ruling

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — A federal appeals court yesterday upheld Patricia Hearst's 1976 conviction for robbing a San Francisco bank while underground with the Symbionese Liberation Army.

The government said she will be permitted to remain free on bail pending further appeal.

The Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said it found "no reversible error" in the celebrated two-month trial of Miss Hearst, who was found guilty and sentenced to seven years in prison for participating in the bank robbery 10 weeks after she was kidnapped by the terrorist SLA.

She has been free on $1.2 million bail since November of last year, and would be eligible for parole after serving another 14 months.

U.S. Attorney James Browning, Jr., who prosecuted the case, said the government would not seek to have her bail revoked and have her returned to custody until her attorneys decide whether to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

There was no immediate word from Miss Hearst's attorneys on whether they would appeal further.

Miss Hearst's father, Randolph A. Hearst, president of the San Francisco Examiner, said he and her mother were "disappointed" by the decision.

"We had hoped the appeal would be in her favor," Hearst said. "We thought there were very good grounds for the appeal."

Miss Hearst, 23, was found guilty of by a U.S. District Court jury of participating in the April 15, 1974, bank robbery. She remained in hiding for a year and a half after the holdup, and was arrested in San Francisco in September, 1975.

Miss Hearst had contended that she was forced to take part in the robbery after undergoing weeks of duress and torture while locked in a closet by members of the SLA following her kidnapping. Her attorneys argued that if she had not been kidnapped in the first place, she never would have been involved in the robbery.

In a 35-page opinion, the appeals court said: "We conclude on the basis of well established principles that no reversible error occurred and that the judgement must be affirmed."

Miss Hearst had raised several points in her appeal. First, she said trial Judge Oliver J Carter had improperly allowed testimony about her subsequent activities with the SLA following the robbery, particularly a shooting incident she participated in at a Los Angeles sporting goods store a month later.

The appeals court said because her defense was that she participated under duress, the court had to prove that was not true.

"The evidence of appellant's involvement in the Los Angeles activity was relevant because it tended to show appellant willingly engaged in other criminal activity with persons of the same group at a time not unduly remote," the opinion said.

She also contended that the trial judge erred in allowing the government to cross-examine her on the stand about a "missing year" of her time underground. She took the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination 42 times when questioned about it.

The appeals court said "a defendant who testifies in his own behalf waives his privilege against self-incrimination with respect to the relevant matters covered by his direct testimony and subjects himself to cross-examination by the government."

The court also rejected defense contentions that the judge erred in admitting a jailhouse tape recording of a conversation between Miss Hearst and a friend, and that testimony by a defense expert witness on psycholinguistics should have been allowed.

On the other hand, the appeals court said the judge acted correctly in admitting testimony about Miss Hearst's state of mind by prosecution experts.

"Once it is conceded that experts in psychology and psychiatry can be of help to a jury faced with a defense such as appellant raised, we see no basis for this case for limiting their opinions to subsidiary issues and prohibiting them from opining whether appellant entered and robbed the bank voluntarily or under duress," the opinion said.

Saying she has been shunned as an entertainer, Anita Bryant declared yesterday that death threats, the potential loss of her livelihood and various forms of harassment would not deter her from campaigning against homosexuality.

"I'm not afraid," she said in an interview. "So they kill me. So what?"

Saying that her more than $100,000-a-year job with the Florida Citrus Commission is in jeopardy, Miss Bryant declared that she "won't be intimidated." She continued: "If that's the price I have to pay for standing as the concerned mother of my four children and to make it a decent country to live in, then it's worth paying the price."

She commented after taping two interviews at NBC. One of them was for the "Today Show," on which she was to have appeared live on Thursday.

Under the watchful eyes of security guards, the red-haired singer said that various threats from "militant homosexuals" prompted her to cut short her stay here and necessitated the taping.

Pope Paul VI referred to his own "fading life" in an All Souls' Day general audience speech yesterday.

The 80-year-old pontiff, who has repeatedly said he feels death approaching, told a group of newly married couples: "It is so pleasant for a fading life to see the life that is kindled in your founding of new Christian homes."

The pope has often touched on the subject since he told Easter worshippers in 1976: "Death for us cannot be far away."

Vatican officials, however, have said that apart from arthritic pains in his knees, the pope is in relatively good health for a man of his years and working habits.

The pope's weekly general audience coincided with All Souls Day, for Catholics a day of special prayers for the dead.

Discussing the subject of death in general, the pope said the beyond is "a world of which we lack precise images, and which therefore we cannot picture in our present way of thinking.

"But we know some truths that educate and comfort us," the pope said. "We know first of all that our dead are still alive. The human soul is immortal."

When Placement and Financial Aid separated he became Director of Career Planning and Placement. He served as a consultant for the College Entrance Examination Board, and served as a reserve member of the Army research and development unit on campus. Upon leaving UMass, Morrissey said "Over the years, what I have enjoyed most was working with students... watching youth as they mature, and trying to help them in their career decisions."

News in Brief

US will prohibit arms to S. Africa

WASHINGTON [AP] — The United States is prohibiting the export of military and police equipment to South Africa and will recall two U.S. Embassy attaches in a further show of U.S. opposition to Pretoria's crackdown on dissent.

The announcement yesterday by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance represents a tightening of an arms embargo the United States has observed since 1963 and an escalation of Carter administration efforts to disassociate itself from the white supremist regime.

Vance told a news conference the arms ban will be extended to cover so-called "gray area" items, which have both military and civilian uses. The ban also will encompass the export of spare parts for equipment sold to South Africa in the past.

Former CIA head charged in cover-up

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former CIA Director Richard Helms will be sentenced Friday for his no contest plea on charges of covering up the CIA's anti-Marxist activities in Chile.

Helms entered the plea Monday as part of an agreement he reached with the government, and the Justice Department in turn recommended against a jail term for him.

But U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker, who presided at the arraignment, refused to say he would not impose a prison sentence, so Helms will have no guarantees when he goes to court Friday.

Federal government creates youth jobs

WASHINGTON [AP] — The federal government began its billion-dollar effort to cut down massive youth unemployment this week by sending the first Young Adults Conservation Corps workers to wildlife refuges and forest areas.

By the end of this year, 7,895 youth will be tackling conservation tasks in urban, park and forest settings, according to Labor Department officials. Some 22,300 out-of-work young people will be awarded jobs with the corps by next October.

The corps is a $233.3-million piece of the $1-billion youth jobs act that passed Congress this year. Other major elements of the act are experimental training and employment programs and community job products.

Congress allocates for neutron warhead

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House, without a word of debate, voted yesterday for more than $3 billion in defense and nuclear energy programs, including $12.6 million for the neutron bomb and $15 million for carrying cruise missiles.

The House accepted by voice vote a conference report to authorize $476.4 million for defense matters.

It voted 336-69 to authorize $2.6 billion for additional Energy Department programs. They now go to the Senate.

The Energy Department bill adds $12.6 million to funds already approved for the neutron bomb in 1978, bringing the total for the weapon to $22.6 million.

African countries again suffer famine

ROME [UPI] — A representative of the Sahelian countries south of the African Sahara said yesterday the region is once again suffering severe drought and famine conditions only three years after its most recent plague.

Boulama Manga, minister for agricultural development of Niger, told a meeting of the U.N. World Food Conference the Sahel region is going to need massive international aid to see it through the coming year.

"The threat of famine is severe once again," Manga told World Food Conference delegates.

Micro organism a new life form

WASHINGTON [AP] — A microscopic organism previously thought to be ordinary bacteria actually is a separate form of life and may be the oldest living thing on earth, it was announced yesterday.

The major development could provide new clues to the unknown stages of evolution that immediately preceded the development of life as it is known today, scientists said.

The discovery by a University of Illinois research team was announced jointly by the National Science Foundation and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which funded the work.

The team led by Dr. Carl R. Woese, Dr. Ralph S. Wolfe and Dr. George Fox discovered the organism's uniqueness by analyzing its genetic composition.

Science traditionally divides living organisms into two basic types, the "higher" forms of animals and plants, and the "lower" forms of bacteria.

The researchers say their organism, which lives without oxygen and produces methane gas as its waste product, fits neither group.

FBI to release Kennedy files

WASHINGTON [AP] — FBI officials confirmed yesterday that the bureau is about ready to release publicly its massive file on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

A department spokesman said the first segment of the 80,000 pages of investigative material would be unveiled sometime this month. It will cover the first six months of the probe.

The remainder of the file will be disclosed by the end of the year, the official said.

The release comes in response to more than 50 requests under the Freedom of Information Act. Critics of the government's version of the events surrounding the Kennedy assassination, in which Lee Harvey Oswald was held to have acted alone, have sought access to the FBI's raw files almost from the Nov. 22, 1963, date of the killing.

The FBI said it has been working on the file's preparation for public release for two and one-half years.

The disclosures will not include those documents from the Warren commission which remain classified and under seal in the National Archives. Nor will it involve materials which the FBI received from other federal agencies such as the CIA or the Secret Service.

Gas tanked to U.S.

WASHINGTON [AP] — An administrative law judge recommended approval yesterday of a major import of liquified natural gas to the United States, by way of a tanker terminal in Canada.

The initial decision by judge Nahum Litt rejected two alternative terminal sites in the United States: one at Prudence Island, R.I., and the other at Sears Island, Maine.

But Litt said either of those two locations would be a suitable alternative if Canada's National Energy Board fails to approve the primary locations in New Brunswick.

Litt's decision, subject to review by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, approved a proposal by Tenneco Atlantic Pipeline Co., a subsidiary of Tenneco, Inc.

The old gentleman explodes, "Ya know what ya learn in college? Garbage! All this crap about relationships, chemical equations, economic theory, globs of paint on canvas! Hell, where I come from ya learn from doin' not hearin' about other people's sweat!"

"You students don't know nothin'. Can ya fix a light, repair a door hinge, rebuild a...." "Excuse me," I stall the tirade. "I think the garbage we learn is like a compost heap. It is a fertilizer that nourishes the growth of other things. Students are the raw sewage of knowledge. Students are unrefined...."

"Hey, Einstein, put a lid on that trash!" the old gent orders. Listen, I been bustin' my hump for 45 years at my job. Some unshaven punk in a three piece suit comes and tells me that my motions aren't efficient. I say to da guy 'What is this ballet or construction work?' "Students are the raw sewage of knowledge. Students are unrefined..."

Waving my hands in front of his bulging eyes to break the tantrum, I apologetically interrupt. "Sorry, but maybe what college students learn is how to think. Maybe we consider the fate of humanity. Maybe we can broaden our horizons. Maybe we formulate...."

"Woe Shakespeare, woe. Flush that junk down the drain. You kids are shitkickers of the worst kind. The only thing ya know is garbage, garbage, garbage!"

Nuclear weapons: mobilizing for survival

By DAMON THOMAS

> Arise, ye prisoners of extinction. Peoples of the world, unite — You have nothing to lose but your terror, your exploitation and ceaseless deception, your helplessness and hopelessness.
> And a world to win.
> AND A WORLD TO WIN.
> — Statement of Conn. PEP
> [Promoting Enduring Peace]

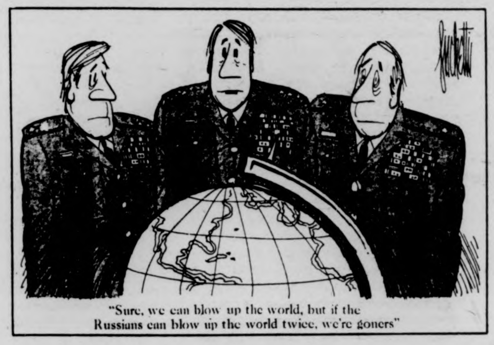
Tens of thousands of nuclear bonds, which can destroy the world many times over, are stockpiled and ready for use. Since Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the danger of total nuclear war has steadily increased. The people of America, the USSR, and the world have been lulled into a silent acceptance of the existence of nuclear weapons. Despite detente, despite nuclear test ban treaties, despite the continuing SALT talks, and despite President Carter's call for a total test ban and zero nuclear weapons, there has still not been a single nuclear weapon eliminated by negotiated agreement. It is clear that only through the efforts of people in this country and throughout the world will real action be taken to abolish nuclear weapons.

Abolishing nuclear weapons is one step. The United States and Soviet Union have other weapons at their disposal. Many of these "conventional" weapons overlap with some nuclear weapons in terms of their destructive ability.

Many people think of World War II as the last "great war" because 40 million lives were lost. But between 1945 and today more than 40 million persons have been killed in "small" wars, "police actions", and "conflicts" around the world. These conflicts were heavily nourished by American weapons manufacturers — the U.S. today is the world's biggest arms merchant. The arms race has taken on a deadly momentum of its own. The planet earth is now a time bomb, a doomsday machine. And time is running out. Unless there is massive intervention by people everywhere on the planet, directed against the military machine of every nation, the inevitable outcome will be unthinkable.

Though many people think of the arms race as something that might explode into war tonight, they forgot that the arms race is killing us now. In our own nation, and throughout the world, death comes each day to the sick, the hungry and the poor of all ages. It comes because money that should have provided health care has built nuclear warheads and war equipment (e.g.-18 health centers treating 40,000 people each year equals $57.6 million equals 3 F-14 aircraft). Money that might have gone to child care, education, and city services has gone into funding military death toys (e.g. cutting out one F-15 fighter plane would pay for Cleveland's mass transit costs for a year; adequate child care for 300 children equals $300,000 equals average cost of training one pilot; the overrun in cost on the XM-1 tank in a six-month period — $394.1 million — would be enough to finance all of Baltimore's education). Money that might have reconstructed our cities has financed bombers (66 low-cost homes equals $1 million equals 1 Huey helicopter).



"Sure, we can blow up the world, but if the Russians can blow up the world twice, we're goners"

Americans think all the bombs in the Indochina war fell 10,000 miles away. Walk through our slums and you will see where else the bombs fell. Burned out blocks of buildings. Look at the victims — old people searching garbage cans for food. Children already brutalized by poverty. Unemployed youth hooked on drugs, crime, prostitution and alcohol. These are our casualties. Think what is happening in nations that are desperately poor, where most people are hungry most of the time, where almost everyone needs medical care. Think of what could be done for life with the billions spent on barreling toward Armageddon. The arms race, extremely profitable and necessary for 22,000 prime contractors, is a criminal attack on the peoples of the world.

The U.S. has some 30,000 nuclear weapons in its stockpile; this stockpile could destroy every city in the USSR with more than 100,000 inhabitants at least 40 times over. Yet, we continue to build three new nuclear bombs a day, every day. The Soviets could destroy every American city of more than 100,000 at least 17 times over. It is time to stop this insanity. It is time to work for the complete abolition of all nuclear weapons from the earth.

A growing movement known as the Mobilization for Survival (MFS) is now being organized on a nationwide and global basis. The movement's goals are to stop the arms race, ban nuclear power, abolish nuclear weapons, and fund human needs; it is supported by such notable national figures as Daniel Berrigan, Helen Caldicott, Noam Chomsky, Barry Commoner, Daniel Ellsberg, Sidney Lens, Pete Seeger, Benjamin Spock, George Wald, and Cora Weiss.

The MFS in the Amherst-New England area actively seeks your help and involvement. Amherst-N.E. is a key area in this growing campaign because of the presence of military research and development in the area's major universities, electronic industries, and military bases — as well as a great number of regional people already involved around these issues.

Preceding action in Spring, 1978, will be a series of nationwide teach-ins, speak-outs in campuses, communities, and churches, from Oct. 15-Dec. 15. The Amherst MFS needs people for outreach, media work, leafleting, ideas, fundraising, etc. Anyone interested in helping out in local actions is urged to drop in soon at the CEQ office, 306 Student Union.

Arise, ye prisoners of extinction. You have a world to win.

"Yet what power on Earth is equal to the feeble strength of one?
"But the union makes us strong."
Solidarity Forever
The Industrial Workers of the World Songbook.

UMass students need a union to represent their interests and to protect them from the administration, faculty and trustees the same way that the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees promotes the interest of university workers and defends them against the university and state, the same way that electric company linemen have the Brotherhood of Utility Workers or the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers to advocate their interests and fight the management when it trys to bargain for the right to force their employees to work outside in bitter cold weather.

We don't need to worry about the university forcing us to have outdoor classes in freezing weather, because no one above us in the hegemony (a hierarchical structure — in this case, one where we students are on the bottom, even though the university exists to serve us, and not vice versa) likes the cold any more than we do. They love, however, keeping us out in the cold, i.e., excluded from having any real say in most of the big decisions that profoundly affect our lives as students.

The main difference between students and workers is that workers are paid for their labor, while students pay for labor. In the case of the public-low tuition university, taxes pay for most of the cost of education, not tuition. Even at private institutions, including the most exorbitant priced ones, for instance the rest of the 5 college system, tuition does not fully cover the actual cost of the education, and they depend heavily upon the institutional endowment, which is a reserve of funds designated to be used in the interest of the college-university. Essentially, it's a bank account. Public institutions are dependent on allocations from state revenues.

We are not workers, but consumers, or, customers, and the old saying goes "the customer is always right." We're not always right, but neither are the merchants of education, landlords, cops, restauranteurs, etc. etc. who control our lives with their illegitimate hegemony.

As Jimmy Cliff says, "as sure as the sun does shine, I'm going to get my share right now, what's mine, and the harder they come, the harder they fall, one and all." What's mine, yours, and ours is power. Power to democratically participate in the decisions of the university, right along side AFSCME local 1776, and the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the Faculty Union.

We want the university to hear our voices and feel both our strength of cooperation and the power of our resistance, depending on how we're treated. We are the foundation of the edifice, but the floors above us can use their weight to stifle us, and their height to shit on us if they choose, though generally they benevolently let us eat the cake.

It is as if we still haven't left high school, and the university is acting in loco parentis, that is, in place of the parents, and we should be seen and not be heard, if they can help it. In spite of the fact that we are the essence of the university, we are also essentially powerless. We are the only component of the corporation whose absence would not stop or slow down the university. Though a non-Student Trustee is evidentally invisible except at board meetings, they are the would be people's representatives (in reality the Governor's appointees), and their decisions steer the course of the university in the same way a deliberative body such as a senate and house of representatives controls a government.

If any other level of the hegemony went on strike the university would be crippled at the least and probably incapicated. If students went on strike, the employees contracts would guarantee the continuance of their salary, and they would pretty much be on vacation. Hypothetically, if every university employee up and quit, students have the skill to run the show themselves, all that would have to be done would be for the legislature to convert payroll funds into workstudy money; but that would never happen. What we need is the right to bargain collectively, just like labor has, since, at least potentially, we have all the vehicles of leverage labor has, if we turn our dissent into united action via escrow accounts, boycotts, class action suits, etc.

Let the students decide!

Capitalism: the cost of hanging on

To the Editor:

For the last few days, Collegian readers have seen ringing defenses of capitalism. We have been told by Drew Crane and Stephen Mathieu how wonderful capitalism is and how grateful we should be that we have the privilege of living here in God's country under the greatest economic system ever devised, and that if for some twisted reason we should find fault with it we can just get the hell out.

I would like to remind Mr. Crane and Mr. Mathieu of how we got to be in this enviable position, and what we are doing to make certain we stay there:

The U.S. and her European and Asian friends are responsible for the wholesale rape of our planet in search of the resources necessary to the continued exponential rise in consumption of goods. The results? The highest standard of living in the world. Also, the extinction or near-extinction of scores of animal and plant species; the ruination of formerly pristine lakes and rivers; the poisoning of our air; open pit mines; enormous sanitary landfills; undisposable radioactive wastes, etc.

This is not to mention the staggering human toll exacted in our quest for more, more, more. The history of Western civilization is little more than a list of atrocities committed against native populations. The slave trade, imperialism, multinational corporations [the modern colonial powers] — all the result of businessmen trying to make yet another buck. The extermination of the American Indian, the subjugation of pre-Communist China, the almost total destruction of Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam — makes you proud to be an American, doesn't it?

We have seen fellow-capitalist despots such as the Shah of Iran, Korea's Park, the Phillipines' Marcos given Presidential handshakes and billions of dollars, while equally tyrannical but regrettably leftist dictators such as Cuba's Castro and the Dominican Republic's Trujillo are treated to everything from poisoned cigars to CIA bullets. Why? To make the world safe for democracy, of course.

And what is being done now to ensure we stay on top? We try to find ways of making the U.S. independent of the rest of the world. You see, we have to have all our own, home-grown energy and other resources, also some unscrupulous nation might slap us with an embargo and take away our refrigerators that dispense crushed ice. It's too bad that all those Jamaican bauxite miners live in utter squalor, but God forbid we should have to pay an extra dime for Reynold's Wrap. And gee, we'd like to help all those millions of starving children in Africa, but we might not be able to have our Twinkies.

It's safe to say that this litany of accomplishments has only scratched the surface; capitalists have not exactly covered themselves with glory. Frankly, the current trend on campus towards conservatism and-or apathy is very disturbing. I fear that in twenty years the country will be run by people like Mr. Mathieu who are too busy looking out for Number One to give a damn about anybody else in the world.

Rape: shifting the problem to men is not the answer

To the Editor:

There is no doubt that the problem of rape is not only increasing at an alarming rate, but one that we should all be aware of and educated about. However, Julie Melrose's article on November 1, "Rape — the fastest crime," did in no way accomplish this.

The article, written as a series on "Women's Health Care", does little to educate women at all on the problems of rape. Instead, Ms. Melrose directed her report as an impetuous attack in an article that not only does little in the line of accurate reporting, but blatantly defines Ms. Melrose's attitudes toward men.

Since Ms. Melrose is confining her article solely to heterosexual rape, it seems rather ridiculous to use statistics on rape in general. How many of those 85,000 rapes were actually women? She mentions all types of rapes, but to accurately deal with the problem of violent heterosexual crime, it would be helpful to have accurate statistics rather than the generalizations that Ms. Melrose gives.

This is one of the few attempts on the part of Ms. Melrose to document the article. We point out the distortion of her statistics solely as an example of the gross inaccuracies which continue in the rest of the report.

As men who have lived in all male dorms at UMass for three years, we do not think male socialization teaches men to rape. Through our experience and discussions in seminars, we do not feel sex is a commodity that men bargain for. In fact, we think most men today have much regard for the feelings and concerns of women.

To infer that all men force sex on their wives is a disservice to the contract of marriage. Most men having entered into the unity of marriage will recognize a woman's right to control her own sexuality.

It may be true that for too long "rape has been considered a woman's problem," nonetheless, shifting the burden to men is certainly no answer. Rape is a problem that has resulted from the attitudes of both men and women in our society. Together men and women must set as their goal the end of this horrible crime.

Finally, to infer that men's reactions to women's attempts to liberate themselves increases the number of rapes is unfounded and ludicrous. To generalize in such a way explains Ms. Melrose's obvious lack of knowledge about men.

Overall, we feel that Ms. Melrose could have used her influence as a reporter to more accurately focus on the problem of rape. Instead, her article would have been more appropriate on the editorial page. Perhaps a more suitable title would have been, "Julie Melrose — Another Reason Why I Hate Men."

Melilli accused of "innuendo, gross inaccuracies"

To the Editor:

Lisa Melilli's column of Wednesday, November 2, is an amazing collage of innuendoes, generalities, and gross inaccuracies. Phrases such as "manipulate some members of the Collegian staff", "several Collegian staffers question", "maneuvered certain reporters to cover certain stories", and other nebulous accounts of incidents show a clear lack of courage on Ms. Melilli's part to substantiate her charges.

It is difficult to respond to charges which have no points of reference. However, a number of her points are clearly contortions of fact. Ms. Melilli comments on Mr. Hite giving the resignation letter of a Student Organizing Project Board member to the Collegian. She insinuates that this somehow a dastardly and unethical abuse of Mr. Hite's position. Perhaps it never occured to Ms. Melilli that the letter is a matter of public record, not some confidential document, which if released would doom the unionization effort.

It should be noted that the SOP is not the only holder of the Gospel truth on student unionization. To publicize problems within the project is no heresy, as Ms. Melilli would have one believe. Obviously, William Bluestein, who was the resigning Board member, wanted to let the problems within the SOP be known. If he didn't, he never would have made those comments to the Co-Presidents.

As for "manuevering certain reporters to cover certain stories", again, where are the specifics, the substantiation? The News Editor of the Collegian is responsible for assigning stories...and the issue Editors, [which Ms. Melilli is], are responsible for positioning the stories in the paper. The burden rests on these Collegian staff members and the Board of Editors for the content of the paper.

The comment, "[Mr. Hite] has been known to use those priceless items of manipulation; booze, pot, and a friendly handshake" is a gross insult, and accuses Mr. Hite of some kind of moral turpitude. It also indicates that Ms. Melilli has little respect for her Collegian colleagues, if she thinks they can be manipulated through such means. The charge is baseless.

The Co-Presidents hold the public trust to make sure that the SGA conducts itself in a professional manner. Therefore, if Mr. Hite did not inform the Collegian of possible mis-doings on the part of any member or official of the SGA, he would be remiss in his own duties. The Collegian for a long time has been unwilling to investigate any allegation of misconduct among SGA officials. Ms. Melilli seems to think that Mr. Hite should say nothing and let things go merrily along.

At no time did Ms. Melilli contact Jon and ask him if any of her information was true. She just went ahead and printed the column without getting the other side of the story.

I strongly agree with Lisa that the Collegian must be able to operate free from interference. I have been a strong supporter of the independence of the Collegian, with a record in the Student Senate to back it up. However, I wonder if Lisa was carriid away by her dedication to the Collegian and deviated from her normally incisive and professional journalistic practices.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3 - Born today, you are a proud individual, and must guard against being thought egocentric. But, your good sense of humor should keep you from overestimating yourself or your work. More or less fearless, you must guard against placing yourself or your work in jeopardy because you don't see the difficulty involved in a given endeavor and thus fail to prepare for it. Make every effort to foresee danger and you'll avoid regrets.

Sincere in purpose, you never pretend interest merely to gain your own ends. You are honest in appearance and deed for you believe it to always be the best policy, in the long run. Your insight into your own, and other's, motives is exceptional, sometimes to the point of being uncanny, even frightening.

Forceful and dynamic, you present a commanding presence. It is difficult to maneuver you into a position of subservience. You will fight against any who would attempt to place you outside the commanding circle. You will strive for, attain, and then fight to maintain your place at the top.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - Your desire to occupy the center spot, at home or at work, causes tension today.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Minor quarrels mar the morning and lend a gloomy air to the afternoon. Seek to please.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - Compatibility with companions is essential to the happy end of a business deal. Don't overuse excuses.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - The constant adulation of another may make you nervous and annoyed. Try to live up to your image.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - An exception to the rule affords an opportunity for gain at work in A.M.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - Family plans may backfire today. Your own execution of earlier plans should save the day.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - A happy and successful partner makes it easy to follow suit. Be grateful for criticism; take advice.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - If you are a woman content at home, be grateful. Restlessness among women is common today.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) - You can shine at work today. Don't make a clean sweep of new opportunities, however.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) - Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If you forget that, you'll be in for an unpleasant surprise toward P.M.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) – Unhappy results accrue if you can't adjust to new knowledge of an old project.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) - Be the social leader today only if you don't expect others to follow blindly. Ask questions; give answers.

Soderholm selected AL comeback player

NEW YORK [UPI] — Eric Soderholm, the Chicago White Sox' 29-year-old third baseman who was sidelined with a knee injury for the entire 1976 season, was selected by UPI yesterday as the American League's comeback player of the year.

Soderholm's selection gave the White Sox a sweep of three prestigious UPI post-season awards, Bill Veeck and Bob Lemon having previously been voted the Major League Executive and AL Manager of the Year respectively.

Soderholm won the award in voting by 24 sports writers with eight votes compared to five for Bobby Bonds of the California Angels.

Andre Thornton of the Cleveland Indians got four votes, Ron Fairly of the Toronto Blue Jays had three, Tito Fuentes of the Detroit Tigers two and Jim Sundberg of the Texas Rangers and Larry Hisle of the Minnesota Twins one each.

"It's an honor and I wanted it more than anything," said Soderholm when advised of the award. "I'm highly goal-oriented. Before the season I wrote down all my goals and this was one of them.

"It's a greater honor because I met one of my goals," Soderholm continued. "It was hard work and a lot of credit should go to the Nautilus."

The Nautilus is a complicated exercise machine which enables an athlete to develop virtually any muscle in his body. Soderholm worked on the Nautilus for a year, rehabilitating his injured knee, and also is working on it this winter.

Soderholm, acquired by the White Sox in the re-entry draft after playing out his option with the Minnesota Twins, had a .280 batting average, hit 25 homers and knocked in 67 runs last season.

"It was a fantastic year," said Soderholm. "I was fortunate even to be playing. We had a new spirit, we were in the pennant race until mid-August, we created a lot of excitement and it was wonderful to be part of it."

Soderholm was signed at the start of the season to an unusual contract which enabled him to earn $55,000 if he made the club by the opening of the season or $27,500 if he didn't. He is believed to have signed a two-year contract for $100,000 for 1978 and 1979.

ABC exec admits fault

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An ABC sports executive said yesterday he failed to completely read two pieces of internal correspondence critical of the quality of fighters selected to participate in the disastrous U.S. Boxing Championships.

James Spence, network vice president for program planning, told the House Communications Subcommittee he regretted not fully examining two memoes submitted at his request by Alex Wallau, a network staff member, well before the start of the tournament.

Roone Arledge, president of ABC news and sports, and ABC sportscaster Howard Cosell testified before the subcommittee with Spence and Wallau. The 14-member subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin, D-Calif., is examining the relationship of sports and the three television networks.

In Wallau's first memo, dated last Dec. 10, he detailed the poor reputations of many obscure boxers in the tournament, which eventually collapsed amid allegations of corruption and falsified records. Wallau's second memo, written almost a month before the tournament started, characterized 31 of the 56 boxers entered as less than qualified and 14 of them as "disgraces".

Also included in the second memo was "an assessment of potential damage to the reputation of ABC sports by its association with the U.S.B.C.".

Spence said he only read the portion of the first memo dealing with heavyweights Larry Holmes and Tom Prater — scheduled to be featured in the tournament's first telecast — and only the top page, containing Wallau's conclusions, of the second memo.

"I think intense preoccupation with other matters, one of which was the Moscow Olympics, was one factor why I didn't read the remaining portions of the memoes," said Spence.

Under questioning by subcommittee staff counsel Phillip B. Hochberg, the ABC officials also admitted that two other employees — Betsy Goff and Robert Greenway — had at various times warned officials about the quality of boxers in the Don King-promoted tournament.

Several cards of the tournament — which actually consisted of eliminations in seven weight classes — were held before ABC took it off the air. The downfall started Feb. 13 at Annapolis, Md., where heavyweight Scott Ledoux claimed he was cheated out of a decision in a fight against Johnny Boudreax.

Arledge, defending ABC's actions, pointed out that the network aired Ledoux' charges first and said: "You are judged by how you react in a crisis situation, and I think we did all right.

"Some of the record keeping and records (by Ring Magazine) lacked the integrity we thought they had. Some people in boxing were doing business as usual and they didn't recognize that there were a different set of ground rules here."

Carlton named NL top pitcher

PHILADELPHIA [AP] — Steve Carlton, the 23-game winner who earned his second Cy Young Award as the National League's top pitcher yesterday, dazzles opposing batters the way show business stars charm audiences.

Yet the Philadelphia Phillies' left-hander, who easily outdistanced Tommy John of the Los Angeles Dodgers in the voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America, remains a private man in the public eye.

"With Lefty right now, his attitude is something like Frank Sinatra's. All he feels he owes the public is a good performance," catcher Tim McCarver said at one point this season.

The 6'5", 210-lb. Carlton, who is away on a three-week hunting trip in Canada, enjoyed his best season since 1972 when he was 27-10 for a last-place team and was the unanimous Cy Young winner.

Helping the Phillies win their second straight division title, the 32-year-old Carlton had a 2.64 earned run average, worked 283 innings with 17 complete games and had 198 strikeouts. Only three of his 10 losses came at home, where he won 17 games.

Since joining the Phillies in 1972, he is the National League's winningest pitcher with 115 victories, an average of 19.1 a year.

And his steady performance, reminiscent of a business executive successfully handling the routine at the office, was never more evident.

"He gave us a good game every time he went out there. Steve was about as consistent as a pitcher can get," said Manager Danny Ozark, reached by phone from his Florida home.

"I don't think there was any time this year he went after the Cy Young. He just went out there and concentrated on being a good pitcher," Ozark said.

Carlton, who uses metaphysics to help him concentrate positively, came into the season in the best shape of his life. He practices a rigorous physical program to strengthen his arms, legs and cardiovascular system.

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts wrestling team will get its first test on Sunday, as the team participates in a tournament sponsored by Springfield College. The tournament, which will begin at 11:30 a.m., is open only to college wrestlers and coach Dave Amato expects practically his entire squad to participate.

"As far as I know, the entire team will be there," said Amato. "I don't care who wins or loses. We have a young team and this is a good chance for some of our boys to get some college experience."

It doesn't require a great deal of scrutiny to observe that this year's UMass squad is one of the youngest in recent years. The most notable loss on the team is that of the legendary Dennis Fenton, who during his four years at UMass won the New England heavyweight wrestling championship an unprecedented four times. In fact, several of last year's heavier wrestlers have parted and this year's crop is much lighter.

"Last year," said Amato, "all of our strength was in our heavier wrestlers, but this season is going to be the exact opposite."

Although the wrestling team at UMass is given no money whatsoever for recruiting, Amato went out shopping last spring for quality wrestlers, "selling only the school and its reputation." And Amato did not come up empty-handed.

In the 118-126 pound area, Amato came up with two high school champions, Dana Rasmussen of Tewksbury and Anthony Perry from Springfield. Joining them are Dave Krase and Rich Schriazzi, also freshmen, and Dave Daly, a sophomore returning from last year.

It is expected that the big guns on this year's squad will be co-captains Kevin Griffin and Tim Fallon, and Larry Otsuka. Griffin is defending New England champ at 150 pounds, Otsuka placed second in the 134 pound class, and Fallon was third at 158 pounds.

From 134 to 142 pounds, Mike Carroll and Greg Schoener have looked impressive in practice, as have Gary Rotatori, Steve McLarney, and Charles Rigogoliso, a regional high school champ from New Jersey.

From 150 to 158 pounds, Mike Metrowski, Gary Minski, Mike Cunningham, Steve Joyce, and Steve Haskell (current New England JV champ in his weight class) join Fallon and Griffin.

The problems begin in the heavier weight classes. "We've lost our top four last year," said Amato, "and this really leaves us in a bind. We have some good kids at 167 and 177, but we have not one legitimate 190 pound wrester."

Bob Radiwitz and Steve Whitman have been wrestling at 177 pounds, and it would appear that as the team prepares for the upcoming season one will have to wrestle up in the higher weight class.

And in the heavyweight division? Although there are no Fentons on the team, UMass does have two freshmen, who are fighting for his vacant position. Marty Rogers, from Concord Carlisle High School, weighs 225 pounds, and John Allen, from New York, weighs about 216 pounds.

Coach Amato hopes that Sunday's action in Springfield will help him get a better idea of what to expect when the team opens the season November 18 with a quad match against Rhode Island, Michigan, and Syracuse.

"We'll probably start off slowly in our first few matches," he said, "but I expect a one-hundred per cent improvement by the end of our season as we gain experience. I know we won't have the overall power that we had last year, but I think that as a team we can be much better. I like our team attitude; these kids are young and they want to win."

A Marxian weekend

I was reading Karl Marx last weekend when my mind wandered off into a revolutionary state. Therefore, when I pondered what type of sports activity I was going to witness, my thoughts centered around sports teams with Marxist symbolism.

The UMass MInutemen had a bye last weekend, but fortunately the New England Patriots were at Foxboro, so I could quench my thirst of Marxism.

I filled up my '69 station wagon with capitlaistic goodies such as steaks, hot dogs, hamburgers, hibachis, beers, coolers, utensils (notice that all the items are plural) and a Craig (singular because he's a friend). Then, Craig and I began a 10 hour odyssey (left at 9:30 a.m., came home at 7:30 p.m.) to Foxboro that I'll never forget.

We pulled out of my driveway in Worcester at 9:30 a.m. and pulled back in at 9:31 a.m. when the fuse to my radio blew. The day was off to a glorious start.

We finally arrived at Foxboro at 10:45 a.m. Eastern Standard Time. I paid the reasonable (?) price of three dollars to park my car about 14 John Huarte stone throws from the stadium (which is pretty close).

We cracked open our beers, cooked our steaks on our hibachis, and carried on conversations with our neighbors (everything done in excess, which is the antithesis of Marxism).

At Approximately 12:35 a.m. EST we entered the stadium. As I got inside the gate, I noticed that there were three barrels full-to-the-brim with booze bottles.

Craig commented that we'd probably see a lot of sober people at the Pats-Jets game.

He was wrong, which isn't often.

We were struck smack-dab in the middle of a bunch of recalcitrant ingrates. If they weren't drinking, they were yelling insults at the refs, at you, or anybody else that told them to shut-up. The only persons exempt from their wrath were the cheerleaders.

One big mouth idiot (they're at every game), about 6'3" and around 200 lbs., threatened to punch out a 5', 130 lb kid, because the kid cheered when Rich Caster hauled down a touchdown pass that brought the Jets to within one point of the Pats, 10-9.

Needless to say, the kid didn't have to worry the rest of the game because the Jets only scored four more points, but he'd probably by lying in a Mass. General Hospital bed right now if the Jets had won the game. Fortunately, the Jets lost, 24-13.

On second thought, the kid would have been all right. The recalcitrant fools passed out in the fourth quarter.

At 4:30 p.m. EST, we returned to my car to cook steaks and wait until the other capitalistic possessions filtered out of the parking lot. While my steak sizzled on the fire, I wondered if Schaefer Stadium was as zoo-ish as people had built it up to be. I was brought back to reality with a thundering thud.

A short stocky guy, who looked like a character from Eugene O'Neill's The Hairy Ape, jumped out of his car because he was being beeped at from the car behind, and proceeded to pummel the dumbfounded and drunk beeper mercilessly. What made it cruel was the fact that the beeper (the guy blowing his car horn) could barely walk, never mind defend himself.

Craig and I stood helplessly by the wayside, as four members of this ape's goon squad made sure that no one intervened.

The State Police came 10 minutes after the incident. By this time, the beeper's face was a bloodied mess. The Police eventually caught the hairy ape, but it didn't do the beeper's face any good.

We returned to beautiful Worcester at 7:30 p.m. EST. Anything was beautiful when compared to Schaefer Stadium at the moment I arrived at home. Anybody that has ever seen Worcester will realize just how depressed I really was.

I'll probably go back to Schaefer Stadium this year to watch the Dolphins or Eagles, but instead of reading Marx and searching for symbolism, I'll read Bruce Lee's book on self-defense.

Booters smoke Springfield, 3-2

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Sophomore Mark Vasington scored with 48 seconds left in the game last night to lift the UMass soccer team to a thrilling 3-2 victory over the tough Chiefs of Springfield College at Benedum Field in Springfield.

The Minutemen had fought back from a 2-0 deficit with two second half goals by junior Joel Mascolo.

"The ball came out to me on a rebound from the goalie after Bobby Abt had shot it," explained the triumphant Vasington. "When I got it, I just blew it home."

The win lifts the streaking Minutemen's record to an impressive 8-4 while Springfield College saw its sagging record collapse to 4-9-2.

"I don't know what to say," said an ecstatic Minuteman coach Russ Kidd. "It was tremendous and I just had that feeling that we'd score that last goal.

"Springfield played the toughest I've seen them play in two years," continued Kidd. "It was just a tough, tough win."

The scoring was opened up by Chief Jeff Wrestling, who took a John Garrity pass and slid it past Minuteman netminder Mark Hodgdon at 13:01 of the first half.

The score remained that way until Joe Yung of Springfield beat goalie William Temby who was subbing for the injured Hodgdon at 14:49 of the second half. Hodgdon had been hurt earlier in the game after striking the astroturf with his knee when making a serve. Temby saw about ten minutes of action in that second half until Hodgdon returned.

Thus, the table was set for the roaring Minuteman comeback which started with Mascolo's first goal at 17:32 of the second half when he converted a pass from the hustling T.J. O'Brien.

"I was just waiting for the rebound and when it came back to me I got off a quick shot," explained Mascolo.

But the junior fullback wasn't through for the night. Mascolo brought the UMass bench to its feet when he beat Chief goalie Paul Bortolotti to score on a picture play set up by Tasso Koutsoukos at 35:53. Koutsoukos had come off the bench for that play as the Montreal native was weakened by a cold and medication.

"Tasso made a hell of a pass to me and I just shot it," said Mascolo of his second goal. It was his sixth goal of the season and the third time this season that he had scored twice in a single game.

With the score tied at two apiece, the clock wound down until less than a minute remained. It was on a Mark Vassalotti throw-in from the right corner that the scoring play that won the game was developed. The ball found its way through a maze of players in front of the goal and rebounded out to Vasington when Minuteman Bobby Abt and goaltender Bortolotti hit the ball at the same team.

Vasington didn't waste any time as he got off a quick shot that traveled through a screen of players and past Bortlotti to put the final nail in the Springfield coffin. That goal caused an eruption on the UMass bench and drew a lot of noise from the Minuteman fans in attendance.

It was Vasington's first goal of the season and it couldn't have come at a better time.

The Minutemen were kept in the game by a solid performance on behalf of the omnipresent UMass defense. Hodgdon, although playing hurt, came up with several astounding saves on excellent scoring chances by the Chiefs. The defensive trio of Larry Aronson, Pat Veale, and Vassalotti stymied charge after charge by upset-minded Springfield. Those three have been doing the job all year and have to be one of the best defensive crews in New England.

O'Brien turned in an excellent effort and was responsible for igniting Minuteman drives on several occasions. O'Brien is a fiery player who also plays UMass hockey. If anyone, O'Brien has written the book on UMass hustle.

With selections for the New England playoffs coming up next week, the win comes at an opportune time. The Minutemen have only two games left now, including tomorrow's game against the Wildcats at New Hampshire.

Mascolo summed up the sentiments of the entire team when, after the game, he said: "That's the mark of a winning team; coming from behind like we did tonight."

Spikers set for Smith

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass volleyball team will be shooting for its third straight win when it takes on Smith College in an away match tonight. Game time is 8 p.m., with the junior varsity match slated to begin at 7 p.m.

Smith has been having "a successful season," according to UMass coach Dianne Thompson.

Thompson reports that Smith is a veteran squad, as four seniors, one junior, and one sophomore comprise the starting six. The squad is coached by second-year mentor Cathy Connell.

If the Minutewomen, currently 8-12 on the season, hope to win the best three out of five match, Thompson said they will have to play "aggressively

"Offensively, we'll have to play aggressively," she said. "We'll also have to cut down on our service faults."

Thompson added that UMass has been slipping lately in its percentage of successful serves, and that the malady will have to be cured if the Minutewomen hope to make tonight's match one to chalk up in the win column.

If the Spikers hope to reach .500 this season, they will have to win all their remaining matches. Following tonight's match, UMass will travel to UConn for a Saturday clash against the Huskies, and then close out the regular season with a tri-meet at Westfield State next Tuesday.

Celts drop yet another

BOSTON (UPI) — Walt Frazier scored 22 points to lead four players in double figures last night and the Cleveland Cavaliers withstood a late Boston charge to earn a 104-101 victory over the Celtics.

With the Celtics' first-round draft choice last year Cedric "Cornbread" Maxwell leading the rush, Boston scored 11 of 13 points in one span late in the quarter. But Frazier then added one of two free throw attempts with 12 seconds to play to seal the victory.

Bingo Smith added 16, John Lambert 15 and Walker 14 for the Cavaliers, who saw a 23-point lead late in the third quarter dwindle to two points with just 15 seconds left, 100-98.

Maxwell scored all 15 of his points in the final 14 minutes.

Space Cadets win title

Led by Mickey Menna's three touchdowns, the Space Cadets won the men's intramural football title yesterday, defeating Theta Chi, 24-15.

Menna scored two of his TD's on pass receptions, and another on an interception. Don Goldstein booted all three extra points and added a field goal for the Space Cadets.

Phil Croasdale and John Fitzgerald scored the Theta Chi touchdowns.

In the men's consolation (third place) game, MacKimmie dumped the Wasted Crew, 23-0.

In the women's division, the Flakes upended the Sows, 15-0, to win the title.

In the co-rec division, the Gorman Oakes squeezed by the Jukes, 3-0, for the championship.

Everybody loves a rally?

Nostalgia is a fad that has experienced a comeback in the past few years. We've seen an especially keen interest in the 50's era, with such movies as American Grafitti and television shows as Happy Days enjoying great success.

Now a group on campus is trying to rekindle a little of that innocent, fun-loving spirit that predominated in the 50's by staging, as they call it, "an old-time football rally."

That's right. On the eve of the 1977 UMass football team's last home game, there is going to be a scene straight from an old Bobby Darin flick enacted near the campus pond.

There will be the UMass marching band performing the school's fight song, (whatever that is) and cheerleaders smiling their way into everybody's hearts. Then UMass football coach Dick MacPherson is going to deliver an old fashioned straight from the gut, "give 'em the best effort we have men," pep talk. The climax to this event will be the igniting of the bonfire by co-captains Peter McCarty and John Gladchuk.

The rally is a gesture by some people who are trying to increase student interest in athletics on this campus. But is it a practical idea for the student generation of the '70s?

MacPherson hasn't forgotten the times when as a coach here in 1959-60, pep rallies were the big social event on Friday night.

"Back then everyone showed up in their white bucks and white socks," recalls MacPherson.

"As the band played, we'd introduce the players, who paraded outside the Student Union and then the captains would light the bonfire. Afterwards the students would take off their shoes and dance up a storm. And if they got real risque they would have a cigarette."

Now, back then, students got thrills from eating goldfish and stuffing themselves into telephone booths, so it's easy to see why the football rally was such a success. But that often over-used cliche states, "times have change".

Ricky Nelson is no longer on top of the charts and Betty Lou, who hung around the malt shop, has three kids and is probably divorced by now.

The 50's have been followed by the turbulent '60's that saw campus demonstrations, not for the football team, but against a war. The counter revolution in sports, led by Jack Scott, saw football as an archaic form of battle that had little value in our society.

Now the '70s appears to be a decade of apathy and indifference. Students are caught between both eras. We don't know whether to attend a football game or a rally against apartheid policies in South Africa.

But enough amateur sociology. The question remains — why a football rally? Is this an attempt to show the trustees that there is an interest in football at this unversity, and therefore a need for more scholarships to improve the program? It could be. Or is it simply another attack of nostalgia and someone's desire to turn the clocks back to times when life was a little less complicated?

I don't have the answer, but my guess would be that it's a combination of both. Attendance at the rally would certainly indicate an interest in the football program. The football rally has always been a tradition at "big-time" football factories, like Notre Dame. But does it have a future at UMass and can interest in the footbaal team be revived? I'm not even sure whether the bonfire might be in violation of EPA anti-pollution laws.

There are obviously some people who believe a rally will succeed on this campus. I'm not one of them, but I'll be damned if I'm going to miss this spectacle.

Now if only I could find my "I like Ike" button.

Quilapayun

Quilapayun Sings of Chilean Resistance and Unity

Quilapayun was greeted by a standing-room-only audience at the Campus Center Auditorium on Tuesday, November 1st. David Barkin of the Western Massachusetts Chile Solidarity Committee reviewed background to the September 1973 fascist coup that ended three years of Popular Unity government reforms that favored the Chilean majority. Alternating between English and Spanish, Barkin noted aspects of the current situation in Chile. Pinochet, the installed hed of the junta, has declared in response to Carter's inquiries about the restoration of human rights, that elections will be reinstated in 1991. One million or one tenth of the Chilean population has fled the brutal regime and are now living in exile throughout the world. The majority of people in Chile continue to face military repression and economic hardships which include high inflationary prices, forced labor at less than subsistance wages to produce in the main, export goods for maximum profits, and everyday misery resulting in mass malnutrition and even starvation. To this day suppression of human rights is the policy of the ruling junta.

Rudolfo Parada thanked the audience "in advance for what you will continue to do in the anti-fascist struggle." Quilapayun's opening song, "Prayer to a Laborer" symbolizes the group's dedication to the working class movement which continues in Chile today and their homage to Victor Jara who wrote this song and who was murdered by junta officials in the Santiago stadium on September 15th, 1973. Victor Jara is now known throughout the world as a "symbol of youth, a committed artist." He was among the leadership in the Chilean New Song Movement, identified by its ties to the working class and indigenous peoples. "The working class has recognized this new song movement as a means of expressing their own aspirations." "...Clasp your comrade's hand so you may grow/Together we go, united in blood/Now and in the hour of death." Quilapayun sang another Victor Jara song after intermission, "Recuerdo Amanda." This ballad tells of a woman's love for her co-worker in another factory who chooses to fight in the mountains. She visits him during her five-minute breaks, eventually in memory. Poignantly, the musicians expressed that moment when Amanda learns of this brave worker's martyrdom with mournful, confused, emotional, disjointed instrumentalization. The audience already familiar with these songs broke into commemorative applause.

Nine out of ten of their concert presentations are composed by all members of the group. Their experimentation and musicianship was further illustrated by "Macchu Picchu" emanating echoing harmonies from the antiplano, Andes, floating atop Quechua rhythms. Their instruments are indigenous and popular. Besides the guitar, they traded among themselves the Quena, an Incan cane flute, the guiro, a gourd instrument of African origin, the bass drum the Bombo Lequero, introduced by African slaves, the Caja Militar, a snare drum and the incredible multiple cane flutes played by the Andean peoples, Las Zamponas. The Charango, a stringed instrument with a body from the shell of an armadillo, provided a metallic, quivering vitality to their cmpositions. Quilapayun members cherish their instruments because the Quena and Charango were among the instruments declared to be "weapons" against the junta and therefore prohibited. Quilapayun members revealed that they are in close contact with resistance artists in Chile who use these loved instruments clandestinely and continue to sing the very songs that a concert audience hears. In "Premonition to the Death of Murieta" the Argentine and African derived drum, the Bombo Leguero, and three guitars galloped through a narrative of a guerilla-legendary folk hero recoiling, "...like wind mounted on thunder."

"Venceremos."

("We will win.")

With the Tumbadora, a conga drum, proud solo stanzas followed by full choral volume created vital defiance to a 17th century Colombian slave song, "To the Mine I'm Not Going Anymore!". By way of a newly composed song, Quilapayun exposed the junta's ploy to cover up the "disappearance" of political prisoners in "secret prisons, torture centers and concentration camps." To the 2,500 Chilean patriots who have "disappeared" they sang, "...They are standing on their feet," and to the junta they challenged, "Donde estan?"--"Where are they?"

Quilapayun called upon the crowd to sing to the song that utilized popular slogans composed as stanzas by Carlos Puebla of Cuba. Guillermo Oddo enlisted everyone to join in the refrain, "Batida, Batida, Bah!"

All selections were arranged and played with great facility in conveying authentic, indigenous musical themes merged with attentiveness to peoples history and culture in Latin America. Outstanding instrumentation came to the fore in "Contraste" with its somber epigram followed by a burst of single and syncopated melodies following the rhythms and oscillating metalic textures ringing forth from the Charango. A black slave lullaby combined vocal and drum sequences in tribute to the mothers of fighters. In an incredible arrangement dedicated to their companeros in France, each musicain played a Zampona, the ancient multiple cane flute that must be played in pairs since each instrument only carries part of a scale. The theme was derived from the working class district outside of Paris where they live and from the organ grinder. Returning to Chile they sang, "Mi Patria"--"We want to see again the flower that sets fire the evening..." It was a song set forth with closed or teared eyes and devoted visage. It culminated with a drum pushed determination and hope filled vocals. There was the ingenious, indigenously Latin American mix of humor and voodoo in "Malimbe", newly composed to make things "very dangerous" for the junta generals. The concert ended with the anthem well known to most in attendance, "A People United Will Never Be Defeated." This was one of the "old" songs sung by the group. They have been singing together since 1965 and this song was a favorite at Popular Unity workers rallies that assembled as many as 500,000 at times. In response to the encore they closed with "Venceremos"--"We will win!"

Alert to every international development that effects their homeland, they eagerly answered inquiries relating to the progress of their resistance movement and the isolating of the military junta. It was noted that China has continued to support diplomatically and economically this brutal oppressive regime. China was one of the few countries that expelled the Popular Unity ambassador and that to this date has not accepted refugees. They also speculated that Pinochet is seeking allies and therefore has offered Chilean troops to bolster the apartheid fascism in South Africa. Referring to the disclosures revolving around former C.I.A. head, Helms, Quilapayun members stressed that any information that helped the anti-fascist cause was favorable. In addition, for those inside and outside of Chile who believed that the international monopolies and the U.S.-C.I.A. were not involved in the vicious overturning of the elected popular government headed by Allende; "Here is more proof...It was not the Chilean people who wanted the coup."

Their twelve year cohesiveness is related to their dedication as artists and as patriots. They cited their task "...to maintain alive our culture, to create music, to create culture, face the death and raise the banner of life." They have utilized the heritage of this indigenous culture coupled with the plight and concerns of the majority, the working class, to fight cultural foreign penetration. They compose and perform music "to recover our own roots."

They have performed in 39 countries and won an international prize for the best foreign song in France in 1974. Their fifteen records are distributed throughout the world and in the United States by Paredon. Highlights of this tour will be the performing of the cantata honoring Chilean nitrate miners in "The Seige of Santa Maria De Inquique, the text of which will be recited by Jane Fonda in Los Angeles. They will perform at Carnegie Hall on November 21st.

Wearing black ponchos with color coming from vibrant instruments, from their voices strong in resistance, and dedicated to the unity which will eventually defeat the junta, Quilapayun were truly ambassadors of culture and representative of Chilean aspirations to recreate a just and free homeland--singing to hearts in solidarity.

Americans Dreaming

AS FOR MYSELF, I HOPE THEY BAN DDT.

My American Dream

What I want to do-------

I want to stand outside inside the center of the shitpile
Drinking beer in a bar with lights on bright at night
And get excited when the skates start punching
And then walk through old American Streets
And make intelligent conversation
With the outcasts of the special class

Or maybe I'll pursue the integrity of my own shit
And get an office in the Tory Department
And P.O.P. until I'm tenured and impossible to scrape off the hull

Or maybe I'll graduate a Tory major
And become a lawyer
And hang out in the hall in the court house with a doubleknit suit that gives my ass the flexibility
To simulate swinging a golf club
Next to the clerk's office

God, what a love story we have!
we met over dinner and craziness and a long line to Chicago things built slowly but they built a strong undertow of love that we both knew was there but were afraid to admit a short fling with a best friend didn't help our matters any we thought but in the long run we know it did then a long talk and a quick split and in a drunken frenzy
a beautiful kiss that seemed to last a week summer interrupted in more ways than one and when you returned
I thought it was over but wouldn't even admit it to myself and I cried but ha!
I was wrong and a weekend drive and a few long talks brought out the truth
you love me!
I love you
both dreadfully fearful of another rejection
I hope this story is far from over

THEY NEVER SAID BYE

I wanted to talk with Sandy.

I wanted to see what she felt.

But something had taken place.

She was a victim of insanity.

She doesn't live at home.

Sandy never said good-bye.

I wanted to talk with William.

I wanted to learn why he felt.

But something had taken place.

He paid for his brothers' sin.

He doesn't live at home.

William never said good-bye.

I wanted to talk with Jeffrey.

I wanted to know how he felt.

But something had taken place.

He couldn't stop what he couldn't see.

He doesn't live at home.

Jeffrey never said good-bye.

I wanted to talk with Allison.

I wanted to feel like she felt.

But something had taken place.

To her, love was no cause to run.

She doesn't live at home.

Allison never said good-bye.

I wanted to talk with them all.

I needed to understand their call.

But, now, they'll never answer me.

Because

Peace is something murderers won't see.

They don't live at home.

They all died alone.

Why? Why did they die?

Until we all know, the Four will never say bye.

The Owl

THE OWL
a novel by John Hawkes
New Directions Paperbacks

The Owl is a waking dream-nightmare carefully composed of bits of dirty ice-a chilling vision of sterility, bloodless viloence, and dispassionate cruelty.

The scene is set in an ageless but decayed Italian village. Sasso Fettore inherits the legacy of feudal rule and the repressive melancholy of the reign of the Roman Catholic church. All of the young men are gone, killed in an unexplained war. The young women exist in half-sleep limbo, knowing of the impossibility of marriage but clinging to a dream of their completion. Dowries are hopefull laid away in trunks and purses and the mothers bathe and beautify their daughters.

The narrative is told in the voice of Il Gufo, the village hangman whose name means 'the owl'. Il Gufo is respected and obeyed. Inheriting his position as lord and landowner, he is the law of the community and it's only eligible man. The fathers half-dream of the hangman, the embodiment of repressed sexuality, becoming a husband to one of their daughters.

A new hope alights when the presence of another man arrives. The prisoner is marched into town and locked into one of the bleak watchtowers that brood, stony and oppressive, on the hill. One father presents the hangman with plans for the wedding of his daughter Antonina to the pathetic and broken foreigner. A fair is held in the meadow below, in view of the prisoner's window, where the girls parade, hoping to catch his eye.

Antonina, a strong and noble girl, has waited longer than any of the other girls in the village. She, the oldest of the virgins, decides to break the rules and give herself to the hangman who she believes she loves. Escaping the fair they climb together out of sight onto a hill. Desperately trying to complete her womanhood she rolls on the ground with Il Gufo while he explores her body and the interior of her clothing until he finds what he wants.

"I reached into the sheltered thighs touching this bone and that, and felt for what all women carried. High and close to her person, secreted, I found Antonina's purse which she had hid there longer than seven years, that which they fastened to girls when young. What was there more?"

The hangman's emotions reflect the season of winter. All is dead and frozen. Snow falls, not as a soft blanket but as a bitter and poisonous sheath, denying all that is warm and alive. The fires are small, noxious and smoky. The sun strikes the isolated village with a weak feebleness, unable to impart any warmth into the sad land.

The story illuminates the darkest corners of denied sexuality and its thwarted expressions. The domestic animals are mutilated and grotesque. Il Gufo's ass has its ear slit and bells inserted. A white dog is beaten into performing an unnatural stylized dance with its welted body. The owl, the hangman's pet and alter-ego is the essence of cold watchfulness and piercing cruelty.

"One claw was missing, another cut off blunt and short, at every feathered layer he was scarred and covered with old wounds that penetrated him like the grain of wood, his fiber, the old markings of the forest. But he had never cried with the pain, the scarred face, the face enraged and bloody, always anesthetized with the cold enormity of the eyes, the sudden circumference of the eyelids protecting him, making him insensitive."

Hopelessness is never relieved. 'The Donna', a gentle white stone statue in the wood, the antithesis of the 'dark lady' gallows, is kicked over by the hangman and destroyed. The only beasts with any semblance of normality, the geese, are found frozen and stiff, laid out to the four corners of the compass. And the hangman, never releasing grip on the rules of the old order, ignores the pleas and fantasies of the father who desires a husband for his daughter, and the prisoner, after silent and insidious tortures, is hanged.

The complexity and depth of The Owl indicates John Hawkes' position as one of the most noted prose stylists. His lines go beyond poetry by their extravagance, they go beyond mere prose in their gripping precision and finesse. His style holds elements of surrealism, but is more revealing and the vision is less purely subjective than writers of that school. His images are dreamlike and fantastic, out of range of our objective reality but still easily identifiable. He masterfully manipulates the reader through the personal and lucid psychology of Il Gufo, perhaps the epitome of the fascist mind.

The Owl, reprinted after its first introduction in 1954, presents us with a shocking and terrifying possibility of a world out of touch with any element of humaness. He paints an existance which threatens when sanctification of the 'old order' imposes meaningless conditions on lives, society decays and degenerates under the shadows of corrupt and outmoded governance.

John Willenbecher
University Gallery
thru November 13

Currently on display at the University Gallery is a one-man exhibition featuring the work of artist John Willenbecher. The works exhibited in this show are not unlike works which appeared in the first show of this semester, those which feautured Sol Lewitt and Larry Bell.

John Willenbecher's work exists in shape, volume and substance as geometric art. He consistently employs the use of arch, circle, square, cone, sphere, and pyramid forms throughout his work in a manner which is repetitive yet variable. These shapes appear in two and three dimensional forms as paintings and large scale floor pieces.

The medium Willenbecher has chosen to work in is also of interest as it is treated in a manner which is unique and visually stimulating. Masonite or wood is used in all of Willenbecher's works with variations on this base. He is consistent in his use of white acrylic paint or gesso, which is applied for 5 or 6 layers on the masonite or wood, with a final layer of gray or black paint applied over the gesso. Willenbecher then goes on to create a milky-wayish effect by scratching the gray or black paint with a knife or sharp object. The gesso through the paint produces a starry effect which is heightened when sandpaper is rubbed along the surface. The direction and amount of pressure applied to the sandpaper directly determines the resulting celestial pattern. As a child Willenbecher received Neely's Primer for Stargazers and it is possible that this was influential in his thinking. What is perhaps the most interesting aspect of Willenbecher's work is the thought process behind it. As is true of most 'modern art', the pieces in this show may at first appear as unfamiliar and ambiguous to the viewer. In an effort to acquaint the reader with John Willenbecher, several pieces in this show will be examined to familiarize the reader with Willenbecher's work before visiting the gallery.

Located in the main gallery is a piece done in 1975 entitled 'Sea'. This work demonstrates a non-traditional approach to a maze structure and consists of 30 3-sided pyramid or tetrahedra forms which are 55 inches tall and stand nearly shoulder height to the viewer. Each tetrahedra is carefully placed at random with the existing arrangement in the gallery demonstrating one of the many possibilities for this piece. 'Sea' works from the repitition of its forms but, more importantly, from the active participation of the viewer, for it is the viewers perceptions of the piece which determines which path he/she will take. "Sea" works especially well in this darkened gallery where the amount of natural and artificial light has been drastically reduced giving the piece an ominous and dark feeling. This effect is further enhanced by the play between the gray tetrahedra forms. These forms work together in a rythmic, wave-like manner creating the momentum of waves on an ocean, as the viewer moves through and about the piece.

Willenbecher was also interested in the work of Boullee, an 18th century visionary architect. From this interest Willenbecher derives the neoplatonic flavor in his works which exists in the form of rounded Roman arches and other classical forms. These arch forms are bound in many of his paintings, particularly the 'Bridge' and 'Arch' series. These exist as a number of squares or modular increments set side by side which give the viewer a 'window' through which to view the starry, celestial illusions taking lplace on the canvas.

Willenbecher incorporates solid ladder forms ranging in size from small to very large in works such as 'Song of the Earth', 'Kiva' and 'Truth Revealed by Time'. These step ladder forms act as a formal device as well as imply symbolic meaning of an upward travel or journey. When used with the starry, celestial backgrounds these ladders seem to suggest some kind of heavenly ascent.

There is no intended message to Willenbecher's work and in this way the work becomes very individual and personal. What the viewer sees depends largely upon individual perceptions and openess to the works. For this reason, one visit to the gallery is not nearly enough time to take in the illusionistic, cosmic experience of John Willenbecher's work.

The exhibit runs through November 13. The University Gallery, located in the Fine Arts Center, is open Tuesday, 11:30am to 8:00pm, Wednesday-Friday 11:30-4:30pm, Saturday and Sunday 2:o00-5:00pm.

CITY BOY
Young Men Gone West
THE RUMOUR
Max
(both on Mercury)

For those without a taste-or a tolerance- for the frothing, three chord wonders of Britian's rabid new wave, a spate of late summer-early fall releases by mainstream artists there should provide some musical relief. Of these, two are particularly impressive: Young Men Gone West by City Boy and the debut release of Graham Parker's back-up band, The Rumour. While both bands differ in their musical stance, both display an abundance of musical savy and enough taste to spare their listeners the aural cloriform of punk-political statements.

On their first album, City Boy all too eagerly echoed the blithering excesses of their prime musical antecedents-Queen and 10 c.c.-sounding at their least inspired like just another glib and glitzy band from somewhere across the sea. Young Men Gone West is better because it's terser. The slapstick with and frentic energy that animated the first two City Boy albums is still here, but not in such unfocussed effusion: By economizing on their eccentricity-- only one oddnick or oddity per song seems to be the formula here-- City Boy achieves a more organic graft of lyric to arrangement, without sacrificing too much of their rich word play.

The most interesting songs on Young Men Gone West are also the most inane. "The Man Who Ate His Car" is a heartfelt tribute to a heavy-metal connoisseur with heartburn, while "(What Good's) One After Two" uses a deft double-entendre to lament a forced sexual diet. Even when the band's falsetto harmonies tend to sound brittle, or overbearingly campy, or on the albums weaker material--"Dear Jean" is merely silly, while the title cut is uncharacteristically maudlin and pointless-- the arrangements remain uniformly excellent, and the musical excitement never flags.

Max by the Rumour is one of those rare albums that can be recommended on the virtues of any given cut. From start to finish, Max scintillates with a sinewy hybrid of rock'n'roll and rhythm and blues, carrying with it more cut-to-cut momentum than any album I've heard this year. Everything you could expect from the pub-apprenticed Rumour is here-- raw, fresh, fifties tinged R&B, without pretense or frills-- and more. "Airplane Tonight"-- probably the album's best cut-- recalls the earthy eloquence of the Band at its best. "Do Nothing Till You Hear From Me" swings irresistably talented rock-composer, Duke Ellington. Throughout, The Rumour's gritty but game vocals--shared among them-- mesh admirably with their instrumental underpinings, particularly on "Anything But Love" and the album's most infectious rocker, "This Town." As Graham Parker's back-up band, the Rumour played efficiently but unobtrusively, so it's a real pleasure to see them step out of line and shine on Max.

ARTFUL DODGER
Babes on Broadway
(Columbia)

Anybody out there remember Slade? Back in '72-'74 they had the wildest sound around and were the biggest thing in their native Britain, but couldn't make it over here due to rock'n'roll's biggest curse, radio. (Must I go over it again? Too loud for the Top 30, too unhippiesh for Regressive.) When they compromised themselves by toning down, they faded into oblivion because they weren't cut out to be melodious.

What has this got to do with Artful Dodger? Well, their lead singer is very reminiscent of Slade's Noddy Holder, and on this album they do Eddie Cochran's "C'mon Everybody" just the way Slade in their prime would have done it. But most of the record is filled with attempts at melodic pop that don't quite come off, just like Slade in decline. Their tunes aren't distinctive enough to distinguish themselves as more than rehashes.

There is one great original here, and it's another straight-out hard rocker, the amusing heavy metal funk "Idi Amin Stomp". For two albums Artful Dodger were hailed as promising popsters. But it seems that maybe their potential lies in another direction. They would be wise to follow Slade's path in reverse and concentrate on the ravers. They may yet make a really consistent LP.

"I never think about the audience" says Chuck.

Chuck Mangione- Call it Music...

"Everything that you experience as a human being becomes a part of your music. My music reflects all of the feelings and experiences that I've had in my life."

It's impossible to label the style of musician Chuck Mangione. Instead of a solid definition there is an artistic synthesis of Latin, rock, jazz, and classical in his composition and arrangement. Mangione said that "nobody puts me in the pidgeonhole", when asked to classify his style.

"I play Chuck Mangione music. There's no way to label it! Why put a four letter word on my music? It's music! Today everybody is everybody, we don't need categories! So-go ahead and call my music anything you want!"

Chuck Mangione has the same demeanor off-stage as on. He's casual, easygoing, and had the rare distinction of actually holding an interview session after his performance. In addition, he gave a personalized autograph to each and every person who waited in the orchestra pit after the show!

Mangione has achieved in 30 years his dream since he first stepped on a stage at the age of 8. Presently at 37, he is considered among the top (jazz?) musicians in the world today.

Beginning with piano lessons at age 8, Mangione was performing professionally with his brother Gap when he reached high school. Upon graduation from Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, Mangione taught for several years. During that time he had the opportunity to play with such acclaimed jazzmen as Dizzy Gillespie, Art Blakey, and Maynard Ferguson, among others. When asked about how it felt to play with Dizzy Gillespie, Mangione replied, "What would it be like to play center with Reggie Jackson?"

In 1970, Mangione formed his first quartet which became a quintet last year. The group recieved a Grammy Award last year for the song 'Bellavia', in the best instrumental composition category.

There is a unique quality to the music of Mangione, but he refused to cite the source of his inspiration. On stage, you can see a special form of communication going on with the group and the audience. There is a disninct closeness, a mutual sense of appreciativeness. "When I'm playing my music, I never think about the audience. I just want them to have a good time. I never really look out and see them, but I always find out later if they liked us."

Mangione admits to enjoying himself while performing, and there is an obvious rapport on stage within the group. I was curious as to Mangione's feelings about the first few minutes of the performance. "Well, there's always a little bit of tension and excitement at first. Then you have to adjust to the people, and technical problems, if any. We all know each other well, and I can tell immediately when someone is having a problem, with sound or anything else."

The Mangione program selection is impromtu, "When we go out there and play, no one has any idea of what we're doing! I just play something, and then decied what to do next. I make music, not show business. I don't want perfection, I like it when the music bleeds a little!"

Atmosphere is important to a Mangione concert, and he said that "if it feels comfortable, then the music feels better. There is really no other way to take the music to the people other than live."

Along with Mangione on the flugelhorn and electric piano are guitarist Grant Geissman, Charles Meeks on bass, James Bradley Jr. on drums, and Chris Vadala on saxophones and flutes.

The Chuck Mangione Quintet continues it's current tour to the West, where it will end in December. In May, the film premiere of 'The Children of San Chez' will feature a Mangione soundtrack.

Call it jazz or blues, but whatever you think- it's unique because it's the magic of Chuck Mangione

A Reply

It is not impossible to label the style of Chuck Mangione. Candy-ass, tepid, so-diluted-even-grandmother-will like-it high school jazz might suffice as a label, tho' it would help to look at Chuckie-boy's oh-so-mellow dipshit image to explain the man behind the thinly-disguised muzak. He is a perfect example of the theft of innovations made by truly creative Black classical musicians by white musicians who know how to dilute these innovations so a smug middle-class audience will like this sanitized pop. This audience couldn't bear to listen to the more urgent statements made by artists of the stature of Ornette Coleman or Sun Ra. To put a four letter word on his music is very easy; shit.

JAMES BROWN
Mutha's Nature
(Polydor)

This one's from the A-Little-Late-But-Still-Important Dept. The "King of Soul" is back again but with a slight change in concept. Just as the name implies, this one's about nature; both human and environmental. The "King" is calling all his soulful subjects to the task of improving the ways of the world and doing so with cuts like "If You Don't Give A Doggone About It" and the single from the LP, "Gimme Some Skin". The lyrics are a little different from his past works as not once does he want to be "...taken to the bridge..., turned loose...., or sent."

In the liner notes he says that certain personalities and DJs claim that this is his best effort. Well, that's up to the individual listener but I'll say that this one does warrant a bit of extra attention even if just for the difference in format. The "King" also should be heard even if just to hear his new JBs. Mr. Brown has always managed to come up with a smoker of a back-up band and the New JBs are no exeption. It's my guess that the name was inspired by the fact that the sound of the album brings to mind the work from the early 60s with the original JBs. The horns are in the same laid-back manner and James himself kind of goes back to his older manners.

This, combined with the change in format, makes the album both different Brown and more-Brown-than -lately at the same time which, to me, provides a rather pleasant mixture. Keep it comin', James (or should I say "King"?)

Various Vinyl

CHEAP TRICK
In Color
(Epic)

EDDIE MONEY
(Columbia)

Imitation, they say, is the fondest form of flattery and flattery will get you everywhere in music-land. As Cheap Trick and Eddie Money found out, all it takes is a tight act and a loose ass and anyone can be a superstar. These new discs from the Columbia-Epic recording axis are new, fresh renditions of the same old thing, stretching to the limit the innovation of past eras. Their value, however, does not lie in the music; rather it lies in the performers' approach to the industry itself.

Cheap Trick is a new band whose current album, In Color, was released hot on the heals of their national concert tour with Kiss. Featuring kissy-faced rock and roll stars on the cover mounted on choppers, the real brains of the group is Huntz Hall type Rick Nielsen featured on a bicycle on the reverse side. Writing most of the group's material and playing all the leads, Rick renders a sound remeniscent of Beatles-cum-Badfinger-cum-Raspberries, highly listenable and surpassing its predecessors in lack of pomp and circumstance. I personally like "So Good To See You" while my daughter prefers "I Want You To Want Me". "Huntz" Nielsen's presence is one step towards the demystification of the superstar in music.

Eddie Money wants to be a star so bad that I think he'll make it. In fact, that's mostly what he likes to sing about, too. Eddie has ego, plenty of it, and his songs, fashioned in the Springsteed "Born to Run" style, shadow Steely Dan and Stevie Winwood. Eddie sings and plays sax and is as worth hearing as Southside or any of the other new talents appearing on vinyl. Listen to "Two Tickets To Paradise", the opening cut on the record, a solid single for just an ego. Learn about this ego in "Wanna Be a Rock 'n Roll Star". Eddie wants to be a star so bad it hurts. Relieve him of his misery; buy the record and see how you, too, could be a rock 'n roll star.

Final analysis: Cheap Trick is easy money; Eddie will go a long, long way. Both are in the pocket for CBS...

ALICE COLTRANE
Transcendence
(Warner Bros.)

NARADA MICHAEL WALDEN
I Cry I Smile
(Atlantic)

Good news from the spirit world! Turiya Alice Coltrane and Narada Michael Walden both have new releases out this month to warm your souls and expedite your ascent to nirvana. Producing sounds harmonious with your innermost thoughts Turiya and Narada have synthesized albums that not only allow you to dance or meditate with ease, but stack well with Stevie Wonder as well. Capturing elements from "Pastime Paradise" along with others, in all their disparity, I Cry I Smile and Transcendence are recordings that, if you are into "that Eastern thing" you will want to own.

Coming out with her best album since her World Galaxy days, Alice Coltrane has emerged as a driving, but still unrecognized force of the "New Classical Music." Sounding like Gospel on the Ganges, Transcendence marks more than time with "Radhe-Shyam" and the title cut "Transcendence." "Sivaya" is the "roll-ingest" (as in holy-roller) number on the album and uses not only the traditional instruments of the East and West, but electronic innovation as well.

Narada Michael Walden, who used to sing with John McLaughlin, sings smooth listenable lyrics over a steady and consistent instrumental designed to put health back into dance music. "I Need Your Love" is a great opener with Herbie Mann on flute heading up the list of proficient musicians. "Oneness-Cry" is a tribute to the high-energy Mahavishnu-Santana sound taking you out to Turiya-land, in search of John.

These people are rock-steady; their music needs no gimmick and their followers know who they are. If you are a disciple of Swami Prabhupada (Alice switched Gurus from Swami Satchidananda) or Sri Chimnoy or you just want some inspiring music either way, these cosmic discs are for you.

KANSAS
Point of Know Return
(Kirshner)

Kansas' fifth album, Point of Know Return, finds the band unspoiled by the commercial success of Leftoverture. Although this album will undoubtedly atttract many new fans, it shows the same high quality which has marked all of their previous efforts. The instrumental expertise so characteristic of various "progressive" English bands such as Gentle Giant, King Crimson, and Yes, is also a trademark of this midwestern band. They can do it all.

The original six members of Kansas who rose out of the "most unmusical environments imaginable" have remained with the band since their first album back in 1974. Kerry Livgren the blonde-haired prophet, writes most of the music and plays guitars and keyboards. Steve Walsh, who on this album writes as much as Livgren, sings most of the leads, as well as playing keyboards and vibes. Robbie Stienhardt, a tremendous violinist, also shares in lead vocals, while Rich Williams, Dave Hope and Phil Ehart are the second guitarist bassist, and drummer respectively. The tightness exhibited by these six men is rarely found in other bands. The only question I can ask about Kansas is, how did they manage to stay obscure through their first three albums, which were easily as good as their last two.

Point of Know Return has everything including a nice jacket. You can find dynamite rock and roll, ("LIghtning's Hand," "Sparks of the Tempest"), potential hit singles, ("Point of Know Return," "Portrait"), mellow numbers, ("dust in the Wind," "Nobody's Home") and even the typically Kansas idealistic investigation into the secrets of life, ("Helplessly Human"). This album should finally place Kansas at the top of progressive music where they have belonged for so long. Point of Know Return is an album well worth purchasing. It will please "head" music connoisseurs, heavy metal maggots, and popular music fans equally.

COLLIN WALCOTT
Grazing Dreams
(ECM)

This, Collin Walcott's second album on ECM, (the first being Cloud Dreams) is a fine, well-executed album, and despite the fact that it bears some of the characteristics that are becoming a bit too common to many ECM recordings, its more innovative traits make for an agreeable listening experience.

A good number of ECM recordings employ the use of very unrestrained tempos-and often long gaps of silence- with brooding, somber bass lines and light percussion. The statements made by the lead instruments vary somewhat in character yet are seldom either agressive or ebullent, rather they are almost always affectedly quirky and ponderously artful, and above all very rarely express a sense of musical humor. Indeed, the German company's motto is "ECM--the most beautiful sound next to silence", and this is certainly indicative of the label's approach to music; that any musical statement made has to be an improvement on silence. This leads to what is often an overly cautious, self-conscious approach, from which the results are not always as fruitful as they might be were there more of an emphasis on spontaneity. There is a a noticeable lack of youthful spirit, sensualiy or humor to many ECM recordings, often what one finds are dry, sharp, wintry broodings that could often pass as selections from Ode to a Scandanavian Forrest in Winter or something of the like. Nevertheless, ECM has been an innovative, creative label despite an increasingly manifest penchant for a certain style. It should be emphasized that this style in itself has been a unique one that has contributed much to modern music, through its use of open structures and unhurried soloing. The label offers a welcome alternative to the dumbo-chord banalities that are the essence of a lot of what is called "jazz rock" these days.

Grazing Dreams does embody many a-trifle-too-common ECM characteristics; slow, virtually non-existent tempos, somber atonalities and quirky, interrmittent cries from the instruments unfolding out over the stark musical lanscape.

What contributes greatly to this album is this use of Indian, Latin American, and African rhythyms and melodies and creative employment of the talents of trumpeter Don Cherry and percussinonist Dom Um Romao.

Walcott, the sitarist-perscussionist for the ecclectic, innovative ensemble named Oregon, plays his characteristic sinewy, remarkably lyrical lines and Indian-style percussion and compsed most of the selections on the album. These compositions have a substantial amount of the idiomatic variety which prevents the album from being indistinguishable from a good number of other ECM albums.

Cherry, a well-traveled, uncompromisingly non-commercial musician of the avant-garde of Afro-American music, demonstrates his versatality and knowledge of non-Western musical idioms with sure, spirited solos on the trumpet and wood flute. His wood flute solo on "Jewel Ornament" is a particularly enchanting, very spright African folk melody and his improvisational powers manifest themselves proudly on the two group improvisations on the album. Dom Um Romao, the Latin American percussionist who has played with Weather Report, contributes his broad talents on a good number of percussion instruments and his array of energetic polyrhythyms help to liven the spirit of the album. Guitarist John Abercrombie plays a electric mandolin and electric and acoustic guitars on this recording, and does a competent, though not particularly noteworthy job of playing intermittent, jagged riffs. Bassist Palle Danielsson, an ECM regular, provides the rythymic base of the music with the chatacteristic slow, full base lines throughout most of the album.

Fortunately, through the use of non-Western musical idioms--the melodies in particular-this album succeeds in providing us with an unusual kind of music that can be formed only by the prudent use of various and at times seemingly incongruous-musical idioms. Some of the compositions remind one of the brighter moments of early Weather Report and other times (not so surprisingly) of Walcott's group Oregon, which is probably the most accomplished ensemble of what could be called the New Ecclecticism. Though the common ECM traits are still here to some extent, the exceptions to the ECM norms are welcome things indeed. ("The Swarm", for example is a group improvisation that is a tornado of clashing tonalities that remind one of a Sun Ra excursion.) The quality of ECM recordings is second to none, and one can only hope that this technical excellence will be employed to record music of a broader range than that which has heretofore been recorded by them. This album, with its variety and moments of warmth and humor, is a good start in that direction.

Romeo and Juliet

"A pair of star-crossed lovers take their life
Whose misadventured piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents strife."

The University Ensemble Theater is presenting Romeo and Juliet again this weekend. The opening performance last Friday night, to a good extent brought to life the story, summarized in the prologue. It was nevertheless an uneven production, with flashes of comic brilliance, but also entire scenes of disappointing acting.

Director Jeffery Huberman should be applauded for his effective way of drawing out the bawdiness in the play. The comic bits were the highlight. The tragic parts would have been greatly improved if he had not made the enormous mistake of casting the wrong person for the role of Juliet.

Mercuritio, played by Calvin MacLean, was excellent. His comic sense is well-developed, in the way that he milked every last drop of humor from his lines, and used his props and stage action to the fullest comic potential. His timing was astute and, his emphasis never misplaced. His dying, though dramatic enough to suffice would need work in order to be truly moving.

The nurse, played by Elizabeth Redler-Thompson was the nurse Shakespeare would recognize. She was funny, meddling, showed age (most of the time), and filled with the love Juliet's mother lacks. Her opening scene was very funny, she posesses the ability to affect an entire audience with her laughter, It was smart to bundle her up in a lot of clothing, though she may have bursted out with unseemly youthfulness if not for the cloth that kept her from doing so. She too lacked some timing when it came to the scene of Juliet's apparent death.

Benvolio and the Capulet servants were also funny. Benvolio changes nicely from the rather effeminate friend to Romeo, to the person who virtually untangles the whole mixed up affair to the prince.

Romeo (Jere E. Burns II) was a good, strong lover because he gave me the feeling he was a true romantic, and was really in love with Juliet He spoke often too rapidly, and some of the beautiful poetry was lost. But he did gain a sense of the impetuosity of a young lover. The scene in Friar Laurence's cell when Romeo learns he has been banished was overacted to the point of almost being tongue-in-cheek. He was superior to all of the other actors in creating sadness in the other sad scenes.

He also posesses one of those faces god meant for lovers which added considerably to his role. One wished he had a suitable Juliet to fall in love with. Instead of contrasting and enhancing his role when they were together, he had to lend some of the ambiance of love to her. I wonder how much better he would have been with another Juliet.

Juliet (Debi Hopkins), was played with no feeling, no sense of the lines she was speaking, no dramatic force and most important of all, no growth. She starts off as a little girl and remains that way. It seemed ludicrous for her to threaten to take her own life, if she were forced to marry Paris, because she lacked the depth of character to make it believable.

Capulet (George W. Angell III), and Lady Capulet (Barbara Crook), are both good strong actors. Angell, changed from being a close-minded feuder in the middle of town, to someone who allowed Romeo to attend his banquet for the sake of domestic peace, employing the transitional ability of a professional actor. His explosion when he learns of Juliet's dissenting was one of the best parts in the play. The Montague's were weak, and I got little sense of either character.

As for the rest of the major roles, I was quite pleased. Tybalt, did well to bring out the irrational hate that can be passed on from old men to young one's, who then lose their lives over it. Paris did his best to be undesirable in comparison to Romeo. Friar Laurence was solid, playing the male counterpart to the meddling nurse with much understanding.

The set is good for the first part of the play, with it's very useful center stage space and the stairs facilitated good action. It should have been changed more radically when the scene changes to the tomb. I got the sense that Tybalt was buried under Juliet's balcony. The sword playthough swashbuckling, has little to do with the way Elizabethans would have fenced and looked like a grade B films remake of the Three Musketeers. Overall, the choreography and props are good.

I would recommend seeing this play because any production of Shakespeare is bound to bring alive those things a reader must perform in their mind when reading the play. Insights also occur at a live production. You'll surely laugh at this production, but I don't know about the crying.

Charley at Amherst

Where's Charley?

I had mixed feelings about the play Where's Charley?, which was presented at Amherst College last weekend. An overall judgement of the play is difficult because certain scenes were clever, and others were corney and not very entertaining.

When George Abbott and Frank Loesser wanted to write a light, airy musical comedy set in 1892, I think they got carried away with the silly dialogue and extremely corney songs.

Some of the lines were fairly funny, and the singing on the whole was quite good. The play takes place at Oxford University, where two college roommates are planning a luncheon for their sweethearts, and find themselves without a chaperone. They decide to dress up one of them, Charley, as his aunt who is late in coming from Brazil to visit Charley and make the lunch proper.

Charley played by David Rubin, had the expertise of a professional. Rubin's voice was powerful and melodic, and his dancing was superb. He actually made this somewhat silly production worth seeing. He sang an old favorite, "Always in Love With Amy", very cleverly and accompanied the song with excellent dance steps. He was applauded very heavily, so he came out and did an encore of the song.

The other roommate, Jack, played by Douglas J. Cohen, had a good stage presence also, and expressed himself very well. Amy (Kim Davis), Charley's girlfriend, portrayed a typical feminine pouting female from the good old days, fairly well. Her movement was good, as was her singing. Jack's fiance Kitty (Kim Davis), was not constant with her role. At times her voice as well as her lines had a weak quality.

Mr. Spettigue, (Jeffery E. Natter), Amy's uncle and Kitty's guardian, was excellent in his portrayal of a crotchity old man in his sixty's. While Charley impersonates his aunt, dressed in a black dress and an adorable hat with lacey ruffles, Spettigue takes a liking to her, and chases her across the stage many times while trying to court her. Each time the Spettigue ran across, the audience laughed at the clever way it was executed.

Jack's father, Sir Francis Chesney, a supposed man in his forties, had little sign of age. He looked and acted like a young man trying to have a sense of age. Charley's Aunt Donna Lucia, who does not appear until late in the play was not really missed. She was caught up in portraying an experienced lady, and at times her character was very phoney.

The costumes were beautiful, and the scenery was nice. The women's dresses in the style of the 1890's with the sashes and silky material along with huge bonnets set the ballroom dance scene aglow.

The orchestra was adequate, and though the choreography was not complex, and dances were done in company unison, the chorus members tried to pull it off.

If you like old fashioned music, and corney humor you will definitely enjoy the play. If not, Charley's fantastic performance made the whole evening worthwhile, and I would recommend the play because of him.

The play will continue this weekend, November 4-6 at 8:00pm, at Kirby Memorial Theater. Ticket prices are: General admission $2.50. Amherst College students free, with ID.

Furtivos

Angel and the Governor from Furtivos

FURTIVOS (Poachers)
Directed by: Jose luis Borau
Cast: Lola Goas, Olividi Montllor, Jose Luis Borau, Alicia Sanchez.

I can't restrain my excitement; Furtivos is a wonderful film. It's witty, passionate, critical, entertaining, original, profound...I can't say less than: Furtivos is one of the best feature films that I've had the opportunity to see this year - "a rose growing in a dung heap".

Furtivos is the story of a young poacher, Angel, who lives with his overly-protective mother. The two are people of little economic means, and exist by illegally poaching game from the surrounding forest. Angel goes to town one day, and madly falls in love with Milagros, a runaway from a girl's reform school. Mother doesn't like Milagros, basically because she is a threat to the existence of the secure relationship which she has with her son. At this time, the mother's foster son (who happens to be the provincial governor complete with protection from the Spanish guard) comes for a vacation to hunt the land which Angel poaches. Mother persuades the governor to have Milagros arrested and in order to save her from this fate, Angel marries her. Milagros' old boyfriend then shows up to complicate things even more. This action sets up the last part of the film which presents some interesting, suspenseful happenings.

Through this story line there are a few themes. Borau first depicts the relationship of Angel and his mother in a very interesting and insightful way. Mother is very possessive of Angel and at times seems to treat him as a lover rather tham a son. Angel on the other hand, is consciously trying to break away from the grips of his mother, thus starts the battle over Milagros. Borau depicts a mother-son conflict which can be seen in our own culture, and furthermore, he does it in a semi-comic, satirical manner while at the same time retaining incredible realism.

Since the film is set in Franco's fascist Spain, Borau clearly expresses a political stance. It's clear, after seeing this film, why the Spanish government prevented its release for so long. The movie shows Spanish society, at the time divided into two classes; the ruling class and the rest of the people. Borau presents Angel and his mother as people who work very hard so they can merely survive. They represent the workers in society, the common people. On the other hand, the governor represents the ruling structure, for he has the Guard at his disposal to terrorize anyone, such as by arresting Milagros. There is a blatant comparison of life styles and personalities within the film. The Governor is shown as a very gluttonous, superficial character whose only concern is his status and well-being. In the hunting scene, he is shown killing animals only for trophies. He, or rather his servants, cut off the heads and leave the rest of the animal to rot. In comparison, Angel is a very thrifty hunter who kills only for the animals' use value, that is, for the food and the hide. Comparisons like these run throughout the film and one certainly knows which side Borau's sympathy falls within: the classist society which he has depicted.

Of course there is more to this film than just these two themes. There is also a passionate love that ends unhappily, a murder, and an interesting look at Catholicism. Borau's film is not just for Spain, because the subjects dealt with are applicable to many other societies including our own. This is why Furtivos received much praise wherever it has played; it shows things that are important to people, and it shows them in an ingenious, witty, passionate, critical, entertaining, original, profound...manner.

Amherst Cinema

Ticket Prices: $2.00, adults, $1.00 seniors and children, Mon. and Tues. are dollar nights on selected films.

The Amherst Cinema, located on 30 Amity St. in Amherst center, is the most convenient of the area theatres. This house seats 700 and is old and run down: its reminiscent of many of the theatres I went to as a child. It used to be my favorite place to go in the wintertime with a friend and a blanket, for it was quite chilly. Management, to my disappointment, has installed a new heating system.

Film fare at the Amherst consists of art and cult films with an occaisional commercial movie. It is the owners' policy to cater to the arts community and the students. The theatre sometimes features old classic Hollywood movies.

The Amherst Cinema's foremost attributes are: the movies it shows, its reasonable prices, and its convenient location.

Pleasant St. Theater

The Pleasant St Theatre

Ticket Prices: adults: 2.25 regular, 2.50 double features and special shows, 2.00 silents; 1.25 seniors and children.

The Pleasant St. Theatre is the area's newest theatre located on 27 Pleasant St. across from Sheehan's in the center of Northampton. In addition to being the newest theatre, it is the smallest, seating only 140. The size of the theatre affords an atmosphere of intimacy and a level of technical quality virtually unsurpassed in this area. This house caters to the college community. It offers many old films, a continuing Cathering Hepburn festival, and Sunday afternoon silents complete with a live organist. In addition to the standard art fare, the Pleasant St. Theatre attempts to have many area premiers with personal appearances by the film makers whenever possible. Most notable of the "premiers" was the first area showing of Weisman's Titticut Follies. Another aspect of this theatre is its unusual snack bar which offers fruit juices and a variety of candy that is not typically found in other theatres.

The Pleasant St. Theatre is the most unusual of the area's movie houses. The wide variety of films and Sunday silents make the trip to Northampton worthwhile.

My Fair Lady

My Fair Lady, the biggest musical comedy hit in world history, will be presented twice on Thursday, November 3 at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at UMass. There will be a 3:30 matinee and an 8pm evening performance.

The Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical, adapted from George Bernard Shaw's brillant comedy of 1913, Pygmallion, is about a guttersnipe who was turned into a lady by a haughty phonetics professor to win a bet. It achieved the most striking popularity of any stage attraction of the mid-twentieth century. It ran in New York for six and a half years, and it's road tours throughout America and Abroad were similarly well recieved.

Edward Mulhare (Henry Higgins) and Anne Rogers (Eliza Doolittle) will recreate the magic they developed as the original stars of the National Company of My Fair Lady with their return in an extended tour.

"I think she's got it."

Mulhare plays the aristocratic speech professor and Rogers the dingy flower girl he takes home in order to prove that by training in upper class pronunciation he can pass her off as a cultivated woman of the world.

My Fair Lady contains the most abundant collection of song favorites of any show of modern times. The songs flow so spontaneously they appear to sing themselves. By now such glorious tunes as, "I Could Have Danced All Night", "The Rain In Spain", "On the Street Where You Live", and "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face", have entered into the musical consciousness of the world with affectionate permanence.

Ticket prices are: General Public, $7.50, $6.50 and $5.50. UMass students, $3.75,$3.25, $2.75. Other students and Senior Citizens $6.50, $5.50, and $4.50.

Boston Chancellor Golino's resignation...

Trustees didn't cause situation

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

UMass President Robert C. Wood last night said the UMass Board of Trustees did not create a situation on the UMass-Boston campus which led to this week's resignation of Chancellor Carlo L. Golino.

Wood replied to a Collegian quote of Boston campus student trustee Judy Baker who said Wednesday she believes the trustees "created" and helped contribute to faculty dissatisfaction by delaying the reappointment decision for the 64-year-old Golino.

The trustees last June lowered the mandatory retirement age for University administrators from 70 to 65, a policy which would have first affected Golino this spring when he turns 65.

Golino Wednesday submitted a resignation letter to the trustees at their meeting in Worcester, a week after 59 per cent of the UMass-Boston campus faculty voted "no confidence" in Golino.

Golino did not attend the trustees meeting, and has not been available for comment.

After receiving an appeal from Golino, the trustees this summer formed an ad hoc committee to study Golino's position on the campus and at their September meeting rescinded the three month old retirement policy.

Wood last night said Golino's letter "reflected a time of uncertainty" at the Boston campus.

Wood said the "general trustee feeling" was that this semester was an "appropriate time to look ahead" for the Boston campus.

"The trustees in discussion really felt it would be appropriate to look at the next five to six years on the (Boston) campus," Wood said.

"When the chancellor submitted his resignation, the trustees accepted it. There is a common concensus to that," Wood said.

The Boston Harbor campus numbers 7,200 commuting students who attend three colleges.

Wood last night also said the trustees will "seriously consider" Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery as the University's permanent president, but he added the trustees will be able to consider applicants from outside the University by this spring, the target date for the appointment.

Bromery this week told the Collegian he would accept the presidency if approached by the trustees. Bromery also said he had earlier requested the trustees to withdraw his name for interim president. According to trustee policy from the summer, the person appointed as interim president cannot be considered for the permanent position.

The trustees this week appointed Franklin Patterson, first president of Hampshire College, as interim president when Wood steps down in January.

Wood said when he announced his resignation in June, he believed six months would be "reasonable" time for the trustees to find a successor. He said he was an outside candidate in 1970 and it took eight months for the trustees to choose him.

Trustee Presidential Search Committee Chairman Stephen Breyer told the board this week his committee hopes to identify a permanent president by March or April.

Authoress discusses impacts on Chinese art

By RITA ZEIDNER
Collegian Staff

Chinese authoress and scholar Han Suyin last night related revolutionary movements and "socialist realism" in China as the driving forces behind the rebirth of Chinese art.

Suyin spoke in the Student Union Ballroom as a guest of the Distinguised Visitors Program.

Han Suyin, was born and raised in China but has lived, worked and studied in many countries. She attended Yenching University, Brussels University, and received a doctor of medicine degree in England in 1948.

Suyin said that since 1929 the revolutionary movements in China have had a great impact on China's art. Focusing on a history of Chinese art, Suyin explained that prior to 1958 there were only two types of painting. The highest quality work was the "professional" type. This type reached its peak in the Sung and Ming dynasties, then began to decline until the 1930's, when it was partially revived by the French impressionists. However, the ongoing revolution prevented the work from achieving its previous high standards.

The other type of art was the "folk painting" or "New Year Pictures." These were paintings of "good cheer"; good winning over evil, portrayed in traditional styles, using birds and flowers.

By 1958, several decades after the Chinese Revolution, artists began to change their attitudes. During this period, which Suyin referred to as "the great cultural leap forward," painters began to incorporate "socialist realism," a social and realistic context into their work. In an effort to both inspire themselves and also to share the art, professional painters went into rural areas to teach the peasants to paint. At the same time, factory and industrial workers all over China became involved in the rebirth of the cultural arts.

"Throughout the country," explained Suyin, "workers and peasants were participating in painting as part of their daily lives."

However, in the mid-1970's, the Gang of Four gained political power in China, and with the group came a number of social decrees, which Suyin said "distorted" the social norms that were established and effected. In addition to destroying the existing educational system, and turning the workers against their own masters, the Gang of Four established the "Three Peaks" — standards and criteria which all painters were expected to follow. These standards included anti-capitalist painting, and a "positive" portrayal of the Chinese lifestyle. Those painters who did not respect the Three Peaks were blacklisted, and often persecuted.

Recently, the Gang has become less rigid and those painters who were suppressed have been able to express themselves.

Suyin then expounded on the effects of the painters newly regained freedom to express themselves.

The painters from the workers focused primarily on industrialization and machines. Suyin said the peasants attitude: "As we work we look, and as we look, we draw." The techniques were "traditional, yet a little modern".

In addition, the modern painters painted with "100 flowers" applying a variety of styles to their writing.

Fence at drowning site temporary until spring

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

A permanent fence around a swampy section behind North Village Apartments where a 20-month-old girl drowned Sunday probably cannot be erected before spring, according to a UMass housing official.

Director of the Family Housing Office, Robert W. Fowler, told a group of North Village residents and University staff members in a meeting at the complex last night that while he agreed there was a need for a permanent chain link fence around the area, a temporary "snow fence" would have to be adequate through the Winter.

Physical plant workers Tuesday began construction of the temporary fence separating the apartments from the area where Nagi Kawasaki, daughter of Kenji Kawasaki and his wife Mariko, died after wandering away from her parents apartment.

The victim's father is a visiting researcher in the UMass polymer science department.

Fowler said a lack of funds and difficulty in coordinating construction efforts would make a permanent fence unfeasable in the near future. The temporary snow fence is firmly anchored in the ground and will be adequate if children "do not climb all over it", he said.

"I am only one man in one office. It would be unrealistic to give a definite date for construction of a permanent fence. You must remember we have to deal with both the physical plant and Whitmore here. This seems like it will become an emerging issue

Land purchase for outing club near completion

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The purchase of land in New Hampshire for use by the UMass Outing Club (UMOC), approved by the University Trustees at their monthly meeting Wednesday, should be completed within the month, Andy Bonacker, president of the UMOC, said yesterday.

The proposed land, located in Bethlehem on the edge of White Mountains, should be "ideal for winter activities" although year round use is the major advantage of the project.

Once the purchase of the land is completed, construction of a cabin to accommodate a maximum of 30 people will begin, Bonacker said.

Reasons for the UMOC purchase in New Hampshire are "to open up winter activities to more people," according to Karen Davis, UMOC treasurer. UMass averages only four trips each winter because "we have to use other peoples' cabins, which are in high demand." Many universities own land in New Hampshire for the use of their outing clubs and then rent out cabins to other groups, Davis said.

Plans for the purchase of land by the UMOC have been considered for several years but initial steps were taken last semester when the UMOC asked the Student Senate for $6,000 of the estimated $9,000 cost for the project. The remaining money was to be raised through a pledge campaign from former and current members. is based on a priority list from the UMOC. Flat fees charged per person for the cabin will run 50 cents for outing club members, $1 for all undergraduates and $1.50 for non-undergraduates and other Outing Clubs.

The senate did not fund the money to the UMOC, but it did grant a loan for the same amount, and gave UMOC the chance to pay it back by running the beer concession at last year's Spring Concert. UMOC made $6,000 on the concession, in addition to $4,000 from the pledge campaign and $1,500 from UMOC funds to cover the costs of buying the land and constructing a cabin.

Once the money had been raised by the UMOC, the purchase still had to be placed on the trustees' agenda and approved by both the UMass Building and Grounds committee and finally by the trustees. UMOC had waited for the approval since the end of last semester, but it was not until Oct. 20 that the Building and Grounds committee approved the purchase, bringing the subject to the monthly trustees meeting held Wednesday in Worcester.

Delays in purchasing the land were not expected to last throughout the summer, according to UMOC spokespersons. "We didn't think the budget, or getting on the agenda would take as long. We thought we'd get on the agenda at the beginning of the summer," Debra Provasoli, cabin co-chairperson, said last night.

UMOC will begin construction on the site as soon as possible, now that the trustees have approved the purchase of land. A trip to the area next weekend will serve as a final check before the purchase, and Provasoli said she hopes a parking lot can be cleared before winter.

Women's film series features slew of stars

By SHARON TRUE
Collegian Staff

Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, Clara Bow, Mae West, Lillian Oish, Marilyn Monroe — these are only a few of the women featured in the film series, Images of Women in American Film, being shown to the public Monday evenings at 8 p.m., in Herter Hall, Room 227.

The series, which includes Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? (Crawford), I'm No Angel (West), Suddenly Last Summer (Katherine Hepburn, Elizabeth Taylor), Rachel, Rachel (Joanne Woodward), to name just a few, is a Southwest Residential College course, co-sponsored by the Women's Studies Program, with additional funding provided by the Southwest Women's Center and the Southwest Center for Interdisciplinary Studies.

According to course instructor Anne Patenaude, the way in which women are portrayed in American commercial films from World War I to the present reflects the prevailing social attitudes toward the female behavioral roles and female character of each era. She cites, for example "the conservative teens," when Lillian Gish plays the fragile, innocent, child-like women; the "roaring twenties," with wild, independent flapper-girl Clara Bow; The Depression of the 30s, characterized by forget-all-your-troubles women as diverse as Shirley Temple, Mae West and the Gold Diggers; and the wartime career women of the 40s, such as Joan Crawford character, "Mildred Pierce".

For each of the films, (shown chronologically), Patenaude's class examines the following issues in relation to the social history at the time the film was produced and to the historical developments of the film industry itself: female stereotypes (career women, ingenue, victim, temptress); sex roles (mother, daughter, lover, wife); attitudes toward independence, passivity, ambition, trials, sacrifice, men; changes in these attitudes from 1914 to the 1970s; effects of the star system on the image of women; and personal disposition of the director toward women.

Patenaude said that although the circumstances, or the "outward trappings" of the film plots change from era to era, with very few exceptions, the underlying values concerning women's place in society have not really changed at all. The predominant message of most films is that women are happiest if they succeed in their roles as wives and mothers, she said. Under the influence of the women's movement, however, this message is beginning to change. Recent films have provided women with more complex roles and alternative routes to happiness.

Student Senate sued by NEAG for funds

By DAVE OLMOS
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government last night passed a motion to file a class action suit against the Student Senate Budget Committee and its treasurer Priscilla West.

The suit will be filed by Jeff Shapiro, a NEAG officer in an attempt to obtain funds which NEAG represetatives feel were improperly allocated to the other area governments. Shapiro said West used projected, rather than actual student population figures in allocating the money. These figures led to a misallocation of $10,152 according to Shapiro.

In other business, NEAG discussed a possible Arts Festival to take place in the barracks, in Worcester Dining Commons, during the first weekend in December. The festival would provide an opportunity for people to show their artwork and sell it. Possible activities during the weekend would be an art show, crafts fair, baked goods and some dance and music groups.

A tentative date of either Nov. 17 or 18 was set for two movies to be shown in Worcester dining commons; "Hot Rock" and "Chinatown" will be the featured films.

A proposal to allocate funds for a Northeast and Sylvan area work-study position of a recycling area coordinator was passed. NEAG voted to match Sylvan's funding to the position for up to $100.

The Social Committee also set a date of April 8 for a semiformal dance to be held in the Campus Center.

Leach dormitory requested $85 for a Nov. 20 coffee house. There was some debate on whether there should be a charge for donuts at area coffee houses. It was finally voted that a fee of ten cents apiece be charged for donuts, starting with the Leach coffee house.

A speaker discussed the progress being made on campus to decriminalize marijuana. NEAG decided to vote next week on a proposal to allocate $100 to the President's Transportation Account to help with the decriminalization drive.

Swans leave pond for long winter rest

By ANDREW TOMOLONIS
Collegian Staff

Two ducks and three swans splashed and squawked their way around the Campus Center pond yesterday with a motorboat weaving in close pursuit.

While most spectators watching the melee were cheering for the swans, the men in the boat were not villainous bird thieves, but rather University ground crew workers attempting to capture the birds and remove them from the pond for the winter.

James La Rose, working foreman for the grounds department, said the swans will be taken to Tillson Farm on East Pleasant Street, where they will be placed in the fenced off area.

"The Campus Pond freezes over in the winter," La Rose said. "And dogs can run across the ice and catch the birds where they swim, in a small open spot near the Campus Center end of the pond. At Tillson Farm, the birds will be safe in their pen, with running water and fenced protection from dogs."

The birds are removed from the pond each year, and although the birds' wings are either pinned or clipped, catching them is not an easy project.

"We run down the birds with the boat, chasing them until they get tired. Then we herd them to shore and grab them, careful not to injure them. This year, though, the birds seem to be a little smarter. We've been at it for more than two hours now and only one of the five birds have been captured," La Rose said.

"It's all a game," La Rose commented. "We know it, the students know it, and even stranger, the birds seem to know it. They're ahead now four to one, but before the day is over we'll have them."

By late afternoon all the birds were in captivity, and the grounds crew workers were ready to go home.

UMass staff will vote on union affiliation

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Leaders of the two unions vying to represent UMass clerical, administrative, and technical employees yesterday accused each other of not being able to adequately represent the employees.

An election will be held Dec. 8 and 9 in which the employees will choose between their present union, the National Association of Government Employees-Massachusetts State Employees Association (NAGE) and the Massachusetts Teachers Association-University Staff Association (MTA).

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission ruled that enough signatures were obtained from unhappy NAGE union members to hold the new election.

Mark Daguanno, national vice-president of NAGE, said yesterday the MTA would not be able to represent the employees interest "like we would."

Bernard K. Turner, spokesman for those staff advocating the MTA, labeled the charge "ridiculous."

A memo released from NAGE to all applicable UMass employees questioned whether the "rival" MTA could adequately represent the interests of the clerical employees.

The memo stated the MTA is "a teacher's union, not an administrators', clerical or technicians union." The memo further questioned who the MTA would "protect first — the teachers or the administrators, clerical, and technicians?" in the event of a teachers' strike.

The memo also stated the MTA needed the employees' money "to help pay for heavy fines incurred through illegal strikes."

"The MTA would more than adequately take care of clerical employees," Turner said. "Clerics would be totally separate from the teachers."

But, Daguanno said employees should realize that "Turner is a dissident" before considering Turner's anti-NAGE stance.

The decision to hold an election on Dec. 8 and 9 stems from employees who are unhappy with the NAGE representation and obtained signatures from the required 30 per cent of union members. The petition stated that the employees were dissatisfied with the present union and requested a new election to determine their bargaining unit.

The labor commission authorized the election once the signatures were received.

Turner said his group is seeking to have the MTA represent clerical employees rather than the NAGE because the NAGE voted in August to affiliate with the Massachusetts State Employees Union (MSEA). Turner said the action was taken without the consent of the NAGE membership.

This "enraged" the membership, Turner said.

Communal living situation explained

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Otmar Bauer employed all the improvisational acting skills of an off-Broadway star last night to promote the Actions-Analytical Organization (AAO) before a packed Campus Center room audience.

Bauer punctuated his introduction of the Austrian based "social model" with primal grunts, flamboyant gesticulations, and dimpled winks at members of the audience.

"What's the matter with your sexuality," Bauer asked. After a small public excursion into his childhood wherein he rejected the social roles of his father, Bauer lept upon a table in the small room and outlined the structure of the AAO.

Comprised of ten chapters located in Europe and Scandinavia, the AAO is a communal living situation practiced by more than 450 members emigrating from countless international locations. The AAO center, community of some 150 members." The located in Friedrichshof Austria, is "a village philosophy enjoins the conceptions of free sexuality, common property, common economy, collective children and a host of other communal ideologies.

The organization, begun in 1970, is based on the teachings of William Reich, whose preachings on communistic environment and sexuality were published more than two decades ago. Slight modifications of Reich's philosophy as well as the infusion of freudian analysis have produced a near self-sufficient community in Austria and satellite communes of 40 to 80 persons in international cities including Paris, Berlin, Geneva, and Oslo.

"We have 10 businesses, schools, and living and working facilities within our organizations" explained Bauer. He explained that the AAO works best in capitalistic developed countries and plans for chapters in communist ruled countries are "impossible." "We are pure communist but work within and for capitalism while we exist in the unreal capitalist society."

With the aid of Virginia Stolze, an American AAO member, Bauer revealed that since 1973, women in the organization have specific beds and "men are free to wander at night." Bauer said women must take over the world situation to "free men from their roles in society." One-to-one sexual relationships are not practiced in the organization and products of indiscriminate sexual unions are taught collectively by members.

Traveling by foot is tough business here

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Whiz...Whiz...

For some, crossing the intersection of Massachusets Avenue and Sunset Avenue at the south end of campus is more of an exercise in broken field running than the simple act of crossing the street.

Students traveling to and from Southwest flood the street, and motorists often do not strictly obey crosswalk regulations.

In an attempt to determine just how dangerous the situation may be and what can be done about it, the UMass Environmental Health and Safety Department conducted a study of the traffic situation on Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

"People have been complaining about this intersection for years," said Guy Fragala, head of the study team, gesturing at the busy street.

"We're trying to evaluate how dangerous it is," he said. "We're biased though; people have told us there is a problem."

"We are studying whether people use the crosswalks, whether motorists are stopping at the crosswalks, and also getting the flow of traffic," Fragala said.

The results of the study, designed by UMass Civil Engineering professor William W. Boyer, will be presented to the UMass Planning department, the Department of Public Safety, and other related agencies.

"We are trying to put a finger on the problem and maybe come up with a solution," Boyer said, talking about the study.

Fragala said one of the considerations in the study will be the tunnel passing under Massachusetts Avenue. The tunnel was built to provide access to and from Southwest without having to cross Massachusetts Avenue.

"Apparently, many people don't use it," Fragala said. "It creates a large flow of traffic here (at the intersection)".

Preliminary results from the study are expected by the middle of next week, according to Fragala; the study will make recommedations to solve problems with the area, he said.

"We will recommend where the bus should stop and things like that," Fragala said.

Index '77 expected by end of semester

By BRIAN NELSON
Collegian Staff

Index '77, the latest edition of the UMass yearbook, will soon be on its way from the American Yearbook Company presses in Kansas, according to yearbook editor Rebecca Greenberg.

However, no one knows exactly when it will arrive.

"We are hoping for an end of the semester delivery again (as last year), though we can't say for sure," said Greenberg, who attributes the possible delay to the new Index's "very complicated" design.

Greenberg declined further comment on the 108th yearbook in hopes of keeping it "a surprise". She did state, however, that it will surpass the previous two award-winning Indexes. She also said 6500 copies will be available for undergraduates, and advised students to get theirs as soon as they become available.

The Index, the University's oldest student organization, was first published in 1869, only six years after the University received its land grant. It has evolved from a slim 28-page pamphlet in 1969-70, to a girth-some 288 pages in 1977. It has also evolved, in spite of a continually decreasing budget — $37,034 in 1977, down from $45,120 in 1976, according to Jay Flynn of the Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee—into an award-winning college publication. In Greenberg's words, "the Index strives for perfection."

INDEX

THE YEARBOOK OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

SINCE 1869

Index '75 and Index '76 both received the Printing Industry of America Award in competition with professional publications in the category of books over 200 pages. The Index is the only college yearbook ever to win that award for two consecutive years, according to Greenberg. Index '76 also received a first class All-American rating for college yearbooks by the Associated Collegiate Press.

To get an Index, students must present their Index computer card along with one dollar. The card is automatically given to students who have paid their student activity for two semesters, Greenberg said.

The yearbooks are usually distributed in front of the Student Union on a first-come, first-served basis. Only students with an Index computer card, together with one dollar will receive an Index. Greenberg said the dollar is to cover budget deficiencies.

Index '78 is already in production, with positions open for News Editor and Academics Editor. Experience is not necessary for those or any other Index positions, said Greenberg, with the only real prerequisities being both enthusiasm and a desire to learn.

How Kind Klan offers its services

By RONALD W. JENSON
Special to
The Christian Science Monitor
San Ysidro, California

A maneuver by the Ku Klux Klan to set up a "border Klan watch" that would assist U.S. immigration and border patrol authorities spotting and apprehending illegal aliens crossing into the U.S. from Mexico has touched off a storm of protest.

It has triggered outrage among both blacks and Jews as well and sparked fears of violence among Mexican-Americans in this and surrounding communities.

At the same time, however, federal Border Patrol officials have discounted the Klan's assertions tht at least 30 illegal aliens were nabbed Oct. 25 — the first night of alleged Klan operations — as a result of calls made by the KKK to authorities.

"If there was a Klan watch in effect we haven't seen any evidence of it," a U.S. Border Patrol officer at a fog-shrouded Chula Vista command post told this writer during an inspection tour early Oct. 26.

(Texas Klansmen also claimed to have patrolled that state's border with Mexico and reported some 110 illegal crossings of the Rio Grande. Border officials there, however, denied being contacted by the Klan, according to United Press International.

Some have dismissed the Klan plan as a publicity stunt and an attempt to halt the flow of undocumented workers across the border by scare tactics alone.

Though the move appears to have been almost universally denounced by law-enforcement officials, Mexican-American leaders are nevertheless angered over what they claim was initial "tacit approval" of the border watch scheme by local U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) authorities.

Thus in the wake of the claim by KKK leader David Duke that at least 500 Klansmen have been stationed at selected spots along the California, Arizona, and Texas border, Mexican-American community leaders have:

- Called on President Carter and other elected representatives to put an immediate halt to "extremist vigilante groups patrolling" or being present near the international border with Mexico.
- Asked for a congressional investigation of the border situation and a meeting of Carter administration officials with representatives of the Mexican-American community and other groups affected by the immigration issue.
- Called for the immediate removal of two INS officials who reportedly told Mr. Duke and other Klansmen during a guided tour of the INS facility that information on illegal alien activities would be "welcome from any citizen."

Who gave the KKK permission to land in a private helicopter at the international border? these Mexican-American leaders ask.

"And why was an organization with a long and proven history of hatred, racism, and violence given what amounted to a 'red carpet welcome' by the INS?" asks Herman Baca, president of the San Diego-based Committee on Chicano Rights.

Responding to INS officials' assertions that the Klan was given the same tour of the INS that would be afforded any group, Mr. Baca continued: "That's bankrupt liberalism — the Chicanos have never been given anywhere near the type of courtesy treatment and it is difficult for us to imagine a more insensitive response.

Meanwhile, a motion for a temporary restraining order that would restrict the Klan's patrolling of the border was rejected Oct. 26 in a U.S. District Court in San Diego.

Craemen Gethers—take note of a symbol

Terrell Evans', 'Call it what you want'

I am sure, that by now most of you know who Craemen Gethers is and of the circumstances surrounding his case. If you know him personally then the things you have seen done to him must hurt deeply.

Craeman is more than just a person, he is a symbol of what it means to be black in America. His plight is no accident, the time he has spent in jail is no mistake. Craemen, others like him, and all of us who are born black in this country are labeled guilty from day one.

All that's needed is time for us to grow up, then we become a threat. By threat I don't mean we actually go out and commit a crime. Threat means we try to assert our blackness, love it, live it, be proud of it, share it, and find peace with it. Black people trying to do things like this in America are a threat, because to find out what it means to black in America means that white people must define themselves first. I don't think even the Devil calls himself 'Devil.'

Identifying ourselves means that we must change society's identity of us. In order to do this, society must change its perception of itself. Craemen's case is a perfect example of America's unwillingness to do so. They refuse to say they were wrong and it forces them to keep piling lies upon lies until they actually began to believe everything they have preached has actually been true all along.

Craemen's case is just one of thousands, but we know him and it hurts. It hurts because we want to scream and screaming never seems to help. It hurts because we have a clear idea of what is right and wrong. No matter how much right is put into it things still come out wrong and we are powerless to do anything about it, that's outside of violence. People get tired of having to answer to everything with violence.)

We began to ask ourselves 'Why?' 'What did we ever do to deserve all this?' Most pepple will probably answer that question by saying 'nothing!' but it goes deeper than that.

It has been said before that oppression has two parts. That of the oppressor and the oppressed cooperating with the oppressor. To some degree, all along we have been cooperating with the oppressor. There are only two choices that a person has in this situation. He can either choose to cooperate or choose to die.

This death I am speaking of most often comes about when the oppressed decides he will not cooperate any more. It is not a group decision, the decision can only be made by each and every individual. They have to decide to die and they have to decide to what degree they will put their lives on the line.

People like Malcolm X and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. decided they would rather die than live under such conditions. It is your decision, no one can tell you what to do. But there will always be people on both sides, no matter how you choose.

Jamaican leader knows of assassination plot

STOCKHOLM, Sweden [UPI] — Jamaican Prime Minister Michael Manley said Thursday he was aware of plots to assassinate him in 1976 but would not say if he believed the CIA was behind them.

But Manley said his country's relations with the United States had improved dramatically since President Carter took office because the new administration "is more sensitive to the interests of small nations."

Penthouse Magazine reported in its December issue that the CIA tried three times last year to assassinate the Jamaican leader but failed each time. The CIA denied the story.

Manley, in Stockholm on a three-day official visit to Sweden, said he knew of plots to kill him.

"I can confirm not a shot was fired," he said.

He refused to say if he thought the CIA had planned his murder but accused the spy agency of meddling in Jamaica's affairs in 1975-76 "to destabilize the country."

Asked if he would read the Penthouse article, he said, "It won't tell me anything I and my security people don't already know."

Penthouse said the assassinations were ordered after Manley rejected an ultimatum from then Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to end his support of Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

"Relations between Jamaica and the United States were quite strained in 1975-76 when we asserted our position toward multinational corporations in Jamaica, and toward Cuba and our position as a member of the Third World," Manley said.

"Our relations are much better now, they're very cordial.

"The new administration's foreign policy is more sensitive to the interests and needs of small nations, Africa and the Third World and seems to be seeking a more relaxed atmosphere in the Western hemisphere."

Manley brushed aside what he called "right-wing nonsense" about his friendship with Castro, who visited Jamaica last month.

"We have very principled relations with Cuba," he said.

Smith conference held on women and work

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"Protective Legislation and Women's Employment," an international conference, will be held at Smith College Thursday through Saturday.

The past, present, and future conditions of women's work experience will be covered, with special emphasis on the importance of "informed, equitable, policy-making in the long-run interest of all working persons," said Shawn Leary, conference coordinator.

Dorothy Haener, international representative of the women's department of the United Auto Workers union, delivered the conference's opening address last night.

The conference will continue with three sessions today and Saturday which will be open to the public. Today, a session on the history of protective legislation in the U.S. and Scandinavian countries will be held from 2-5 p.m., and will include a presentation on the biological research that has been done to justify special protection for women, said Leary. Saturday's sessions, from 9 a.m.-12:15 p.m. and 2-5 p.m. will deal with the implementation process of protective laws, and an attempt to develop just laws for the protection of all workers, said Leary.

Participants in the conference will include scholars and representatives — from the U.S. and several foreign countries — of labor groups, women's organizations, government, and the legal and medical professions, said Leary.

The conference is funded by a grant from the Ford Foundation.

Women's Week now being planned here

By CANDY CARLON
Collegian Staff

An organizational meeting for International Women's Week (IWW) was held Wednesday night, where women from WMUA, the Southwest Women's Center and the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) gathered to plan the event, scheduled for March 5-11, 1978.

This will be the second year an entire week has been dedicated to women's activities and awareness. The celebration will include concerts, lectures, films, workshops and theatre programs. Last year's speakers and performers included congresswoman Bella Abzug and jazz singer Betty Carter.

DVP has proposed Barbara Jordan, Rita Mae Brown, Joanne Greenberg and Inez Garcia as candidates for speakers. Carly Simon and Joan Baez head the list of performers being contacted.

Irene Richard coordinated the meeting and discussed the need for IWW on this campus. She stressed the goal of IWW "to have a week of all women's activities that would have an impact on the entire campus."

The workshops and programs being planned will be of interest to all women, including those in Third World, lesbian and senior citizen communities. Those with skills in fund raising, business and bookkeeping, publicity and art are being encouraged to become involved. The program is also looking for those involved in child care, educational and recreational areas. Last year, child care was provided for women participating in the program.

According to Richard, the Child Care Workshop was one of the most exciting events of the week.

The next meeting of the IWW committee is scheduled for Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. No experience is necessary to become involved in the IWW celebration — just enthusiasm.

Pat Hearst's lawyers to appeal court ruling

SAN FRANCISCO [AP] — As Patricia Hearst's lawyers readied an appeal Thursday of a ruling upholding her bank robbery conviction, her onetime fugitive companions, William and Emily Harris, prepared for a court appearance on charges of kidnapping her four years ago.

Miss Hearst's attorney, Al Johnson, said his 23-year-old client was optimistic that her guilty verdict eventually would be overturned.

Earlier, Miss Hearst assailed the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which upheld her conviction Wednesday, as "incapable of rendering a purely just decision."

Johnson said, "She is disappointed about the appellate ruling but is optimistic about what the final result will be." The last resort is the U.S. Supreme Court.

Miss Hearst was convicted in March 1976 of joining her terrorist kidnappers in the 1974 armed robbery of a San Francisco bank and was sentenced to seven years in prison. She is free on $1 million bail.

U.S. Attorney James L. Browning Jr. said the government had no plans to seek her reimprisonment until all appeals are exhausted.

Meanwhile, Miss Hearst's accused abductors prepared to open their legal battle Friday in Oakland against charges that they kidnapped the newspaper heiress amid a volley of gunfire on Feb. 4, 1974.

The much-delayed preliminary hearing for the Harrises, among the few surviving members of the terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army, comes after a year-long fight by the couple to get attorneys of their choice appointed to defend them at public expense.

The California Supreme Court agreed with the Harrises' position. Last month Los Angeles attorney Leonard Weinglass was named to defend Harris and San Francisco lawyer Susan Jordan was appointed counsel for Mrs. Harris.

Weinglass represented the couple last year in Los Angeles when they were convicted of kidnapping Hearst. They are serving 11 years-to-life sentences.

The volatile Harrises, who repeatedly interrupted previous court appearances with outbursts against the judge, have vowed to flavor the trial with their radical political beliefs.

"It is clear the SLA will be on trial here," Mrs. Harris said at one of those court sessions. The defense, she said, will convey "the objectives, motivations and philosophies of this organization."

The SLA, a ragtag tribe of less than a dozen active members at its peak, burst into prominence with the kidnapping of Miss Hearst, granddaughter of the late newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst, and claimed her as their most famous recruit.

In tapes sent to news media in the spring of 1974, Miss Hearst reviled her parents and pledged allegiance to the SLA. She eulogized six who died in a fiery shootout with Los Angeles police in May 1974.

But at her bank robbery trial, she testified the tapes were made under threat of death. She said the Harrises beat her and mentally tormented her until all three were arrested in San Francisco in September 1975.

U.S. oil study cites reliance on imports

NEW YORK [AP] — The United States will become increasingly reliant on oil imports even though the growth rate of energy consumption and the actual amount of gasoline used in the country will decrease through the 1980s, according to a study released yesterday.

The report, by the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, contradicted some important elements of President Carter's energy plan, and disagreed with some estimates made by government agencies and industry officials since Carter's plan was introduced last April.

Carter, attempting to save his energy plan in Congress, will address the nation on TV Tuesday night, the White House said yesterday.

One of the prime goals of the president's plan is a reduction of oil imports from the average 8.5 million barrels a day this year to 6 million barrels a day by 1985.

But the foundation estimated that imports in 1985 will be around 9.6 million barrels a day.

"It's not just that his plan is not being accepted by Congress. The plan itself could never achieve the president's goal," said John H. Lichtblau, executive director of the foundation, which is partially supported by oil-industry funds but has a reputation for independence.

The General Accounting Office estimates the 1985 level of imports at 11.9 million to 12.9 million barrels a day, and Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil firm, estimates it at 12.5 million.

The foundation predicted that the high prices for oil and government programs would cut the growth rate of energy demand between now and 1985 to about 2.1 per cent from the current 4.3 per cent. The president said his plan would result in a growth rate below 2 per cent.

All of the foundation's predictions were based on a lower level of general economic growth during the period than the level assumed by the administration. Generally, a lower level of economic growth would be expected to result in reduced growth of energy demand.

The report said that gasoline demand, after a modest increase during the next two years, would decline through the 1980s and by 1990 would match the demand of 1976 despite the fact that there would be 40 per cent more vehicles on the road.

The foundation said the projection was "based entirely on more efficient gasoline utilization" in new cars from 1978 on, as mandated by existing legislation, and a growing switch from gasoline to diesel engines beginning in the early 1980s because of the latter's much higher fuel efficiency."

Value of education discussed by Governors

DENVER [UPI] — Governors of three states yesterday urged establishment of minimal competency standards for high school students to guarantee the American people receive full value for tax dollars spent on education.

But the chief executives said the standards should be set up on statewide, rather than national, levels to guard against their being used as overall goals for maximum educational achievement.

Govs. Otis R. Bowen, Indiana; Scott Matheson, Utah, and Richard Snelling, Vermont, made the comments at a news conference during a two-day meeting of the steering committee of the Education Committee of the Educational Commision of the States. Bowen is chairman of the commission.

"The question of minimal competency standards must be faced up to to ensure that each student reaches a minimum level of educational attainment," Matheson said. "But these standards must not become the mark we want our students to aim for. We must encourage our young people to surpass these standards whenever possible."

Snelling said he does not believe Americans are receiving less and less for their educational dollars, even though there is no correlation between increased spending and an improved product.

"But many people appear to feel that since spending more dollars does not necessarily improve the quality of our graduates, we can afford to reduce the money spent on education," Snelling said. "That's a very dangerous theory, however, and one this commission and other groups interested in education are trying to combat."

Bowen admitted the nation's present education system has faults, but said critics must remember that because of technological and scientific advancements, the amount of knowledge to be taught doubles every five or six years.

Snelling said the solution might lie in a thorough re-evaluation of the nation's educational goals. Such a re-examination, he said, would necessitate an updating of educational methods and an objective judging of some newer, and some older, teaching practices.

"It has been a long time since we have evaluated our fundamental concepts of education in this country," Snelling said. "One of the things that has hurt education is that when a new theory is tried in a college or university, where the teachers and students are exceptional, it works marvelously.

"But when the theory is put into practice in general teaching, where faculty and students may be only average, it falls flat," he said.

WWII WASPS win fight to attain veterans status

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House yesterday agreed with the Senate that some 800 surviving women pilots from World War II — the WASPS — should receive veterans benefits.

The provision approved without debate and by voice vote culminated a 34-year fight by members of the Women Airforce Service Pilots to win veteran status.

A bipartisan effort by most of the 18 women members of the House, led by Rep. Margaret Heckler, R-Mass., resulted in House acceptance of the Senate provision which was attached to an earlier House-passed measure raising G.I. education allowance rates by 6.6 per cent.

The House revised the Senate language on the WASP provision to require that the Pentagon make the final determination that the women should be considered as veterans of World War II and qualified for all G.I. benefits.

That charge required the bill to return to the Senate for final congressional approval. The Pentagon already has said in writing to the House Veterans Affairs Committee it supports extension of veterans benefits to the women pilots who numbered more than 1,000 at the peak of the war years.

The women pilots flew military planes from B-29s down to Piper Cubs in the United States, freeing males for overseas duty, according to their wartime organizer, Jacqueline Cecran.

Rep. Ray Roberts, D-Tex., chairman of the veterans panel, and Rep. Olin Teague, D-Tex., senior Democrat on the panel behind Roberts, opposed giving the women full veterans status on grounds it would set a precedent for other "para-military" units.

Mrs. Heckler met past 1 a.m. yesterday with Teague and Roberts before getting their approval of the compromise language.

The education measure will bring increased benefits to an estimated 1.8 million veterans and their dependents and will be retroactive to cover the 1977-78 school year that started in September.

Roberts estimated the first-year cost of the increased education benefits at $483 million with a five-year cost of some $1.5 billion.

In other action, the House yesterday passed by voice and sent to the Senate a bill carrying a 6.5 per cent increase in disability pensions for 2.7 million veterans or their survivors, effective Jan. 1.

The increase, expected to cost about $130 million, will go to some 1 million veterans suffering total disability from non-service-connected causes and to another 1.7 million widows and children of such veterans. The pensions are paid on a basis of economic need.

The increase was described by the House Veterans Affairs Committee as a cost-of-living boost but also to compensate for any cuts that would be made in the pensions in the face of increases in their social security benefits.

In the Senate, members approved by voice vote an amendment to the Social Security bill which would shield veterans and their windows from having their pensions cut when Social Security benefits rise.

Sadat wants preparations for Middle East talks

By United Press International

Egypt's President Anwar Sadat called yesterday for setting up a "working committee" to draw up an agenda and make real preparations for a Geneva Middle East peace conference.

Otherwise, Sadat said, Egypt will not take part in the peace talks, tentatively slated to be held next December.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said Israel would seek end-of-war accords with the Arabs if final peace agreements cannot be reached at Geneva.

Sadat, speaking to Egyptian journalists who accompanied him on a flight back from Saudi Arabia, said Egypt "will not take part in the Geneva conference unless preparations, real preparations, are made.

"This means that a working committee should be set up to draw up the topics which will be discussed, with the agreement of Arab countries and the United States," Sadat said.

Dayan, speaking to a group of students at Ben Gurion University in Beersheba, said that Israel is ready to negotiate at Geneva "also to produce end of war treaties with the Arabs as an advanced stage toward a peace settlement."

His remarks echoed the stand of former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's government, ousted by Prime Minister Menahem Begin's conservative Likud bloc in last May's election.

A government source said Dayan's remarks represent his own views and do not indicate a change in government thinking on Geneva. Begin has been committed to seeking full-fledged peace treaties with the Arabs at Geneva.

In his statements to the Egyptian journalists, Sadat emphasized Cairo will not conclude a unilateral peace with Israel, which means an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty will not be signed, unless Syria and Jordan are ready to conclude similar agreements with the Jewish State.

"Egypt is committed to its often-declared strategy: total Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands and the creation of a Palestinian state," Sadat said.

House pays tribute to Hubert Humphrey

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House chucked its own rules, set business aside and paid unprecedented tribute yesterday to a member of what it calls "the other body" — Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota.

"We asked you here because we love you," Democratic leader Jim Wright told Humphrey during an emotional, hour-long welcoming ceremony that began and ended with standing ovations for the cancer stricken senator.

Speaker Thomas O'Neill himself broke the musty oratorical rule against referring to a member of "the other body" by name, saying "Hubert Humphrey, you are the most genuine liberal this country could ever produce. Your presence in this House brings honor, pride and distinction to it."

The House has never, in the memory of veteran observers, interrupted its business to honor a sitting member of the Senate.

Yesterday, it gave Humphrey in a rousing outpouring of sentiment reminiscent of the thunderous welcome his own chamber gave him a week ago.

The floor was jammed with members and staff workers and the public galleries filled to capacity when the senator, his wife, his sister and a niece walked into the chamber to a two-minute standing ovation.

Humphrey returned a week ago from a two-month medical absence during which he learned he has inoperable pelvic cancer.

The House made its tribute all the more singular by insisting that Humphrey deliver his own remarks from the speaker's podium — where presidents deliver the State of Union addresses — and not merely from the well where ordinary debate is conducted.

"This is an honor that I never believed would happen," he told the chamber.

Noting jovially that he had finally achieved his dream of flying on Air Force One, the presidential jet, when President Carter flew him from Minnesota to Washington last week, he added:

"Now I'm standing where the President of the United States stands to give the State of the Union address.

"My Goodness!"

He noted he had never served in the House himself, and said that was because "when I found out that you have rules limiting speeches to two minutes or five minutes, I decided that would drive me into utter frustration."

He spoke for 21 minutes. Then he walked back to his seat to the roar of another standing ovation, got a kiss and a pat on the cheeks from wife Muriel and set off shaking hands with everyone within reach.

Soviet activists protest death penalty

MOSCOW [AP] — A group of Russian human rights activists opened a campaign yesterday to eliminate the death penalty, a punishment seldom publicized but reportedly often imposed in the Soviet Union.

Soviet law allows for capital punishment in cases of treason, murder, hijacking, attempted escape across Soviet borders and serious economic crimes, such as bribe-taking and large-scale embezzlement. Other special articles provide for capital punishment in the armed forces.

The Soviet Union publishes no crime statistics, but Western diplomats here say they believe several dozen citizens are executed each year. The usual method is firing squad.

The subject is not publicly discussed, executions are rarely mentioned in the press and there is no organized campaign for the abolition of the death penalty.

But yesterday the six Russian members of Amnesty International, backed by 23 human rights activists, including Nobel Peace Prize winner Andrei D. Sakharov, said they had mailed an appeal to the Soviet parliament to remove the death penalty from the law books.

Amnesty International is a London-based prisoners-rights group that was awarded the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize.

"Just maybe we will get some kind of response to our petition," said one of its supporters. "This subject should not be surrounded by silence."

The petition proposed that the Kremlin take the opportunity of the current 60th anniversary jubilee of the Russian Revolution to abolish the death penalty.

Life is "the priceless and untouchable gift of nature," it said, and the death penalty "does not strengthen but weakens the government."

Its abolition "would show all peoples and governments a great example of good will and love of man," the petition said.

The petition was a departure for the dissidents, whose criticisms generally are aimed at obstacles to free speech, assembly and emigration and similar problems.

But one of their number, Anatoly Shcharansky, is currently under investigation for alleged espionage contacts with American diplomats and journalists, a capital charge of treason that could carry the death penalty.

In 1975, a U.N. survey found that 104 nations had provisions for capital punishment in their legal codes.

The U.S. Supreme Court has found the death penalty constitutional in murder cases. But only one man, Gary Gilmore, shot in Utah last January, has been executed in the United States in the past 10 years.

Auditors cite wide misuse of military jets

WASHINGTON [AP] — High ranking military and civilian officials systematically misuse military aircraft and have kept some Air Force pilots so busy flying generals they had no time for required combat training, Pentagon auditors said yesterday.

The Defense Audit Service made the finding in a report that said the military and civilian defense officials use military planes for personal trips or for low priority missions at an annual cost of at least $52.3 million.

The report was made public by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who cited it as an example of flagrant waste.

The secretary of defense last year ordered that the military's "special air mission" aircraft be used only for official business and only when commercial transportation was not available. But Clement E. Roy, deputy director of the audit service, said military aircraft continued to be improperly used.

Distinctions in combatting porn

fifi ball

Pornography: the depiction of erotic behavior designed primarily to cause sexual excitement.

The Meriam Webster Dictionary, 1974

The majority of us, in this community, would agree that most pornography is bad in any form: film, books, magazines, live "entertainment", advertising, etc.

But the issue of how to deal with pornography often gets clouded by two very different views, both opposing it, that become confused and combined with each other. Though each view may have its merits, it's important to realize the distinction in order to be able to deal more efficiently with the opposition we get. The two issues are sex and sexism.

Some people react to pornography because its mass exposure of what represents, for most of us, an extremely private part of our lives. Sex and sex roles are exploited all over the media because they're things we're instrinsically interested in. (This exploitation is especially obvious in the picture we get of ourselves from most advertising.)

It's reached the point where totally unnatural and unrealistic criteria, and our resulting insecurities, have been created regarding body image and sexual "performance."

This exploitation of our sexuality reaches its pinnacle in pornography. People get most vocal when the indignities become blatant.

The other objection is raised by those who feel most pornography exploits women by placing them in roles or positions that perpetuating the myth that women can validly be looked at as sexual objects rather than as whole people. This kind of exploitation is also epitomized in pornography.

These two perspectives are obviously very different. So different, in fact, that many people from one may be opposed to, or ignorant of, the views of the other.

The reactions to pornography become confusing when they don't address themselves to a particular perspective. For example, the proposed legislative ban on the use of children in pornography may indicate a recognition of the long-term affects of this kind of portrayal (and, in this case, can potentially be expanded to include women or all adults.) Or it may reflect the general feeling that children shouldn't be involved in sexual activity with adults.

Those who react against pornography on the grounds of some sort of sexual morality are often labeled prudes. The public reaction against this should be distinguished from that against the feminist perspective. Though both factions end up getting "censorship" screamed at them, the reasoning and counter-attacks are very different. This difference should be recognized by pro- as well as anti-pornography people.

It's important for pro-porners to address themselves to the correct perspective, and it's important for those against pornography, after recognizing the differences, to keep our factions working together to combat what we both see as a gross violation.

Student run towing?

jay martus

If all goes as planned by the Committee for Student Run Towing, we may soon see the replacement of the abhorred Amherst Towing trucks with a mini-fleet of Student Senate Towing trucks. The logic of giving away this lucrative enterprise to an outside firm escapes both the committee and myself. To accept this hot potato of towing of students, staff, faculty, and visitors by the already tarnished Student Senate is not at all a logically reasoned act either.

Why does the Student Senate want to be responsible for towing on behalf of the university administration? There are valid as well as questionable reasons for the proposal. The cost to the person towed would be reduced. There would be a grievance procedure (presently absent) in towing actions allowing for redress of the towing action, if it proved to be undertaken unnecessarily or if any damage occured. The cost of the operation appears reasonable, if all assumptions of the towing policy remain constant. What happens if the groups who use the parking facilities and have policy making powers over towing are not in according with the Student Senate tow service? Will the interest in earning enough money to support the operation outweigh the progressive change in towing policy? Will the interests of all the users be served by having regulations enforced that ensure the economic survival of the towing service?

My questioning of the proposal will probably be viewed as heresy. Before any current proposal had been brought to the Student Senate, letters to the editor by the committee and individuals working for it have pre-condemned any dissension or extensive discussion on this major issues as being against the interests of the university community. Careful discussion and analysis cannot occur at this point, they argue, because of the timeline of preparing a proposal for submitting a competitive bid against Amherst Towing. By creating the need for rapid review by the senate, we are being asked to accept without question. The crisis of time could have been avoided had the proposal gotten to the senate ealier.

Why couldn't efforts have been made to have the User's Council, the group responsible for all other aspects of the parking system, be responsible for the establishment and operation of a towing facility? If efforts to reform the parking regulations were the concentration of the User, the people (students, staff, faculty) who make the policy could implement necessary modifications to adjust an on-campus tow service much more quickly and efficiently than a group whose only interest will be its own survival.

In defense of higher freedoms

bob melia

The Collegian is carefully and cautiously moving to consider censorship of advertisements considered sexist, and as censorship is potentially dangerous, I think it behooves us to examine its implications.

The main arguments against censorship can be summarized as follows. Not everyone considers something offensive, and even if something is generally offensive, censorship deprives us of the opportunity to decide for ourselves. What right has a handful of students sitting on a censorship board to determine what 20,000 students see? And what right does this board have to prevent advertisers from transmitting their message to us, especially when some of us want to see the message? The answers to these questions, of course, constitute the case for censorship, so we will explore each question thoroughly.

Admittedly censorship deprives us of the freedom to observe and analyze censored material. But the failure to censor sexist ads also deprives us of a freedom; the freedom to live in an environment in which corporations don't force us into roles which suit their needs. By depicting the role of women as that of amusing and entertaining men, sexist advertisements distort the consciousness of women. By pushing women along a road of development which treats them as objects, sexism closes off all other avenues of growth and thus stunts womens' emotional, sexual and creative development.

Men are also affected. If women are forced to play a dehumanizing role in relation to men, men must, to maintain the farce, play the opposite but equally stunted and degrading role in their relations with women. Freedom from this type of environment and manipulation is a more important freedom than that of being able to pick up the Collegian and look at the ever-so-attractive Dean of Beer.

But this reasoning alone does not justify censorship, for we must also justify denying advertisers the ability to transmit to us a message. Corporations have one reason for existence; profits. Consequently they view people as objects to be manipulated in such a way as to maximize profits. Our thoughts and feelings are important to corporations only insofar as they can be exploited and shaped to suit the corporate purpose. Naturally corporations' advertisement reflects this purpose, and depicts us, and encourages us to view others, as objects.

It is obvious that these advertisements are incompatible with the purpose of the Collegian. The Collegian is not out to make a profit. As a part, an important part, of this university, the Collegian strives to provide us with information that will expand our horizons and it serves also as a forum in which to debate issues that will help develop our awareness and sensitivity. Clearly advertisements which stunt our growth, which encourage us to think in stereotypical terms, do not help achieve the Collegian's purposes. Clearly, then, there is no place in the Collegian for such ads.

But the most important arguements for censorship have not yet been presented. Sexism is an all-pervasive influence in our society; we are exposed to it so often and from such an early age that we have come to regard it as natural. We have grown accustomed to it to the point where we hardly realize what is happening to us. I would not be surprised if someone wrote a letter saying that because sexist advertisements didn't lead him to go out and categorize women in a degrading manner, they have no harmful effects. Advertising is more subtle than this, and we must be subtle. Because some of us are near sighted does not mean that all of us must put in blinders. We are human beings, not horses.

And the irony of this situation is that those who are least offended by sexiam are those who are most hurt by it. If you are conscious of what sexism does to your self-image and social awareness, than you can fight it. But if sexism is embedded so deep in your being that you don't even realize it's there, you're in real trouble. Thus we arrive at the interesting conclusion that those who don't realize that certain material is sexist, or who aren't offended by it, are those who most need to be protected from it.

An example should make this clear. A person is sitting in a chair with electrodes implanted in his/ her head. An electrical charge then stimulates this person, and when asked what s-he wants most, the person answers, "I want to be stimulated again." I don't think anyone would argue that under these conditions this person is freely choosing to be stimulated by electrical charges. S-he is not free because s-he is being manipulated, being treated as a mere object, being denied the ability to exercise his/ her moral and critical judgement.

Sexism, and sexist advertisements, manipulate people, just as do electrical charges. The process is less intense, less blatant, and infinitely more subtle (and thus more dangerous). But the logic and the result are the same: we are being manipulated, treated as objects whose sole reason for existence is to enrich corporate coffers.

Wants generated under these conditions are not, I submit, wants appropriate to the human condition, provided that one views humans as beings capable of independent, moral thought and action. It is this thought and action which must be protected; and it is the freedom to think and act in a logically consistent and morally acceptable manner that censorship, in this case, will protect.

There come times when we simply must have the intelligence and courage to sacrifice lesser freedoms for higher and more noble freedoms.

Editor's note: At a Collegian staff meeting Wednesday night, the topic for discussion was advertising considered to be sexist, and what actions the newspaper should take regarding such ads. After considerable discussion, two votes of sentiment were tallied. The first, which passed 17-11, was to not print a particular Schlitz beer ad. The second, which passed unanimously, was to have the Board of Editors establish an advertising review board made up of at least 50 per cent women, and to write explanations of the policy established and send them to appropriate advertising agencies. The two editorials in this space present some reactions to the meeting and arguments for and against the exclusion of certain ads.

Let's take a vote

By DAVID PERLOW

After attending a meeting that I'm sure most of you were unaware of, I was left with a bitter, no, impelling taste on my tongue. On Wednesday evening the Collegian held a staff meeting during which we were to decide by vote if certain "sexist" ads should be banned from the newspaper. Since I know that you are all dying to know the results of the vote, I won't tell you. Instead I'll try to objectively review the proceedings, and allow you the reader to vote for yourself, on a symbolic level of course, because all of this has already been decided for you anyhow.

The meeting began with an introduction to the issue at hand. Specifically, the question related to some of the ads that have been running for various breweries — Schlitz, Miller, and Schmidts. Many of these ads have been termed "sexist," hence not fit to print, because they portray women in a degrading fasion. For instance, we were shown a Schlitz ad that pictured a very pretty woman dressed in a tight tee-shirt, and hot pants. I must say, this ad really reinforced my image of women as sex objects. And the nerve of that company to manipulate my puritan mind with that slander. The next woman that I saw would have been filed right into the same category as this Schlitz girl. I was now sure that all women were like her. But before I get completely carried away, let me further discuss the proceedings.

Next were presentations by various members of the advertising and editorial staffs, either asserting the right of the ads to appear, or asserting the right of the Collegian staff to censor the ads. Both sides were well represented with the typical rhetoric that normally surrounds such an issue. You know, the Supreme Court can't decide on a pornography stance, but the Collegian staff is definitely capable of defining what is "sexist", and what should not be allowed in the paper. (I do believe that my objectivity is waning. But back to the meeting.) After the Supreme Court Justices, I mean Collegian Staffers made their presentations, there was an intellectual discussion period, during which I heard some of the most eloquent speakers of this era. I couldn't, however, concentrate on the discussion, because I kept glancing at that Schlitz ad, subconsciously reinforcing my image of women.

Obviously, me, a 21 year old college student does not have the intelligence to take this ad for its intended worth. No, I should not be able to see such an ad, because even as this discussion was progressing I was categorizing all women on the basis of this Schlitz ad.

The eloquence continued and my, was I ever impressed. People kept reiterating the same legitimate points: These ads are sexist; these ads are a manipulation of the consumers minds, etc. At this time it occurred to me; What advertisement isn't a manipulation of your mind? How many courses at this school teach you to manipulate someone else? Is not the censorship of ads from your newspaper a manipulation of your mind?

Finally, one eloquent speaker summarized the whole event perfectly when after it had been decided that an advertising review board be set up, he moved that 50 per cent of the board be male, and the other 50 per cent be female. Just like your average American jury, right? Mandating such a ratio is absurd, and only reinforces the notion that men inherently think differently than women. But of course I am basing this account on objectivity; SO VOTE! What do you think?

While responses won't have too much affect on our tyrannical decision, perhaps they will wake a few people up. I mean, objectively speaking, a 17 to 11 vote, on an issue that affects 23,000 people, might not be the best solution to the problem.

Jewish group opposes Bakke case

To the Editor:

Resources Judaica, the voice of the Jewish community on campus, wants it to be known that we do not join in the cries of Bakke and others, that affirmative action is reverse discrimination.

There are some national Jewish groups in this country that have declared a pro-Bakke stance, and this is because they are helplessly blinded by the illusion of the American dream. Many Jews have repeated the mistakes of their "liquidated" German brethren, by believing that they can safely assimilate into a white society. If one studies history closely, one will arrive at the same conclusion that we have; when the economy weakens, inflation shoots up, unemployment reaches heights that no one ever dreamed of, and even if Jews are in many positions of doctors, lawyers, writers, artists, as they were in Germany, they will be blamed for the problems of the society and will be persecuted for them.

We have studied the Bakke case and realize that there are many factors indicating that Bakke has no case at all. The first and most important is the fact that we live in a seriously racist society which makes it difficult and practically impossible for a Third World person to have the same access to a good and necessary education as a white person has. Therefore the only guarantee the Third World has of professional positions at this time is through affirmative action. Secondly, medical schools put a heavy emphasis on standardized tests which are geared towards the white middle class person. They are discriminatory.

Some other facts that need to be examined are; Bakke was rejected from twelve other medical schools and he is 32 years old. 84 spaces out of 100 are open for non-"under privileged" people, who are all white and 35 of these students received lower grades than Bakke and still got in. Bakke was further down on the waiting list than 16th, and even if these slots were not reserved for "under privileged" folks, he still wouldn't have had a chance. We think that it is very suspicious that the assistant Dean of Admissions contributed to Bakke's law suit, ane he is now the Dean of another university.

We urge people to consider this cry of reverse discrimination as a ploy of our coy leaders to take away the rights to the Third World community that were so fiercely and painstakingly fought for during the 1960's. It is another plot to keep the masses fighting over the small crumbs which were strategically laid out by our capitalistic leaders. Why are there so few available positions in medical schools? There is surely a need for lower doctors' bills, and more doctors!

As the new Jews who have been molded out of the ashes of our fathers and mothers in the German crematoriums, we side with the Third World in their cry, "REVERSE THE BAAKE DECISION!"

'Cream a pig'— International Week of Pieing

To the Editor:

Follow your desires! Release your aggression in a positive, creative way. Cream a pig with us, The Revolutionary Three Stooges Brigade, along with the Canadian Anarchist Party [Groucho-Marxist] and certain groups in the U.S. have declared November 4 through 11 the International Week of Pieing. Arise you downtrodden masses and strike a blow for freedom. Choose a suitable target, whether he, she, or it be of local, national or international infamy, and pie away.

The pie as a political weapon has cut down such notaries as Daniel Moynihan, William F. Buckley, Anita Bryant, E. Howard Hunt, and Governor James Rhodes. Let the pie stand for, and be thrown for, your political beliefs. Join behind the Pied Crusader, Aron Kay. Let yourself be heard along with your brothers and sisters across the country when the pies take to the air.

So far the pie deluge has been carried out mainly by a few select organizations and small groups of lone conspirators.

Now all the piepeople — groups, isolated nuts, what-have-you — will join together for the International Week of Pieing.

One pie thrower is a pie-eyed maniac!
Two pie throwers are a pieverted conspiracy!

Three pie throwers are a pieple's army!
When the masses join together to heave pies — Nov. 4 to Nov. 11, it will be a veritable piepular insurrection!

Commentary is 'misdirected'

To the Editor:

Dear Rich Eckel,

Your comments on the upcoming pep rally (Collegian, Nov. 3) disturbed us. Although some of your arguments were valid and we can understand your viewpoint, we feel that you neglected to realize what a detrimental effect your commentary could have on the efforts of so many students to revive interest in the football program.

Football rallies are a tradition at " 'Big time' football factories like Notre Dame." But can UMass not be considered a football powerhouse? If you looked in this week's NCAA Division II football ratings you may have noticed that UMass is currently ranked third in the nation. We think that this constitutes UMass as a Division II football powerhouse.

It is always easy to destroy something before it has started but it is extremely difficult to get something started when opposed by something so ignorant and mis-directed as your commentary. We would have preferred that you had developed a constructive solution or a realistic alternative rather than mar the collective efforts of so many persons. We would much prefer that you support our efforts rather than negate them.

News in Brief

U.N. agrees on hijacking treaties

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The U.N. General Assembly yesterday unanimously approved an appeal to all nations of the world to cooperate and end the threat of air hijackings.

The 149 U.N. members adopted by consensus a resolution asking for a global effort to increase participation in three existing international anti-hijacking treaties and strengthened airport security.

With no nation dissenting, there was no roll call vote.

The resolution, sponsored by 50 nations including the United States and most of the other Western powers, condemned "all acts of violence which may be directed against passengers, crew and aircraft, whether committed by individuals or states."

It also called upon the nations of the world "to take all necessary steps" to prevent terrorism and the use of innocent travelers as hostages — including tightening airport security and exchanging "relevant information" among states facing terrorist threats.

Newlyweds sought in kidnapping case

WORCESTER, Mass. [AP] — Police were seeking a couple of newlyweds yesterday who allegedly abducted their children from previous spouses.

"We don't think they've gone far," said Detective Sgt. John Kolloran. "We had heard they were in Ohio. We checked that out. It was wrong."

Killoran said that when the two children of Floyd Rainey, a house painter in his mid-30s, and the son of Darlene Suprenant, also in her mid-30s, vanished last summer, it was suspected the man and woman being sought had abducted their youngsters.

Rainey's children, Todd, 11, and his brother Mark 6, were last seen with their father four months ago when he visited with them while they were in the legal custody of their mother, Rainey's former wife, police said.

Sen. citizen group duped by treasurer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska [AP] — Spencer Lorton, a 65-year-old ex-accountant, must have seemed the perfect choice to straighten out the tangled financial affairs of the Older Persons Action Group.

But now Lorton has disappeared with the group's financial records, and the FBI says it's looking for him — as it did more than a decade ago when he fled after being convicted of tax fraud.

Lorton, who claimed to be a retired Navy chaplain and a certified public accountant, was named financial officer for the organization in April. It turns out he had been a CPA, but the FBI says his license was revoked 22 years ago and he also was convicted of eight counts of tax fraud in Ohio in 1953.

One investigator says the organization's members have developed "a case of creative amnesia" about how Lorton was elected to the board and made financial officer.

"He was always praying," one member of the organization recalls. "He used to pray at Rotary meetings."

"He was real smooth, but he was a real hard worker," said another senior citizen at a federal hearing called this week to determine whether the group's funding should be cut off for mismanagement.

The hearing was called by the federal Community Service Administration, the agency that funds the Action Group, which since 1969 has provided recreational programs for senior citizens and legislative advocacy programs.

House approves abortion legislation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In a move that could end a four-month impasse with the House, the Senate yesterday voted to fund abortions for the poor only in limited cases — including where "severe and long-lasting health damage" would result from continued pregnancy.

The legislation, approved 62-27, also would provide abortion funds for needy victims of rape and incest and those whose lives are endangered by pregnancy.

Rep. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., helped engineer a one word change in the measure that made it more restrictive than legislation approved by the Senate earlier yesterday.

But he said talks with House leaders convinced him the switch was necessary if House approval is to be won.

The change involved the provision allowing abortions when a woman's health is endangered. The Senate first voted 59-29 for wording that said federal funds would be provided "in those instances where severe or long-lasting physical health damage" would result if the pregnancy continued to term.

Connecticut jobs depend on exports

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] — Between 30,000 and 40,000 Connecticut jobs depend on a tax provision favoring American exporters, but that provision may be weakened by the Carter administration, a former congressman said yesterday.

Former Rep. Joseph E. Karth, D-Minn., said Connecticut businessmen should be concerned about the possible dilution or elimination of the tax provision because Connecticut ranks 12th nationwide in direct exports and realizes additional revenue from indirect exports.

NASA creates space suit for immunity deficient boy

HOUSTON [AP] — The scientists who ent man to the moon have developed a space suit" that will permit a Houston boy wander from the plastic bubble in which has spent all of his six years.

Researchers at the National Aeronautics nd Space Administration, using what ey've learned from space projects, percted an arrangement in which David can awl down a plastic tunnel and into the rm-free suit that will make him an tronaut on his own planet.

For the first time, he will be able to look it the window of his hospital room, walk e corridors of the hospital, play catch with 9-year-old sister and do his schoolwork at desk.

Experts also said he will be able to comunicate more directly with his doctors, rses and family.

David — whose full name has not been eased — suffers from a disease known as vere combined immunity deficiency. His dy has no defense against germs for cteria. What would amount to sniffles for a rmal child could be death for David.

At a news conference yesterday, officials the Baylor College of Medicine and the hnson Space Center displayed the suit and ckup system.

Dr. Bufford L. Nichols, David's attending ysician said: "This is an important feature in the cultural enrichment of the boy. He is now learning the concepts of space, developing physical skills which cannot be done within the bubble and this is advancing the education for this very bright young child."

Bill Carmean, project director at NASA for the tiny space suit, said, "I think this shows how we can advance to mankind what we have learned in the space program. This simple space suit can be used, probably, for a variety of diseases. For example, the young leukemia patient who is quite vulnerable to infection during periods of regression."

The cost for development of the suit was $20,000.

The design of the suit was a spinoff from the Apollo lunar missions. It is made of a rubberized, non-porous fabric like that used in liferafts.

For added protection, it is covered with the same white silky material on real space suits. There are form fitting rubber gloves and shoes and a clear plastic bubble for the head. The suit is all one piece.

There is a filter system and a large umbilical cord attached to a push cart that pumps air into the suit, giving it a slightly inflated appearance.

David can also ride on the push cart if he becomes tired. Doctors said David had first tried out the suit in late July, and "the first thing he did was go look in a mirror."

UNIVERSITY HONORS PROGRAM
People applying to the University Honors Program for the fall 1978 semester are reminded that one honors course must be completed before an application may be made. Potential applicants should preregister for an Honors course for next semester. Graduation with higher honors may be achieved only by completion of a departmental honors program. # Campus Carousel

By TONY GRANITE
Special to the Collegian

ADD BAD SAMARITANS ... according to a page one piece in the Indiana Daily Student, Patrick Wen, '77, got help getting his car out of a snow drift in a campus parking lot by three young men who then vandalized his car, when he told them he had no money to pay them.

THE FINGER is more offensive than obscene, according to a court ruling in Hartford, Conn., says the UCal-Santa Barbara Daily Nexus.

Seems that a 16-year-old high school student appealed a $25 fine imposed when he flashed the fickle finger at a state trooper following behind his school bus. The appeal decision by a three-judge state court panel said that "for the finger to be obscene, it must be significantly erotic or arouse sexual interest."

Which leaves former Vice-President Nelson Rockefeller off the hook, too.

JOB MARKET, here they come: 43 per cent of the record 17,059,000 Americans registered in adult education courses opted for occupational training of some kind, according to HEW's National Center for Education Statistics. Which means that academic departments with anti-vocational biases better read the handwriting on the wall. Like English.

-----

GALLUP, AGAIN ... 62 per cent of those surveyed by the Gallup Poll say young men should give one year's service to the country. Such service would be military or such non-military work here and abroad as VISTA or the Peace Corps.

And while the respondents were so favorable to getting young men off the streets and the campuses, 51 per cent said they were against a similar program for women. But if there were such a program, 63 per cent said the one-year of service should be non-military.

HOT TERM PAPERS traffic is the subject of House Bill 123 in the state of Washington legislature, being offered by that body's Higher Education Committee.

Calling cheating "the second oldest profession," the committee report says its bill would make it harder for the average college student to cheat on research and term paper assignments.

Booters trek to UNH, try for sixth straight

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

Gunning for a berth in the NCAA playoffs, the UMass soccer team travels to Durham to take on the Wildcats of New Hampshire this afternoon at 2:00. The Minutemen enter the match with a record of 8-4, including a five game winning streak, while UNH is 3-9 with a six game losing streak.

Offensively, UNH is weak to say the least. The Cats have scored only ten goals in their twelve games thus far; or the same number as UMass' top scorer. The big Wildcat is halfback Scott Davis, a senior, who has potted three this year. Punchless this year, UNH has been shut out in its past four games.

The defense, believe it or not, is worse. It has surrendered twenty-seven opposition scores so far. The UNH goaltender, Gordie Tufts, has been bombarded this year: the opposition is averaging twelve shots per game. He gets little help from a porous defensive corps.

If UMass can exploit these glaring UNH weaknesses, then victory and the NCAA's are well within its grasp. But it is a game that the Minutemen must win convincingly to have any effect on the final standings, which will be determined on November ninth.

Despite UNH's poor record, nobody is taking this game at all lightly. UNH has nothing to lose, another defeat will be just another mark on its final record. A young club with twelve freshmen, the Wildcats are a loose unpressured lot.

For UMass, it is quite different. If the Minutemen lose today, their NCAA hopes are over. A decisive win would be a tremendous aid in their battle with BU for the fourth, and final, playoff spot.

About UNH, co-capt. Larry Aronson says, "If they score early, it'll be a tough game. They don't have a JV team, and that really hurts their program."

Injured (sprained ankle from the Springfield game) forward Mike Shannon feels, "we have to win and to win big." Shannon's absence will leave a gaping hole in the UMass offense, but one that should be readily filled by coach Russ Kidd's plethora of fine substitutes.

After today's match, the Minutemen will have a week, either to toast the victory or drown their sorrows, before winding up the regular season on Saturday the twelfth in a homer against Providence.

Stickers face Chiefs, Bears

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team, smarting from Tuesday's loss to UConn, plays its final regular season games this weekend against Springfield today away at 3:00 and Bridgewater home at 1:00 on Sunday.

The EAIW playoffs start next week and Coach Judith Davidson is hoping for good performances this weekend in order to enter the post season with a winning attitude.

The Minutewomen are anxious to play Springfield because its field is Astroturf and compliments their style of play.

Kelly Salls said, "We play a fast, controlled game with a lot of crisp, short passes which their rug is suitable for. Expect a good game from us".

Davidson is a little wary of the Chiefs. "They've had an up and down year but overall have improved since our last game with them." (which UMass won 1-0 in its opener).

The Chiefs' record previous to Tuesday's game was 6-4-1.

Bridgewater is another team which has had a disappointing season. The game should be close as every UMass-Bridgewater game has been in the past.

Tuesday's game was a bit disheartening for UMass as nothing seemed to go right. continually frustrated by poor passes and bumpy field, the Minutewomen were unable to score and lost, 2-0. Their record is now 8-2-2.

What is needed for today's game is a repeat of some of the performances from the last Springfield game which is considered to be one of their best efforts all season.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4 - Born today, you are not a delicate person – except where your nervous system is involved. Stress, intense feeling and impulsive action cause you concern and nervous tension. You are happiest and do your best work when calm. Such surroundings are scarce, however, and it's best to grow accustomed to disturbances in the atmosphere in which you work or play.

You could be an orator. You have a flair for saying the right thing at the right time, knowing in a moment what style to adapt to your listeners. A kind and gentle person, you freely display tenderness in public. Indeed, you would have more qualms about not displaying the tenderness you felt when to do so would be of help to him who receives it. You are a deeply feeling person, which is one reason why other people's demonstrative behavior unnerves you. You realize how strongly one must feel to be publicly emotional.

You are most upset by anger, and make every effort to avoid it. Those who know you best realize how hard this is for you yet they also know how much worse it would be were you to "let go." Your enjoyment of life's little moments is a joy to behold. Those who experience your appreciation of the little things learn more about life than most of life's "big moments" could ever teach them.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - An overly-sensitive reaction to another's ill luck may bring you ill luck of your own. Control yourself.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Determination and invention can bring you to a moment of success in P.M. Observe another's happiness.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - Beware the friend who gives too much advice. He might be taking advantage of you systematically.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - Be suspicious of another's motives, especially if offered a high yield for a very little work. Invention pays.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - A domineering friend could get you in much trouble. Be wary; don't be persuaded.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - A carefree nature is not enough weapon against the difficulties of the day. Settle down; get to work on problems.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - Change brings excitement and excitement brings a new lease on life for the Taurus willing to take his chances.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - A cheerful attitude makes it easy to adjust to minor hardships. A friend plays it safe in the afternoon.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) - A prosperous individual influences higher-ups for the good. Those in authority look in your direction.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) - Being well-liked will not keep others from upbraiding you should you deserve it. Reflect glory at evening.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) - A magnanimous spirit carries the day. Make a lovely gesture in A.M., and allow it to carry you until day's end.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) - Thrifty investments are a good idea. Be safe, not sorry; give friends a peek at your advance information.

As the cross country season began, UMass head coach Ken O'Brien had hopes of upsetting top-seeded Providence College for the number one spot in New England.

But a series of injuries to the top two runners of the UMass squad Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold, combined with the unexpected improvement of Providence College, have dwindled any hopes of UMass winning the New England's tomorrow at 2:30 at Franklin Park.

The battle for the harriers tomorrow will be for second place as the Huskies from Northeastern will pose the stiffest competition. Aiming for the fourth and fifth spot, according to O'Brien, will be small college schools Bates and Brandeis.

Providence, rated fourth in the nation by Harrier magazine, has three of the top seven runners who have run the best times on the five mile Franklin Park course this season. Gerry Deegan (freshman import from Ireland) and All-American John Treacy have run the fastest times of 23:22, in an early season meet against UMass.

"Playing second best to a team like Providence is nothing to sneeze at," said O'Brien.

"I definitely feel we can beat Northeastern with our talent up front and depth in the 3rd-7th runners. Northeastern is a team much like ours with two very good runners and three good runners but if everyone runs the way we should, we will hold the second spot," he said.

The rivalry between UMass and NU is an intense one, singled out with basically the same season records, same type of runners, and in a majority of cases, very close meets can always be expected.

As of November 3rd, UMass was rated 2nd in a New England Cross Country Poll with Northeastern rated 3rd. In a history of regular season meets held against each other, UMass holds an edge, 18-17. In last year's New England's, UMass just edged out the Huskies, 88-89 for second place.

In a meet held earlier this year, the harriers clearly outraced the Huskies 31-50 but according to O'Brien, three of the NU runners ran bad races.

The race will probably be decided among the 3-5 runners in which both teams personnel are similar. Northeastern's runners Walter Nevolis, Ivan Solero, Jim Doane, and Kurt Stolle are all capable of running between the 24:35-45 level as are the UMass counterparts of Frank Carroll, Lou Panaccione, Kevin McCusker, and the Wolff brothers Matt and Tom.

"We have more runners in that category but it only takes three runners to settle the race," said O'Brien.

UMass is coming off a strong performance in the Yankee Conference which saw them capture the YanCon crown for the eighth straight time.

Capturing five of the top eleven positions, UMass confirmed its depth. But more important, captain Mike Quinn, out for a month with a strained knee, came back impressively with a first place showing.

"Mike looked good last week, has run well in practice, but again I can't predict what kind of a race he will have," said O'Brien.

If O'Brien has cause to worry, it will be the mysterious case of hypoglycemia which has hurt All-American runner Stetson Arnold.

Hypoclycemia, involving the amount of blood sugar in the body and affecting the energy output of a runner, has hurt Arnold all season, causing him to be continuously in and out.

Last week Arnold finished 14th in the YanCon, which was his lowest performance in his college career.

"It's a strange injury because it's something we can't control. We don't know if Stet is going to feel strong or weak any particular day. He's had two strong running days and two weak ones this week. So it's anyone's guess as to how he will do tomorrow. But you can't count him out. He is quite a gutsy kid and a fine competitor," said O'Brien.

JV's set for NE race

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

What could prove to be the climax of an undefeated campaign, the UMass subvarsity cross country team carries proudly its 5-0 record into the New England Championship tomorrow.

The squad which launched the season with a group made up entirely of freshmen, enter the toe end of its schedule sporting four varsity performers.

"During the regular season 12 runners are allowed to compete on a traveling squad," commented Coach Arnie Morse, "but only seven for each team can compete in the championship meets. This gives each team the opportunity to drop five of their varsity runners down to the J.V.'s."

The quartet that will expose their experience in the championship race will be, Bobby Neil, Mike Morris, Glen Lyle and Stevie Hilyard. Freshman standouts Kevin Molteni, Matt Anderson and Craig Arnold will also suit up for the ride to Franklin Park in Boston. The gun is expected to sound at 1:45.

"This race is basically a duel meet versus Providence, as far as the front group is concerned," stated Morse.

The strong trio from Providence; Pat Rafferty, Peter Crooke and Brian Dillon, along with the Minutemen's Neil, Morris and Lyle, figure as the most serious threats to the individual title.

UMass has enjoyed outstanding JV cross country teams as the contingent consisting primarily of freshmen and sophomores has won two out of the last three New England Championships. The JV program has proved invaluable for Coach Ken O'Brien, as several celebrated harriers began their careers in JV uniforms. Two years ago, All American Mike Quinn finished second in this meet. If past accomplishments can dictate the outcome of future events, O'Brien will be observing this contest closely.

over the winter. We'll have to see what happens," Fowler said.

North Village apartments, the newest and the largest of three University apartment complexes for married students, is one-half north of campus on North Pleasant St. There are 240 one and two-bedrooms units.

Fowler said last night construction of a permanent fence would cost about $15,000. Because the property is owned by the UMass Building Authority and not the state any allocation of funds would have to come directly from the authority, Fowler said. In order to set up the fence public bids would have to be taken, said Fowler, and Physical Plant employees would have to take care of construction.

If the construction goes to an outside firm, he said physical plant workers would still have to be paid in addition to the outside contractors.

Fowler said because there are no funds presently available for the fence, material and construction costs would have to paid by the North village Residents, ultimately leading to a rent increase. Tenants and staff members expressed anger at the situation.

"If the University is going to be in the housing busieess I think tenants can ask for safety measures in dangerous areas," said one tenant.

John Coull, one of two resident managers, said petitions would be drawn up to exert pressure on university administrators. Coulls said the group also hoped to garner popular university support on the issue. He said petitions would be circulated "sometime next week." Kawasaki is on two year leave from the Idemitsu Kosan Petroleum and Chemical Company in Chiba, Japan. The family, who moved to North Village three months ago, was not at last night's informal meeting. Friends said the Kawasaki's flew Tuesday to Chiba for funeral services.

Spikers squeak by Smith

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

Rallying from a five-point deficit in the deciding game of the match, the UMass volleyball team came back to beat Smith College last night at Smith and improve its season's record to 9-12.

The final scores of the five-game match were 16-14, 15-10, 11-15, 13-15, and 15-7.

UMass trailed 7-0 in the first game but fought back to win and the momentum carried over to the second game as the spikers won that one by an even wider margin. However, Smith, playing its last game of the year, refused to quit. They won the next two games and the pressure was on the Minutewomen. They responded with their largest margin of victory of the evening.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson said she was really pleased with the way that her squad retained its confidence in the fifth game. She cited Peggy Barber and Kathy Shinnick for their outstanding play, while also praising the efforts of Joyce Gresl and Chris Kelly who came off the bench to spark the team.

With the win, the spikers kept the possibility of a .500 season alive. Their next game is on the road vs. UConn on Saturday at 6:30 p.m. UConn, 11-6 on the year, beat the locals last year and Thompson calls the Huskies "one of the strongest teams in the east."

After a slow start, UMass has now won three in a row and five of its last six matches. After the Minutewomen's trip to UConn, the team will move on to Westfield State on Nov. 8. They will play a tri-match there against Keene and Westfield State.

UMass must win all of its three remaining contests to even its won-lost record for the regular season.

★ Coleman eyes record

"As the season went on I began to realize I had I had a shot at a thousand," said the physical education major. "It's something I'd really like."

His first few weeks here as a freshman gave little indication that he would be in his current record breaking position. In fact, Coleman left UMass after having been here only three weeks. The quiet, reserved, and unsuspecting running back wasn't ready for the adjustment from Ipswich High School to college life.

Coleman returned to Mattapan, and then decided to give UMass a second chance that January. However, those three weeks in September could have prevented him from playing football this season, had the NCAA not changed its eligibility rule.

"When I found out I could play, I told myself that I was going to give it my best shot — do it right — and go out the best way you can," he said.

This season Coleman has been doing nothing but the best to opposing teams. A key to much of his success stems from his shift to halfback, after playing fullback last season. The change is obviously one that he enjoys. His 4.8 yard average per carry is second in the conference only to UNH's Bill Burnham. And his six touchdowns ties his output of last season when he was the team's leading scorer.

"When I was in high school, I was a stand-up tailback. Then last season I was the fullback and had to set up in a three point stance and I never seemed confortable. Now I'm back in the 'I' where you can run with your head up and pick your holes," said Coleman. "You also don't have to run up the middle and block as much," he added, referring to his preference for the halfback slot.

If you weren't aware of his status as a top running back in New England, it's not surprising because Coleman is a quiet person who doesn't relish the added attention. When asked about his high school career, Coleman shrugged, and mentioned that Ipswich had won two Cape Ann League championships during his three seasons. What he failed to state was that he had run for over 1,000 yards in two of those seasons and played in the Harry Agannis all-star game his senior year.

His quiet demeanor and hard work has earned the respect of UMass football coach Dick MacPherson. "Billy's a deep and sensitive person who's a joy to coach," said MacPherson. "He started to see some daylight last year, and what he's meant to our ball control offense this season is something I don't have to describe. He's a great back who's very quietly breaking records. He's done it all. Billy paid the price to get where he is today, he's just worked and worked and worked..."

Coleman's two best games this season came against Yan Con rivals BU and Maine. He set a personal record by churning for 156 yards against BU. Three weeks earlier Coleman rushed for 127 yards against Maine and celebrated by marrying his wife Pat the following day.

"Last year was the turning point, said the square-shouldered Coleman as he stroked his goatee. "This year the team came here knowing what we could do and we've just gone out and done it."

He credits the offensive line ("what can you say about em") and the coaches for much of his success. The decision to attend UMass instead of URI has paid off with dividends in the end.

When he walks into Alumni Stadium tomorrow with the other 21 seniors, many great memories will flash before him. But for Billy Coleman, his greatest moment lies ahead.

Booters end year

The UMass women's soccer team is finishing its season with a flourish this weekend, as it hosts Springfield College this afternoon at 3:30 on the lower Boyden fields and greets New Hampshire and UConn tomorrow and Sunday in the Yankee Conference championships.

According to UMass coach Luis Macedo, the idea for the YanCon tourney came from both himself and the men's coach Russ Kidd.

"Cap and I called UConn and UNH, and they said the only time they could make it down here was this weekend, so we decided to have the tourney," he said.

UMass, currently 7-2, will play UConn at 10 a.m. tomorrow in the first game of the championships, and the Minutewomen will then take on UNH at 1 p.m.

UConn will play UNH Sunday at 11 a.m., and UMass will then meet the winner of that game in the tourney finale at 1:30.

All of the tourney games will be played on the lower Boyden fields.

Gridders joust hapless Crusaders

By RICK ECKEL
Collegian Staff

This is the type of game that can give a coach an interminable case of heartburn.

The scene: Coach Dick MacPherson's Minutemen, a team that is inching its way into national Division II prominence, plays host tomorrow afternoon to Holy Cross at 1:00 at Alumni Stadium. The Crusaders are still searching for their first victory of the season.

The twist in the plot comes in the knowledge that the Minutemen face their biggest game of the season next week at New Hampshire. MacPherson has been saying that his team takes them one at a time, but any slight letdown against a team that has nothing to lose and everything to gain could prove fatal.

The chance that his team might be looking past Holy Cross to the big game in Durham could be the biggest factor in tomorrow's game. MacPherson is approaching this game with the necessary caution.

"The series between our two schools stands at 14 wins for Holy Cross, 10 for UMass and four ties," said MacPherson. "My record against them is 3-3, so who the hell are we to start bragging?"

UMass enters the game with a 6-1 record, is currently ranked third in the nation on the Division II level, and is second behind New Hampshire in the Lambert Cup standings. The Minutemen are also first in the Yankee Conference with a 4-0 record.

Meanwhile, HC is wondering when its nightmarish woes are going to end. The Crusaders enter tomorrow's game with an 0-7 record, but MacPherson believes the record is deceptive.

"Holy Cross has great people. That concerns me more than the x's and o's," said MacPherson. "I believe in people and we're gonna have to play solid football to beat them."

There are some facts that seem to contradict a Minuteman letdown against the Crusaders:

—This could be the last appearance at Alumni Stadium for 22 seniors and they don't want see their final game at UMass spoiled.

—Halfback Billy Coleman needs just 113 yards to establish a UMass single season rushing record and he would like to do it in front of hometown fans.

—MacPherson emphasizes that these two teams have players who played against and with each other in high school. There should be some personal confrontations on the field that mean a great deal to the players. He refers to the rivalry as the 'WINTER TIME PUB LEAGUE!

"These kids have grown up with one another and they don't want to have to go home and listen to the other brag about how his team beat them this fall. This is a great rivalry," exhorted MacPherson.

Crusader coach Neil Wheelwright brings his beleagured team into Amherst one week after a 48-7 pasting at Army. The score gives no real indication of the football game, however. The Crusaders ran off 91 offensive plays to Army's 64 and had a large edge in time of possession. But four interceptions, a lost fumble, and a blocked punt led to their demise.

Its offense can move the football, but which one is the question? Holy Cross utilizes both the wishbone and 'I' offense with varying degrees of success. Last year the Crusaders were strictly a wishbone team, but three games into the season Wheelwright coverted to the 'I' formation.

If Holy Cross opts for the wishbone, senior Bob Morton will be a QB, with Steve Hunt at fullback and Brian Doherty and Larry Ewald at the halfs. Should HC utilize its 'I' offense, Pete Colombe will most likely take over at QB and Crocky Nangle, the Crusaders' leading rusher, would enter as the tailback.

Whatever the offense, it is up to UMass to concentrate on Holy Cross and not begin thinking about UNH until after tomorrow's game. That thought and a pack of Rolaids would make MacPherson a much happier man.

WMUA, 91.1 FM will broadcast the game tomorrow beginning at 12:50. Tune in and let Charlie Holmes, AJ Quitadamo and Rick Heidemann bring you all the action.

Bill Coleman

Best is yet to come

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

When people try to find an explanation for the 1977 UMass football team's success, many point to the play of the offensive line. Still others will cite the over-all quality of the defense. But a major reason behind the squad's 6-1 record might not be found by just looking at the team's performance.

A big key to the Minutemen's impressive record to date came in the form of a rule sanctioned by the NCAA last January pertaining to Division II schools. That rule allowed Billy Coleman a chance to display his magic for another season at UMass.

The rule change provided for a player to complete his four seasons of eligibility in five years. That is why Coleman is wearing number 40 again this season and also goes a long way in explaining why the Minutemen currently occupy first place in the Yankee Conference with a 4-0 record.

When Coleman, a 5'11", 199 lb. senior, walks onto Alumni Stadium's turf Saturday for possibly the last time as a Minuteman, it will be an emotional moment. But he won't be able to reminisce for long because, even more so for him than the other seniors, it could be a very big day.

Entering the Holy Cross game, Coleman needs to gain just 113 yards to establish a UMass single season rushing record, set by Paul Metallo (860) in 1972. He also is just 234 yards shy of Rich Jessamy's career rushing mark.

Coleman would like to break these records at home. But he's realistic enough to realize that there's two more games after tomorrow, barring injury, in order to establish himself as UMass' all-time leading rusher.

"The thought will definitely be on my mind," Coleman said. "But, hey, if I don't do it here, I'll do it in New Hampshire."

He not only has his sights on those records, but Coleman also is entertaining thoughts about reaching the coveted 1,000 yard plateau. With three games remaining he needs to average 83 yards a contest, or 24 yards less than his present 107 yard per-game average, in order to achieve the milestone. There is little question that his goal is within reach.

Legwomen in Eastern's

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The women's cross country team will complete in the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) cross country championship tomorrow at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

The Minutewomen finished third in last year's meet, trailing champion Penn State and last Year's NE champ Middlebury. Penn State is favored to take the title again this year, the UMass could finish "anywhere from 2nd to 6th," according to coach Charlotte Lettis.

The team's top four runners have had two weeks rest after sitting out last weekend's Albany State Invitational. Jane Welzel, Tina Francario, Priscilla Wilson and Barb Callanan should be well rested for the three mile Rutgers course.

Sue Swartz (who has a little cold), Linda Welzel and Debbie Farmer led the team to a second place finish in the Albany meet and will compete the seven member UMass squad.

"I think they're ready, and since they've already found out they won't be running in the nationals, I think this will make them a little looser," said Lettis.

With Penn State "in another league," UMass, Middlebury, Rutgers, Maryland and St. John's will fight for two through six. New England champ Harvard will not run as a team, although it will send individuals.

It's too bad they (Harvard) won't be going, but the meet will still be exciting," said Lettis. "Our women will get a chance to run against equal competition, and I think they will just say, 'We have to do our best,' and they'll go out and do it."

Lettis will not accompany the team, since she has to fly to Puerto Rico to compete in an international 10,000 meter (about 6 miles) race.

A piz-za the action

Many students at this university have found a new way to frustrate themselves.

Every week the Collegian presents its "Pizza Bowl." Every week literally tens of people enter. And every week everybody winds up a loser...save one lucky stiff who wins the coveted pizza and priceless small soft drink.

This is a gross inequity.

To correct this situation, some in-depth research has been authorized and the list of sure-fire winners is as follows:

HOLY CROSS vs. UMASS — The Minutemen have won their last six contests and are tied for third place in the NCAA Division II poll. The crusaders, however, are not the team their 0-7 record would indicate...they're worse. It should be a close game, but tonight's rally will put UMass over the top.

UCONN vs. BOSTON UNIVERSITY — The Huskies are 0-8. The Terriers are 2-5. This game is for the dogs. With a combined effort, these two clubs couldn't beat an egg. Neither team has a particularly good chance of winning. Best bet is to circle the abbreviation "vs."

MAINE vs. NORTHEASTERN — The Black Bears have yet to beat a team whose offensive line averages over 130 pounds-per-lineman. Northeastern averages 129. Take Maine.

BROWN vs. DARTMOUTH — A victory here could mean a share of the Ivy League title for the Bruins. The Big Green's only defeat came at the hands of Harvard, a team which UMass humiliated, 17-0. Still, in all, pick Dartmouth. The Ivy title doesn't mean much anyway.

MICHIGAN ST. vs. MINNESOTA — The Spartans haven't lost in their last three games — all of them against Big Ten opponents. Let us not forget, though, that it was just two short weeks ago when Minnesota shutout powerful Michigan. Since then, the Gophers have been humiliated by Indiana just to prove that their conquest of Bo Schembechler's Wolverines was a fluke. Both clubs will be looking past each other toward more important contests. Take Minnesota. The Gophers are at home, and they use their own officials.

CALIFORNIA vs. WASHINGTON — This should be a great passing game for Washington. They'll be happy when it has passed. The Huskies have a better Pac Eight record than California (3-1 vs. 2-2), but this includes wins over Oregon and Oregon State, the conference doormats. On the other hand, California defeated USC last week. Choose the other hand.

NEBRASKA vs. MISSOURI — The Cornhuskers would like nothing better than to beat Missouri mercilessly about the head and shoulders for last season's transgressions upon Nebraskan dignity. Yet the Tigers have been a stopper all year long. They stopped Colorado's winless streak, they stopped Illinois' losing streak, and they stopped Oklahoma from developing a losing streak. If you circle Missouri, you either have a fetish for teams named after striped animals or you don't like pizza.

COLORADO vs. IOWA STATE — Iowa State is a team that has never won a major title, and they won't win one this year either. Colorado is a club that is going nowhere. Both squads have fine records, but Oklahoma outclasses them both. Take whoever you want, it really doesn't matter.

DENVER vs. PITTSBURGH — The Broncos are one of the most overrated teams in pro football. Any team with Craig Morton at quarterback has got to be fighting an inferiority complex. Pick the struggling Steelers and attend your local house of worship this weekend.

MINNESOTA vs. ST. LOUIS — The Vikings may not know it yet, but they're washed-up. This could be the week they find out about it. Don't discover their shortcomings with them, take the Cardinals.

CINCINNATI vs. CLEVELAND — Beware! This is a trick game. Neither of these teams plays this week.

CHICAGO vs. HOUSTON — The oddsmakers say Bears by one, but the game should be a lot closer than that. Take two and hit to right.

I, Claudius

Sunday at 9 on Channel 57

MASTERPIECE THEATRE, which has housed the formidable Forsytes, decorous Bellamys, swashbuckling Poldarks and delightful Dickenses, will be taken over by the corrupt Claudians, the family whose business was ruling the world, when 'I, Claudius' moves in on PBS beginning Sunday, Nov. 6.

The 13-episode TV adaptation of Robert Graves' best-selling novels depicts the murderous intrigue and unparalleled lust that characterized the Claudians' singleminded pursuit for power and led to the downfall of Rome. Their story is told by Claudius, whose royal relatives mistook his physical handicaps for mental incompetence, and had no idea that the stuttering, limping butt of their ridicule would ever become Emperor.

Derek Jacobi (pictured above), who's now in 'Hamlet' at London's Old Vic, plays Claudius in the London Films-BBC production which won six awards when it aired in England. British critics hailed it as "outstanding . . . a resounding success . . . undoubtedly the best produced, best directed and best acted series of the year . . . boisterous, gutsy, irreverent . . . a triumph."

Sian Phillips portrays the beautiful Livia, who connived, deceived and murdered her husband and children and others in a succession of cold-blooded power plays that outdistance the Borgias. Brian Blessed is Augustus, her unsuspecting husband; Ian Ogilvie is the son whose death she engineers and George Baker is Tiberius, the son who owes his crown to her foul play.

Margaret Tyzack is Antonia, mother of the sickly, limping Claudius, and Sheila White is Messalina, the lady of the evening who becomes his third wife.

The mad Caligula, who led Rome on a non-stop orgy of blood and lust, is played by John Hurt.

The MASTERPIECE THEATRE series recreates in opulent authentic detail the glory that was Rome and the human foibles and flaws that tarnished and ultimately destroyed it. Alistair Cooke is host for MASTERPIECE THEATRE.

PETER LUNDY AND THE MEDICINE HAT STALLION

Leif Garrett, current teenage singing sensation, stars as a 15-year-old Pony Express rider who must outrun Indians and battle fatigue, rough trails and the elements to carry the mail from the Nebraska Territory to the West Coast in 'Peter Lundy and the Medicine Hat Stallion,' a special telecast on NBC Sunday, Nov. 6.

Fifteen-year-old Peter (Garrett) lives on a trading post operated by his family in the Nebraska Territory in 1861.

After an unsavory character named Lefty Slade leaves a foal at the trading post in payment for a horsehoeing job, Peter raises the animal and eventually breaks him for riding.

Peter learns that the Pony Express is seeking accomplished young riders for a difficult and hazardous new route to California and he wins a job after demonstrating his horsemanship.

Gene Hackman (pictured in photo) plays a detective who gets up to his neck in big trouble in 'Night Moves,' the 1975 thriller having its television premiere as a CBS Friday Movie Special on November 11.

Directed by Arthur Penn of 'Bonnie and Clyde' and 'Little Big Man' fame, the film follows the exploits of a cynical Hollywood private eye who is hired by a fading movie actress to find her teenage daughter.

The case spreads like a net, leading him from Los Angeles to the Florida Keys where, as he digs deeper, never quite sure of his footing, he becomes enmeshed in a web of intrigue, smuggling and murder.

Co-starring with Hackman are Jennifer Warren, Susan Clark, Edward Binns and Harris Yulin.

Seabrook demonstrators to begin appeals today

EXETER, N.H. [UPI] — Appeals trials for 64 of the more than 1,400 persons arrested in May's occupation of the Seabrook nuclear power plant begin today in Rockingham County Superior Court.

The demonstrators all have been convicted in District Court of criminal trespass, but state law allows them an appeal to Superior Court for a jury trial.

The demonstrators say nuclear power will be the main issue in the trials. They plan to use as a defense New Hampshire's competing harms law, which says it is legal to break a law to prevent harm from occurring that is more of a threat to life and property than the law that is broken.

The demonstrators claim the building of the $2 billion Seabrook plant is more of a threat to humanity than was their occupation.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Washington is now reviewing evidence presented by opponents of the plant who want construction halted at the 715-acre site.

One of the parties contesting is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which is disturbed that the builders of the plant, the Public Service Co., of New Hampshire, may not have the money to maintain it adequately. The plant would be located a few miles from the Massachusetts state line.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson, in a letter to Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, urged the Bay State yesterday to stop its opposition to the plant.

"I wish to protest strongly against the State of Massachusetts, involving itself through your attorney general's office in the current NRC hearings. I am not aware the state of New Hampshire ever protested the construction of your nuclear plants. In truth, I am personally glad to have them and hope you get more," Thomson said.

Cheerleaders, band members, and fans both young and old turned out Friday night for this bonfire rally by the campus pond to get spirit up for Saturday's UMass — Holy Cross football game, which UMass won 28-6. (Staff photo by Ellen Davis)

Appeals appeal to UMies

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

Today's Seabrook appeals trials have sparked favorable reactions within the UMass community. About 50 or 60 people from this area alone joined others at 10 a.m. today in a rally to gain more support for their cause, according to Sean Conley, a UMass student. Only four of the 64 people on trial are from this area.

The aspect of "putting nuclear power on trial" shows the importance of today's appeals trials, said Myra Levy, a UMass student.

Jim Laurita, also of UMass, said "It's great that Governor Dukakis is opposing Seabrook so strongly in the interest of Massachusetts.

"One of the main reasons I feel that Massachusetts is so concerned is that Boston is located within the danger zone if a nuclear accident were to occur at Seabrook," Laurita added.

"I feel that Massachusetts is opposing Seabrook basically because of the costs, and the need of it," Conley said. "One interesting aspect of these appeals trials is that they are being held before the appeals trials for the two August 1976 occupations, and no one knows why," Conley added.

Cost seems to be a main concern of people in the area. "When the costs of a nuclear power plant are being calculated, people don't think about 20 or 40 years later, that's where the main cost is," Myra Levy, a UMass student said.

"When the plant becomes too radioactive to be useful anymore, it must either be buried in concrete or completely dismantled, and that is really expensive," Levy said.

On the aspect of cost, Conley added, "Although the purpose of nuclear power plants may be to cut present costs, as time goes on, costs increase and our children will be the ones to end up suffering the major expense."

It's a general consensus that today's appeals trials will be all important in setting a precedent for future nuclear power trials.

Parking proposal seen as shopper aid

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Christmas shopping in downtown Amherst may be less hectic for motorists this season if town officials decide to back a proposal to create additional temporary parking spaces in the center.

The proposal, in part, asks the town to develop, "as quickly as possible", a temporary parking facility off Main St. at the site of the old junior high school. The site is currently under the supervision of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority for the Boltwood Walk project. If the proposal is accepted, the site would be in use from now until Jan. 1, 1979.

The proposal will be considered by the Board of Selectmen in their weekly meeting tonight at 7:30 in Town Hall.

Board Chairman Diana H. Romer said last night she suspects the selectmen will back the proposal. She said the board has heard a number of proposals to increase downtown parking, and is generally supportive of the idea.

"When you stop and consider that many of the small retailers take in 20-25 per cent of their yearly gross from now until Christmas, I think the importance of the problem becomes clear. While I cannot presume to speak for all my colleagues, I have the suspicion we will push pretty hard for increased parking," Romer said.

Romer said she did not know whether the board will act on the proposal tonight.

The selectmen are also scheduled tonight to consider borrowing for a pumper fire truck; board stand on town meeting warrant articles; and applications for live entertainment, a juke box and dancing at Charlie's in Amherst Center.

The proposal, latest in a series of plans to develop both temporary and permanent parking spaces in downtown Amherst, was drafted by Town Planner James Cope and Project Planner Edmund D. Mossey and has received strong support by the Amherst Chamber of Commerce.

Other recommendations outlined in the plan include:

—Development of 50 temporary spaces within the next year, and 50 permanent spaces by July 1, 1979;

—Amendment of the town zoning bylaw to allow for the development of compact car spaces;

—Installation of signs indicating public off-street parking areas;

—Development of remote "park-and-ride" lots for employees using public transit;

Amherst Redevelopment Authority Director Jurgen H. Roetter, said although he was not familiar with Cope's proposal, the ARA would continue to work with the town to ease the parking problem. Responding to recent criticism that the ARA was opposed to any downtown parking shuffle, Roetter said "We will continue to work with the town — not against it."

Roetter said that while he was concerned with "creating a lively downtown business area," the ARA's main priority would be to find parking spaces for the Boltwood Walk project.

The ARA is overseeing construction of Boltwood Walk, a redevelopment project in Amherst Center designed to provide elderly residents and others with "an alternative for living," Roetter said.

A $1,500 loan from the Student Government Association has been granted to the Orchard Hill Area Government, President Scott Wieler announced at last night's meeting. Presently, the allocation of these funds has not been resolved.

An art fair to be held in early December was appropriated $50 out of the budget of the Art Guild. This event will be co-sponsored by the Central Area council.

In other business, a motion was presented to allocate $1,000 toward an Orchard Hill-Central spring concert. Wielder, the sponsor of the motion, stated as rationale, "This is the one event which shows students where their money is going." Wieler expressed an obligation to "give those people out there what they want."

In opposition, Treasurer Jeff Cohen asked, "Why can't we have our own coffeehouses where our own people can play for us?" He also questioned the actual student interest in a spring concert.

A contingency fund was proposed by Dave Riave, head of residence of Field House, in which funds could be placed for later use. Concerning the spring concert controversy, he argued that "tradition is a poor gauge for measuring student interest." He said he felt the contingency fund would provide for the changes in opinion throughout the year.

Feminist shows film

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

Martha Coolidge, nationally known filmmaker and feminist, led a discussion at Hampshire College Friday at 8 p.m., following the showing of her recently film, "Not a Pretty Picture," to a crowd of about 150.

The movie was an autobiographical account of the filmmaker's own rape. "No film had ever been shown about rape that dealt with the topic realistically," Coolidge said.

The plot deals with a 16-year-old girl, who visits New York City for the weekend with some older friends, and is eventually raped by one of them. The story is frequently interrupted by discussions between the actors and Coolidge, on their feelings about rape and the scenes in the movie.

Coolidge said she didn't want to shoot a rape scene within the movie. "Every rape scene I've seen in movies or TV ends up an action-packed, titillating, provocative part of the overall scheme," said Coolidge. She stressed the rape sequence in "Not a Pretty Picture" to be "improvisational, where the actors knew the result would include their reactions."

The purpose of the film, Coolidge said, was "an analysis of one experience, intended to be a first step toward a discussion about rape." The film has been shown to a variety of audiences, including college students, feminists, community groups, and film competitions.

Much of the discussion after the film was concerned with changing male and female roles. Coolidge said, "Until men start to deal with issues connected with rape, nothing positive can occur. Men are victims of rape too."

Coolidge stressed the desire to deal with topics not generally portrayed in contemporary films. A majority of her films have been biographical accounts. Some of these include "Old Fashioned Woman," a film about Coolidge's 87-year-old grandmother and "David Off and On," a portrait of her brother.

"Hollywood must work on not socializing men and women as being different," said Coolidge. "The views of many filmmakers today are 10 years behind the times."

Sylvan television station soon to start cable system

By MARIANNE TENNEY
Collegian Staff

After a two year lapse, the Sylvan television station, WSYL, will begin a closed-circuit television system, tentatively scheduled is the week of Nov. 28.

Unlike the current FM radio station, the television productions will be open to Sylvan residents only.

The cable system will receive its power from the antenna atop the roof of one of the Sylvan dorms. In order to view the program, residents should turn to channel two. No specific viewing times have been allotted thus far; surveys will be taken in order to find the most convenient times.

Student Video Project will provide sources for programming WSYL's beginning stage. Eventually, once WSYL has established itself, they will do their own interviews and talk shows.

SVP, funded by the Undergraduate Student Senate, already offers workshops open to all interested students. Nina D'Amico, head of residence at Brown, is currently offering a one-credit Sylvan area TV community workshop for students interested in broadcasting. The director of the television station is Tim Bernard, also a resident of Brown.

The programming content will be very flexible. Basically, it serves as a community awareness project. Joe Kennedy, assistant head of residence at Brown, said, "There is a communication problem in Sylvan because of the suites." He said he feels the new television station will alleviate this problem.

Bernard was selected as the director of the television station two weeks ago. The studio is located in the basement of Cashin dorm.

Library still has a few 'bugs'

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

A collection of old records brought into the library about 10 days ago has prompted action to correct two problems with the Archives in the library: no fumigation procedure and no real idea of which records belong there.

The 60 cases of records were delivered to the library from the University Property Office without any advance notice according to Archivist Katherine Emerson. "The boxes were suddenly dumped on us," she said.

When the cases were brought into the library, Deputy Director of Public Services George Wright saw a silverfish, a type of insect which gets into old books and papers, on one of the boxes. "I saw just one silverfish crawling around on the top of one box," said Wright.

Wright also said that "it's certainly not the first silverfish brought into the library and not the last, either."

Emerson said the Archives haven't had any real need for a fumigation procedure before this. "Most of the papers we get are damp and moldy. We do have a drying chamber that we put papers in along with a desicant to dry them out," said Emerson. "I suppose we are shortening the life of any bugs by putting the paper in the drying chamber."

The papers are currently being stored in the basement of the library. Wright has had the area around the papers sprayed with an insecticide to prevent any bugs from getting out.

The University Press has about 100,000 books stored in the basement. Emerson said there was little danger of any bugs getting into books because the basement is a large area and the records are well away from the books.

Emerson talked with the Entomology Dept., but said the only thing they could recommend was that "we shouldn't try it ourselves because the chemicals are dangerous."

Emerson is now discussing the problem with the Physical Plant. "They said that they had little experience fumigating papers. Most of their experience was with buildings. The main problem is to find a chemical which won't be a danger to anybody using the records but will still kill the bugs," Emerson said.

Most of the records probably won't end up in the Archives according to Emerson. "I'm not sure we would be keeping anything. We'il probably be able to discard or return to the Property Office most of the papers," she said.

Emerson said all state records must be kept for at least seven years. "The Mass. Records Conservation Law says that no state office can throw away any records without permission of the State Records Conservation Board," said Emerson.

Under present University policy, any records are the responsibility of the office where they were produced. "The offices didn't want to go through the procedures to discard the records, so they just stored everything," Emerson said.

The Faculty Senate approved a change in the policy that would make all University records the responsibility of the Archives. "The policy change was approved by the Faculty Senate last spring. I hope to bring it before the trustees at their next meeting," said Emerson.

Project Self scratched

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The staff at the Everywoman's Center have decided to discontinue the Project Self program indefinitely, beginning this spring semester, because of a work overload and financial concerns, according Linda Spataro, a program coordinator.

Project Self, which stands for support, education, learning, and friendship, is an alternative educational program at the Everywoman's Center at 506 Goodell and offers workshops by, for, and about women.

Project Self began in 1971 with workshops offering women information about "sexuality, the media, communication skills, values clarification, and sex roles," reads a pamphlet on the "herstory" of Project Self.

At that time, only 10 women participated in the workshops, Spataro said. This semester, 275 women are involved in 27 workshops.

Creativity, skills, personal growth, and cultural identity are the goals of Project Self. The program offers women a "supportive atmosphere in which to overcome their own limitations and limitations placed upon them," said the pamphlet.

Project Self workshops are supported by the participants' registration fees, ranging from $12.50 - 25, and a financial advance from the University's School of Continuing Education which is paid back with these fees.

"Plans are now being made to hire a research developer to re-evaluate the alternative educational program at the center and to generate ideas about a new program to meet the current needs of the women of the community," said Spataro.

The evaluator will collect data needed for program decision making and the clarification of the goals of Project Self.

"We'd like to do something to replace Project Self," Spataro said, "but the form of the program depends on funding."

Black author to give presentation

By RITA ZEIDNER

Established black author Sam Greenlee will give a presentation at the UMass campus, tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium.

Born in Chicago, Greenlee calls himself a "second generation immigrant from the Deep South." Receiving a "non-education" in Chicago ghetto "non-schools," Greenlee compensated for his lack of primary education, ultimately receiving a degree in political science from the University of Wisconsin. He also did graduate work in international relations at the University of Chicago.

Serving as a foreign service officer with the United States Information Agency, he was given the Agency's Meritorious Service Award for his activities during the 1958 Bagdad Revolution.

After eight years abroad, Greenlee decided to devote full time to creative writing. During the next three years, he wrote three novels and a three-act play, and published five short stories.

Returning to Chicago in 1968, Greenlee became the deputy director of a non-profit civil rights organization, devoted to the breakdown of segregated housing patterns. In addition, his creative writing dealt with black-related issues.

Greenlee's first volume of poetry was entitled "Blues for an African Princess". His other works include "Ammunition," widely acclaimed novel, "The Spook Who Sat by the Door," and "Bagdad Blues."

School of Ed. collective in doubt

By SETH JACOBSON
Collegian Staff

Since September, a group of students in the Human Services and Applied Behavioral Sciences Division of the School of Education have been trying to establish themselves into a collective, responsible to the students needs, according to a council member. But a significant governing voice for the council in the pending governing reformation is still in doubt.

"The administration still believes that the students are not yet responsible to have a voice in the important decision making bodies," said Marvin Davenport. "We are still being given token status on the few committees that we are allowed to sit in on," he added.

The principal objective of the council is to provide a base for the students to cooperatively supervise their education within their division. However, faculty and student responsiveness has been mixed, Davenport said.

Students appear to be apathetic to increased demands and responsibilities. Faculty opinions vary, but are for the most part conservative, he said.

For the past few months, various committees have been meeting to decide on what direction the School of Education will take in the next several years, said Davenport, but so far, no permission has been granted for students to participate significantly in these restructuring boards.. This has lead many students to surmise that whatever new rules are established will include little more than observatory status for students on the decision making committees, he said.

The HS-ABS is fervently working to inform the students of their much needed voice in the collective, according to Margie Morrison, another council member. Newsletters have been sent, but the response has been sporadic. Without input by these students, Davenport said, the efforts of a few to affect the governmental system appear bleak.

On the brighter side, the council has established a resource center to gather information of relevancy for the students and faculty of the HS-ABS. Communication between student and faculty in the five-college area is the number one priority, said Morrison.

Commission on police to meet at Smith school

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The mayoral commission studying the Northampton police department will hold its first public meeting tonight at 7:30 in Smith Vocational High School.

It will be the first meeting of the commission since Hampshire County District Attorney John M. Callahan ruled the commission must hold its meetings open to the public under the provisions of the state's Open Meeting Law. Previously, the eight-member commission had met in closed session.

Among the items the commission will study are the training of police officers, relationships between different areas within the department, communications equipment and evaluations of officers.

Thomas Neagle of the city's legal department, has said the commission's three-member interview panels may meet with officers and others in closed session without being in violation of the law.

In a related matter, a Northampton youth, allegedly beaten by two city police officers this summer, has been arrested on a charge of possessing marijuana.

Raymond J. Derouin, 17, pleaded not guilty to the charge last week in Hampshire County District Court. Patrolman Raymond L. Goulet was fired in September for assaulting Derouin, while Patrolman Nicholas Divenere was reprimanded on the same charge. Goulet is appealing his dismissal.

Snacks satiate starving stomachs

Hungry? Want good food fast and cheap? For many dorm based students relief from the munchies may be as little as a floor away.

Washington Tower Pizza Kitchen

Finally open after a half semester's inactivity, the Washington Pizza Kitchen, found on the 12th floor of Washington Tower in Southwest is once again open for business.

"The pizza kitchen was in debt last year due to poor management," said new co-manager Joe Beninato. Beninato said he had to go to Southwest Assembly to get the backing the kitchen is now operating on. Any profits will go to Washington Middle.

This year the kitchen features six kinds of pizza in two sizes, 12 and 14 inches, in what the kitchen brags are the best prices around. This year 14 students from Southwest are keeping the kitchen open seven days a week trying to get out of the red and back into the black, with all profits going back into the dorm.

For those who don't want a hot pizza, 10 flavors of ice cream can also be purchased. Service is quick, friendly and efficient. The kitchen is open from 9 p.m. to 12 a.m. on weekdays and 9 p.m. - 1 a.m. weekends.

Sylvan Subway

The oldest snack bar on campus is also the nicest and most restaurant-like. Located in the basement of McNamara, the four-year-old Subway employs 31 Sylvanites dispensing everything from roast beef subs to milkshakes. Unlike some area snackbars, Subway patrons can sit and enjoy their food in one of seven booths illuminated by Tiffany lamps.

Freshman Lisa Capone, claims an employee, the Subway has a very relaxed atmosphere but weekends really get busy with lines backing out the door. Capone boasts about the Subway's 20 flavors of ice cream and the Wednesday night specials.

Michael Galper of McNamara, caught eating his roast beef sub said, "When I get hungry around 10, its a convenient place to come down and get something to eat. There's always the Worcester Munchies, but you can't get a roast beef sub for $1.25, I don't think you can get one anywhere for that price. If you miss dinner it's a good alternative and easy on the wallet."

The Subway also serves the Northeast living area and is open from noon to midnight Sunday thru Thursday, and noon to 1 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

John Adams Snack Bar

Housed on the 12th floor of the John Adams Tower in Southwest, the J.A. snack bar is open from 8 p.m. - 12:30 a.m. on weekdays and 9 p.m. - 2:30 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

J.A. specializes in six kinds of sandwiches and eight kinds of subs, as well as bagels, muffins, candy and doughnuts.

The snack bar is funded by RSO with all surplus going back into the Student Activities Tax Fund. An average of 100 people a day come up to the 12th floor to conduct an average of $150 worth of business. This year J.A. has also added ice cream to its menu, but unlike the other snack bars, the six flavors change every two weeks.

A snack bar worker said that last year the place was losing money, but since the new manager, Wayne Montague, took over and added the Ice Cream Chest, business has picked up. "We're not making a lot of money but we're not losing as much," he said.

The service is fast and reasonably efficient. The J.A. snack bar has the distinction of being the only snack bar that sells candy.

Central Filling Station

If you climb up the hill to Greenough and find yourself hungry, then climb down the stairs and get off at the Central Filling Station in Greenough's basement.

The newest snack bar on campus opened last semester, the Filling Station claims it's the only station around where you won't get gas. Greenough may be the only place on campus where you can get a good steak as well as the usual snacks one craves late at night.

The Filling Station is open Monday - Thursday from 7:30 p.m. to midnight, Saturday from 5 p.m. to 12:30 a.m., and Sunday from 5 p.m. to midnight.

Docs get just 'disserts'

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Doctoral candidates from the UMass School of Education will tomorrow, for the first time since 1970, present their dissertations for discussion in a public forum.

The candidates will not be defending their dissertations as they would in their oral examinations, according to Norma Jean Anderson, the school's assistant dean for Student Affairs.

Instead, they can add to or revise their presentations, and respond to questions and suggestions from anyone attending, she said.

It will give students a chance to learn more about unique topics, as well as give the candidates a chance to test their dissertations in a public arena Anderson said.

The school last sponsored the Graduate Colloquium seven years ago. Although it was a new venture, "at that time, it wasn't anything unique for the School of Ed," said Anderson, who had just become assistant dean in 1970. The venture was a success, but the program was discontinued, although there was not a conscious effort to stop the program.

"I don't know why we stopped," she said. "We were just starting so many new ventures in those years."

Most of the 13 presentations will last an hour and a half, with topics ranging from the need for educating political refugees from Southern Africa, to issues in genetics instruction.

Although the oral examinations are open to the public, they are usually only heard by the committee evaluating them, Anderson said. She expects at least 25 to 30 people at the presentation tomorrow.

She said the school hopes to continue the program this time and have Graduate Colloquium every semester.

Doctoral candidates taking part in tomorrow's colloquium were either nominated by a faculty member or volunteered and were approved by their dissertation committee.

About half of them took an oral exam in June, while the others will take the oral in January, Anderson said.

The final oral exam is one of the last steps for a doctoral candidate before the dissertation is presented to the dean for approval.

There are 520 full-time equivalent masters and doctoral candidates in the School of Education, according to Anderson.

Tomorrow's forum is in Campus Center 903-909. The schedule is:

— 9:30 a.m.: Winnie Noel, "Experiencing As Systematic Training: Its Effects on Communication Between Black and White High School Students," room 903.

Nana Seshibe, "Southern African Political Refuges: Their Need for Education," 905.

— 10 a.m.: Steven McLaughlin, "The Relationship of Educational Experience to Problem-Saving Ability In a Rural African Context," 909.

— 10:30 a.m.; Luther Seabrook, "Parent Advocacy For Educational Reform: A Case Study of the Harlem Parents Committee," 905.

James Sullivan, "Chapter 622: Sex Discrimination In Education Implementation in The Commonwealth of Massachusetts," 909.

— noon: Eduardo Aponte, "Participatory Need Analysis Methodology for Community Running," 903.

Harriet Parker, "An Inservice Program To Address The Realities of Psychological and Societal Oppression of Teachers," 909.

— 1 p.m.: Peter Way Cotton, "Education As Environmental Design, Teacher As Designer," 905.

Jean Ross, "Genetics Instruction: Audio-Tutorial Laboratory Versus Traditional Teacher Directed Laboratory," 904.

— 2:30 p.m.: Jim Collins, "Teaching Writing: Implications From A Psycholinguistics-Sociolinguistics view, and Philosophical Aspects of the Writing Process of High School Students," 909.

Evangeline Darity, "Plan of Success Imagery Between Black Male and Female Undergraduates," 903.

— 4 p.m.: Judity Souweine, "Maintaining Teacher Praise Through Principal Reinforcement," 903.

Military budget projected

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of Defense Harold Brown said yesterday he expects the U.S. military's fiscal 1979 budget to be at least $5 billion less than the $135 billion to $140 billion Gerald Ford projected for that year before leaving office.

Brown also said the defense budget that emerges from Congress for fiscal 1978, which started Oct. 1, should be about $117 billion.

He made the remarks in an interview on ABC's Issues and Answers program when asked if President Carter would keep his campaign promise to cut military spending by $5 billion to $7 billion.

"That pledge has in fact been met," Brown said. "The Ford budget for fiscal year 1978 was $123 billion and the Carter budget, as it is finally going to come out of the Congress, will be about $117 billion."

Brown then was reminded that Carter, when pledging the military spending cut, mentioned it in terms of the first budget for which he would have total responsibility — the fiscal 1979 budget for the year starting October 1978.

"Will there be cuts in that budget reflecting his economy pledges."

Laetrile transported; hearing scheduled

NEW HAVEN, CONN.[UPI] - A Nov. 15 court date has been set for a former Clinton resident on charges of illegally importing 68 pounds of a substance some claim is a cancer treatment.

U.S. District Court Judge Robert Zampano Friday set th etrial date in New Haven for Willard Turner, of Chula Vista, Calif., who was arrested on the charger in 1974.

Federal drug enforcement officials said they found several pounds of Laetrile in Turner's California home three years ago. The agents, convinced some of the drug had been mailed to Connecticut, say they found another 46 pounds of Laetrile in Middlebury.

Turner is accused of bringing the Laetrile into Connecticut's Bradley international Airport from Germany before taking it to California. Turner's alleged accomplice, Eli Pinochi, is listed as a fugitive by federal authorities.

Originally, Zampano ruled the federaL agents had conducted an illegal search in California and he threw the case out. But the U.S. 2nd Court of Appeals reversed his decision, sayin g the search was conducted legally.

Thursday, Zampano rejected a motion by Turner's lawyer, Robert Oliver of New Haven, who wanted to have the search declared illegal again.

About a dozen states have passed laws alowing the production and distribution of Laetrile within their borders, but federal law still prevents interstate transpotation of the drug.

Workers file suit on minority grants

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] - Associated General Contractors of New Hampshire will decide this week whether to file suit challenging minority requirements in the latest round of grants alocaterd by ther Economic Development Administration.

AGC Executive Director L.E. McGillicudy said in an interview yesterday the association objects to the requirement that at least 10 percent of a grant must be given to a minority subcontractor.

A federal judge in Los Angeles last week ruled the minority stipulation unconstitutional. But judges in Pittsburgh and Cinncinatti have upheld it. McGillicuddy said the problem is especially seriuos for New Hampshire because of the lack of minority candidates.

"In New Hampshire, there is only one and one-half percent minority," McGillicuddy said, adding six or seven other states are contemplating similar suits.

R.I. base wants military destroyers

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] - The chairman of Rhode Island's Republican Party has urged President Carter to throw his weight behind a Defense Department proposal to base four Navy destroyers at facilities in Newport.

In a letter made public yesterday, state GOP Chairman Americo Campanella said renewed military activity in New England would have "a positive effect on Rhode Island's economy, which has yet to recover from the massive Navy pullout in 1973."

Optimistic look at oil countries

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal said yesterday there is a "good chance" the Arab oil producing countries will not levy an oil price increase in 1978.

Blumenthal, who recently travelled to the Middle East and met with leaders of severa of the Organization of PetroleumExport Countries, said he is now "a little more optimistic."

"I think there's a good chance that the price of oil will be stable for a period of time," he said. "By stable, I mean, of course that I'm hoping there will be no increase. And by a period of time, I mean.. for at least the entire year of 1978."

Blumenthal, interviewed on CBS's "Face the Nation" program, said even a moderate oil price increase "would have a very negative effect on many economies around the world, including our own."

But he said he believes that now "the major oil exporting nations do understand that inflation in the consuming countries and enemployment in consuming countries, is not in their interests and that price stability for at least another year will help them as well as all the consuming countries."

He explained that increased world inflationwill only raise the price of goods which are sold to the oil producing nations, wiping out benefits they might receive from price a price hike.

The 13 OPEC nations are scheduled to make a decision on whether to raise prices at a meeting nxt month in Caracas.

"Based on my discussions in Saudi Arabia and in Iran and in Kuwait," he said, "I think they're seriously considering" puting off a price increase for at least another year.

Blumenthal also said the administration probably will grant either tax breaks or some form of government asistance to the U.S. steel industry hit by "dumping" of lower priced foreign imports on the domestic market.

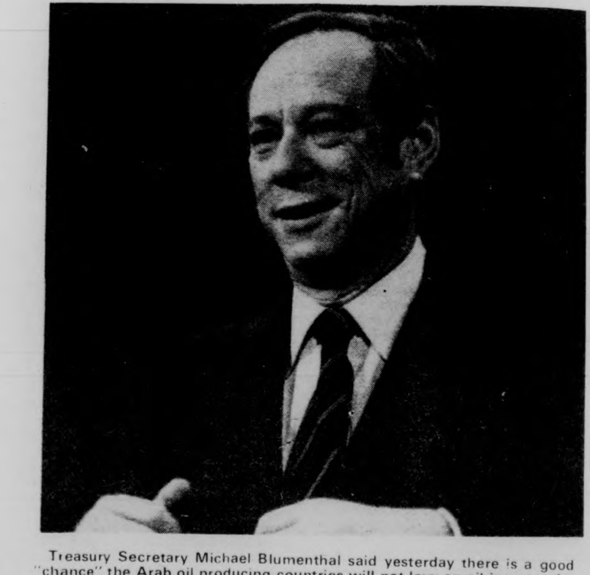
"I wouldn't call them governmnt subsidies," he said. "I would say there would be special programs. They could be tax incentives of various kinds...although some government money invested in that industry which is such a key to many others might not be a bad investment."

He said a three-pronged program for the industry, being developed by an interagency committee, probably also will aim at agreements with foreign governments to regulate the prices for which their steel products are sold in the UNited States, and at easing their costs to the industry for newly required anti-pollution equipment.

President Carter has opposed placing quotas on imports to help U.S. industries hit by dumping, and Blumenthal called this a "no-win policy" because it would bring similar protectionist policies from other countries.

The treasury secretary also said:

- The administration has not abandoned its goal of a balanced budget by 1981. although recent increased price indexes and unemployment figures have been "disappointing."
- The monetary supply has been "behaving in strange ways" but if Federal Reserve zchairman Arthur Burns is "careful, things will work out all right."



Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal said yesterday there is a good "chance" the Arab oil producing countries will not levy an oil increase for the year 1978. He appeared on CBS's "Face The Nation."

Contractor guilty of killing Bolles

PHOENIX, Ariz. [UPI] — A jury yesterday convicted Phoenix contractor Max Dunlap and plumber James Robison for the 1976 car-bombing death of prize-winning investigative reporter Don Bolles.

The jury of eight men and four women deliberated nearly 40 hours after receiving the case Tuesday.

Dunlap, 48, and Robison, 55, were convicted on all counts of first-degree murder and conspiracy charges against them in the death of Bolles, an investigative reporter for The Arizona Republic.

Members of Dunlap's family, including his wife and five daughters, were in the courtroom and gave a collective gasp when the verdict was read and some of them began crying.

None of Robinson's family members were present.

The most damaging testimony against Robison and Dunlap came from dog breeder John Adamson, 34, who pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and testified for the state in return for a minimum 20-year sentence.

Adamson testified that Dunlap hired him to kill Boiles and that Robison used a radio control device to detonate the bomb under Bolles' car in a midtown hotel parking lot June 2, 1976.

According to Adamson, Dunlap's motive was revenge for stories that Bolles had written which forced millionaire liquor dealer Kemper Marley Sr., a longtime friend of Dunlap, to resign from an appointment to the Arizona Racing Commission. Adamson claimed Dunlap had told him that Marley wanted Bolles dead.

Marley, who was not charged in the case, appeared as a defense witness and denied that he ever had said anything about harming Bolles or that he ever had heard Dunlap threaten Bolles.

Adamson claimed that Bolles' death was part of a $50,000 deal with Dunlap that was to include the murders of state Attorney General Bruce Babbitt and Al Lizanetz, a former public relations man for Marley.

He said Babbitt was to be killed because of an anti-trust suit against the liquor industry and Lizanetz because of distributing literature critical of Marley.

The jury was sequestered Aug. 27 when testimony began. Eighty-seven witnesses testified and 174 exhibits were introduced during the trial.

Bolles, 47, a father of seven who was killed on his wedding anniversary, was known for his investigative articles on corruption, organized crime and land fraud.

Liquid fuel is studied for use in hydroplanes

WASHINGTON [AP] — By the end of the century, people might might be whizzing around the world in hydrogen-powered planes that could get from New York to London in one hour and 56 minutes.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration last week gave Lockheed-California Co. a contract to study a liquid-hydrogen fueled aircraft capable of carrying 200 passengers up to 6,000 miles at a cruise speed of 4,000 miles per hour.

That pleases Willis Hawkins, Lockheed-California president, a one-time biplane riveter who long has dreamed of building a hydrogen aircraft.

The purpose of the 15-month, $270,000 study is to determine how to design a hypersonic aircraft with two diverse engine systems, he said. It would use five contentional turbojet engines for takeoff and five supersonic combustion ramjet engines for cruising.

The contract calls only for a design concept, with no actual construction planned.

But Hawkins hopes the nation soon will begin experimenting with a hypersonic test vehicle. NASA and the Air Force are looking into that possibility.

He feels American airlines should be flying hydrogen planes by the end of the century, that it makes sense from the standpoints of speed, saving energy, preventing air pollution and reducing noise.

Hawkins said the time is fast coming when Americans are going to have to find alternate means of fueling their automobiles, their homes, their buildings and their airplanes.

"My candidate for the airplane is hydrogen," he said. "It's clean, it's energetic, provides about 2½ times the miles per pound than the fuel we're using today, and the engines are pretty easy to design for, because the stuff burns very beautifully when it's converted to a gaseous state."

Hawkins said hydrogen can be produced from the nation's abundant supply of coal.

"We've got one design that we've been looking at pretty thoroughly," he said. "It carries 400 passengers. And we've come up with some interesting numbers. If you made a fleet of 100 to 120 of these airplanes and they operated 20 years on hydrogen made from coal, they would save $10 billion over operating them with a JP synthetic type fuel made from coal."

The world's fastest commercial jetliner is the 1,300-mile-an hour British-French Concorde. But it is restricted to half that speed when flying over most land areas because of the potentially damaging effects of its sonic boom on the ground.

The concept being studied by Lockheed would have no such restriction because it would cruise at altitudes of 110,000 to 120,000 feet — compared to about 60,000 feet for Concorde.

On takeoffs and landings, the noise would be kept down by use of the conventional turbojet engines.

★ Budget

Brown said, "Yes, it will probably be less than the projected Ford budget by at least that amount."

After the show, Brown said Ford's projection for the fiscal 1979 budget was "in the ballpark" of $138 billion to $140 billion.

Carter, besides pledging the military spending cut, also has promised a 3 per cent real growth in defense spending — real growth meaning that beyond inflation.

A Pentagon spokesman said the figures Brown gave would allow Carter to keep both his promises, assuming inflation next year is around 7 per cent.

Dissident urged to emigrate

VIENNA, Austria [UPI] — A leading dissident forced out of the Soviet Union under threat of criminal charges arrived in Vienna yesterday and urged the West to continue efforts to save the Soviet human rights movement from destruction.

Mrs. Tatyana Khodorovich, trustee of a fund set up by exiled writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn to aid imprisoned Soviet dissidents, said the KGB secret police warned her to emigrate or face unspecified criminal charges.

"I succeeded in reaching the free world not because of the generous attitude of the Soviets, but as a result of efforts made in the West," she said. "The Soviets have destroyed my family.

"They also appear decided to destroy the entire Soviet human rights movement unless the West continues efforts to save those in danger of ending up in prisons or labor camps."

Also on the flight from Moscow were Mrs. Dina Kaminskaya, 56, a lawyer who defended Soviet dissidents in political trials in the late 1960s, and Mark Popovsky, 55, a writer.

Mrs. Kaminskaya and Popovsky, who organized a dissident news agency, had applied for permission to emigrate.

The three dissidents and their families were hugged and kissed at the Vienna airport by Leonid Plyushch, who emigrated from the Soviet Union in January 1975 after being held in a Soviet psychiatric clinic.

Plyushch, now living in France, came with his wife to welcome his compatriots.

Dozens of well-wishers, including Nobel Peace Prize laureate Andrei Sakharov, gave the trio an emotional sendoff at Moscow's Sheremeteyevo airport.

Can advocacy reporting work at the Collegian?

lisa melilli

For the past four years a group of students have been working to change the present student senate governance structure into a union structure. In order to create change, this group must possess power, power being the ability to influence thoughts and events corresponding to the organizational effort to change the status quo. But these students do not possess enough power and so must look to another group to carry their message for them — namely, the target point being the Collegian's policy of objective style newsreporting.

Since beginning as a Collegian staff member two and a half years ago I have witnessed these "unionists" openly try to convince the Collegian to report on the issue of unionization and the movement toward unionization in a favorable, subjective manner; that is, for the Collegian to openly and in a biased manner support unionization in its reporting as well as issues which would be advantageous to the union cause.

The most recent example of this was when Bob Melia, a commuter Senator vocally for unionization and also a Collegian columnist, tried to persuade the Board of Editors at one of their weekly meetings to report on unionization in a subjective manner.

Now Melia and every other unionist's argument to the Collegian is fine since their argument is that journalism is not just to report the facts but also to educate. I agree that one of the Collegian's roles is to educate students and investigate further into what the administration is really up to and how effective the Senate can realistically be. I agree with them that the Collegian should be doing a better job in these areas, could be better serving students. However, I feel that Melia and other unionists suffer from tunnel vision.

Although I have publicly supported student unionization both last semester after the faculty unionized and this semester, I do not see unionization as the only issue students face here. I do not see the desire for students to unionize as a common denominator including the political concerns, never mind the beliefs of UMass students. Unfortunately, the unionists will have to come to terms with the fact that the Collegian is the only campus newspaper and so must serve the needs of the entire community by providing information articles and articles on other news events besides Student Senate politics and surrounding issues.

And then one must turn to the issue of objective news reporting. There is essentially no such thing as "objectivity". We will always be belaid with personal biases. However, there is an essential difference between objective and advocacy journalism.

Advocacy is clearly biased and presents only one side to an argument. It is a form of reductionism. However, objective style reporting, by its very nature, at least attempts to present two sides of the news. The reporter is at least under moral obligation to get refutation or response to facts or statements released from a second party. By this very nature of objective style newsreporting, the reader may not be given the total picture or a totally unbiased view, but is given at least two opinions. It is essential that the Collegian in some form make this attempt to present at least two sides in its news coverage, since it is the only paper on campus.

This is not to say that subjective style news reporting, a new genre of journalism which developed in the 1940s, cannot be experimented with in the Collegian. It has been in the past and I believe should be used even more widely. However, such reporting should be labelled as such on the news pages or presented on the editorial pages and should include all issues, not just unionization, as the unionists would prefer.

Quite clearly, the Collegian cannot inherit the Senate's tunnel vision and carry only Senate "propaganda", and I am in no way using this term harshly. Clearly, the Collegian must remember its duty to the entire university community. And the unionists must realize this.

Lisa Melilli's column appears every Monday in the Collegian.

'As for freedom, Shana...'

paul yanowitch

"I disagree with what you have to say, but I shall defend to my death your right to say it." This oft-quoted remark attributed to Voltaire seems to sum up the ideal of free speech in our society. The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution is one of our legitimate sacred cows (at least in theory), and it pains me so to see an aspiring intellectual such as Bill Sundstrom sink to the deplorable level of ill cogitation, as witnessed by his drivel printed on Wednesday, November 2, in the column headed "On the Return of Sir Albert Sparks."

I do not mean to defend, attack or even discuss Albert Sparks. Good taste has tangible borders. What I mean to do is cast disparaging remarks upon the thorny crown which sits, ever so titled, on the inflated head of Mr. Sundstrom; if worse comes to worst, I'll insult his family. Just remember; there are no sacred cows!

Mr. Sundstrom contends that civil libertarians come out of the woodwork "like dormant beetles on the first day of spring" when issues such as censorship of the press arise. While it is no surprise (in fact it remains extremely logical that supporters will rally to their cause), I merely take this opportunity to remind him that the so called progressive school, or the self-enlightened clique, are often found bleating and hysterically screaming at the jabbering dormant beetles; the only difference is that the progressive school more closely resembles drowned rats and Water Buffaloes (or Beefaloes) in heat.

According to our sage of the month, we persistent civil libertarians believe that anyone should be able to say anything at any time, and in voicing support of this position, we are ignoring major philosophic developments that have occurred in the past two hundred years. Our country was founded on the principle that all should be able to speak their mind on all issues; it is a permanent and irrevocable part of the fabric of our history, and to so palpably ignore such is to close one's already averted eyes. Mr. Sundstrom; what great philosophic developments, what wondrous revelations of thought, what insufferable epiphanies have occurred to obviate the need for freedom of speech?

Actually, what Mr. Sundstrom contends is that freedom of speech is important, but is only so when the issue being discussed is of relevance or is judged of merit by Mr. Sundstrom. So much for our definition of egalitarianism in progressivism. Apparently, free speech should only be allowed when it aids in the shaping of goals and values of the society. A wondrous judicial test is placed before us. So clear, so definitive, so meritorious! It defies imagination. Well, actually, it defies common sense.

Mr. Sundstrom, as the Executive Editor of a newspaper, should hardly be the one to contend that only certain issues are worthy of legal protection, while others remain undeserving of our society's benevolence. I scarcely hesitate to wonder what issues raised in this newspaper would be allowed if we are to consider the goals of this country. But, wisely, he claims that the minority viewpoints must be protected. I must simply assume that there is a certain set of minority views that are labelled acceptable, while others are not. Consider the Consumers' Reports Index to Acceptable Views:

"This week, the Supreme Court declared that only the following minority viewpoints are acceptable. All others will be censored, and the authors destroyed ... "

My goodness, will not society be open and free when only 'meritorious' issues are to be considered? It is best seen in the three views of the first amendment.

The first view is often associated with Justices Black and Douglas, who adhered to the blanket protectionist view: the First Amendment states that Congress shall make no laws, and that is what it means; no laws. All views, however, unpopular, however unworthy of public attention, however trivial, deserve the right to be aired in the "marketplace of ideas" and judged accordingly. These "ignorant and dangerous" people do not wish to sit and judge the relative merit of issues, and pick and choose which are worthy of society's discussion. This absolutist view is not in vogue, nor is it acceptable legal precedent. After all, both were senile.

Then of course, there is Mr. Sundstrom's view: only certain issues that forward the goals of the society and do not serve the purposes of the capitalist war mongers are capable of being aired. These issues are those which are objectively considered "more true". There will doubtless be a panel of editors or some such enlightened group who shall pass judgement upon the truth of the issues. This way, the Nazi regime will not rise again in the U.S., and Albert Sparks will be booted out. Once again, the Weimar Republic is saved; stay tuned for next week's show when our panel prevents moral decay and the decrepedation of American values by upholding the ban on socialist propaganda. (I nominate Joe McCarthy for the chair of the committee; that's my contribution.)

Finally, there is the current legal view, neatly summed up by Justice Holmes when, in 1919, he stated that "no reading of the First Amendment would allow a man to shout fire in a crowded theater." That is, free speech is to be protected at all costs, unless there appears to be a "clear and present danger to the community." This approach attempts to protect the right of free speech unless considerable, irreparable and imminent danger is clearly noted; such as shouting fire in a crowded theater. But would it allow William Shockley to speak in the Campus Center; Albert Sparks to show Deep Throat in the SUB; Dave Kopay to speak on Gay Rights; the RSB to call for socialism in this country?

It is sad to think that we can only gain freedom by losing it, as Mr. Sundstrom advocates, for the censorship of even a few persons is a crippling force in our "aware" society. Yet it is contended that purging the idiots and the unpopular from the paper will allow us to grow as a country and realize greater freedom some day. It is wondrous to note that in a university we have some altruistic peers who would paternally choose for us what we may and may not see; what we can and cannot hear.

Someday the words of Justice Jackson will ring true; "the rights of the minority are never up for vote of the majority." All those in favor signify by saying 'ay'.

"Shana ... "

Funds for '03' workers misused

To the Editor:

There is a man who has been working full-time for over five years in the Campus Center; and a woman, who for the last seven years, has worked in the Community Development Center; and a large group of people in Special Programs who have worked for years as staff assistants, administrators and counselors. The list could go into the hundreds. All of these people have one disturbing trait in common: they are all "temporary" workers receiving no benefits. That is, they are not covered by insurance, they get no vacation, no sick days, they have no retirement fund and have no job security.

These people are caught in this incredible dead-end situation because they are paid with 03 monies. This constitutes a blatant misuse of funds. 03 monies are generated by the state to pay for temporary and short term positions. Consultant fees and honoraria are appropriately paid with these monies. Using these funds to pay full-time, year after year employees creates a flagrant violation of common labor laws and practices.

Until now 03 employees have remained silent; but the period of placid acceptance and tight-lipped resignation is over. Now we are demanding that the administration accept responsibility, that Whitmore account for the inequities of its 03 policy, and that the absurdity of payment without benefits be corrected immediately.

In a rational and reasonable attempt to deal with the 03 situation, the Organization of 03 Workers [003] was formed last spring. As a first step we requested a list of 03 employees and a written policy on this funding from the Personnel Office. John L. Denyse, Director of Personnel, has seen fit to ignore our letter, as well as a memo and several phone calls. This is not in keeping with the message we get from the administration every time the question of unionization comes up, whether with the students, faculty or the professional staff. Cooperation, they say, not unionization, is the fitting route to balancing the various interests of a university.

We hope that printing our original letter to the Director of Personnel [which follows] here in the Collegian will finally move Mr. Denyse to respond to us and move the administration to comply with its own words of wisdom.

P.O. Box 209, Amherst

Dear Mr. Denyse:

During our last meeting, it was decided that in order to understand and deal with our present situation more information is needed concerning University employees paid with 03 monies. The information we request is as follows:

1. List of all 03 non-student employees, showing
  - a] sex
  - b] classification [professional, clerical, etc.]
  - c] length of employment
  - d] per cent of time

2. Definition of 03 funding, including
  - a] guidelines for utilization of 03 monies
  - b] justification for denying benefits
  - c] definition of "temporary" employees

As we will be holding a meeting on July 21, 1977, we would appreciate a response from you by that time.

Sincerely,

Romeo and Juliet review unfair

To the Editor:

We wish to comment on Michael P. Doran's review of "Romeo and Juliet" [Below the Salt - 11-3-77], feeling that his summary dismissal of Debi Hopkins' performance in the role of Juliet was unfair.

Mr. Doran claims that Ms. Hopkins played a Juliet who showed "no growth," complaining that "she starts off as a little girl and remains that way." Surely, however, this is what Juliet is supposed to be — a young, willful, headstrong and petulant fourteen year-old. Viewed in this light, Ms. Hopkins performed skillfully; now deceptively obedient to a demanding father, now enveloped in rage at Romeo's exile, at times frantically impatient with her nurse. Far from lacking "depth of character," we feel that Julie was a very plausible daughter of the strong-willed Capulet father. She may, at times, have delivered her lines too hastily [but then, so did Romeo]. Her love speeches were [happily] not tepid, gentle, romantic thrills, but were instead strong, firm, yet adolescent. We feel that the skillfully portrayed adolescence of both Romeo and Juliet was essential to the success of the final tragic scene. Had Juliet been any more mature or any less impetuous, her suicide would have lacked credibility.

Tragedy would have been transformed into the absurd.

Review 'reply' termed abusive

To the Editor:

While it is the undeniableright of each person to express their own critical views, the abusive language and the racial put-down made by Abdul Kol Khara on Chuck Mangione [Nov. 3] was unnecessary and an example of bad journalism, in my opinion. So Abdul, you don't like Chuck Mangione, but to go as far as to call him candy-assed and a dipshit-really! And then there's the bit about the 'theft of innovations', by Mangione. Stop and consider what music, or any other art form, is comprised of. Surely it is one's own thoughts and emotions but influenced by other artists as well as environment. If Mangione hasn't been affected by the classical Black musicians that you speak of, his music would be sadly lacking.

While I was sitting in the audience with the rest of the 'smug middle-class', I saw five guys who obviously liked playing together. I also heard the influence of Latin, rock and classical, as well as jazz. Abdul, I think your views of music are a little lop-sided. Music is for sharing; when you start playing a game of 'this is mine, hands off' it loses this aesthetic value. To say that jazz belongs only to the Blacks is very selfish. True, that is where jazz originated, but move over and allow some room for new ideas!

Defending the First Amendment

To the Editor:

While hesitating to defend Albert Sparks and his plans for a porn festival in the Campus Center auditorium, I found Bill Sundstrom's logic in his editorial Wednesday unsatisfactory and dangerous with regard to interpretation of First Amendment rights. "Pornography" may be offensive and sexist exploitation, but it does not represent a distinct threat to freedom and basic human rights.

The distinction between modern art and pornography is so vague that the Supreme Court has decided for an even vaguer criterion: that of "community standards". In any case, the restriction of expression in art, films, and writing of such an undefined quantity as "pornography" does represent in my mind a more real threat to a legitimate freedom: the ability to speak, create, and publish one's thoughts and ideas.

The "Lessons of History", much like the Bible, here too may be quoted to serve one's own purpose. Remember that publishing Joyce's Ulysses was illegal for twenty years, regarded as a threat to public morals and safety. Even allowing the notion that public conceptions of pornography have changed since the 1920's, restriction of speech for a society's well-being is still a dangerous precept. Only a few years ago our country's government, formed for the general welfare of its citizens, was trying to halt the publication of the Pentagon Papers as a threat to national security and presumably, in the government's opinion, the well-being of U.S. society.

Allowing interpretation of what could and should be an absolute right is unnecessarily dangerous. Accepting the fact that men are rational and can select when fully informed an option in their own best interest [the basic rationalization for democracy], there should be no danger that radical thought could inspire a tyranny such as the Nazi regime in Germany. The use of that example also seems extreme in the case of Mr. Sparks, whose porno plans hardly invoke in me a sense of danger or a threat to my rights. What does scare me is the germ of an idea in Bill Sundstrom's editorial that the First Amendment should be restricted in a situation where, to use his words, "such viewpoints advocate or directly result in oppression, manipulation, or denial of freedom" would hardly appear to be the case.

As in Russia, where the First Amendment is just words, the threat is in the restriction of speech in the name of protecting society. In the words of Justices Holmes and Brandeis, only a "clear and present danger," such as yelling "Fire!" in a crowded theatre, justifies such a restriction, and not someone's plans to show distasteful movies. Other logic should be used to deny Albert Sparks use of Campus Center, perhaps due to the blatantly profiteering motive of his actions, but an argument for the abridgement of his First Amendment rights is not the reason.

That is a reason the A.C.L.U. will support the American Nazi Party's right to assemble, and I Albert Spark's right to show his movies, at least on First Amendment grounds.

'Third World': The struggle against capitalism

To the Editor:

J. G. Trejo's commentary [Nov. 2] on the meaning of Third World is an interesting one. The commentator goes into extended detail of what Third World is and what it should be —a commentary which will undoubtedly have impacts on the UMass Third World people including myself.

According to Trejo, "Third World" is an economic alternative outside the scope of capitalism and communism. It is, politically, countries that oppose not only capitalism and communism, but dictatorships, military-coups, CIA, KGB, SOB and a rather long list of things. He concludes that being Third World is a political belief that the future may bestow on us.

I looked for his place on the map and failed to locate a spot that fits his definition of Third World. Maybe I am looking at either a capitalist or a communist map. In my reading of his commentary, Mr. Trejo seems confused with the old term "Third World countries" and the new concept of the Third World people. He liberally mish-mashed all together and came out with a naive utopian schema.

Originally, the old term Third World was coined by capitalist ideologists for countries which refused to participate directly in the Euro-American camp and were not a part of the Soviet component in the confrontation of the Cold War either. In this context it must be stated that the non-aligned countries such as India do not accept this imposed term.

Today, the use of the term Third World has a different and concret connotation. The Third World people at UMass and elsewhere have very clear objectives regardless of the concept's origination in the Cold War. The majority of the Third World people in this country and others do not, in my view, oppose communism which is, in fact, our ultimate goal. Short of communist programs we can never solve problems of racism and sexism. In addition to economic exploitation, racial differences and sexual domination are established goals of capitalism.

Third World means a united front to attack institutions of racially and sexually oppressive regimes, and to support and participate in revolutionary political acts and organizations. In the long run the Third World people, in cooperation with the white working class, will aim toward toppling all capitalist states by revolutionary means.

More thoughts on Mangione reply

To the Editor:

Congratulations are in order to Mr. Abdul Kol Khara for his enlightening opinion of Chuck Mangione's music Below The Salt, Nov. 3). And what clever use of adjectives he makes!

But to get to the point: I can empathize with Mr. Khara's anger to those whites (case in point: the late, legendary Elvis Presley) who have blatantly stolen black music and peddled it back to white, middle class America in the form of glossed-over million-sellers; but may I suggest to Mr. Khara's bombast at Chuck Mangione is completely misdirected! In fact, I challenge Mr. Khara to advance any particulars on how Chuck Mangione represents a "perfect example of the theft of innovations made by truly creative black classical musicians by white musicians."

Chuck Mangione is a brilliant musician whose original compositions and styling are unduplicated anywhere in the musical world; that Chuck may not be as outlandishly creative as Ornette Coleman or Sun Ra is not at issue here, nor does anyone dispute that jazz is originally a truly black art form. But anyone who is even vaguely familiar with music in its historical context will tell you that every musician builds to some degree on the works of all his predecessors, whether they be black or white, and Chuck Mangione is certainly no exception. Beethoven, who is regarded throughout the world as one of the most creative musicians of his time, employed the exact same sonata-form as used by Haydn, Mozart, and countless others.

Even Ornette Coleman and Sun Ra couldn't have transcended traditional musical boundaries if traditional music hadn't been established in the first place!

So in conclusion: if Mr. Khara would like to bombast white racism, it is his legitimate right to do so. If he would like to review Chuck Mangione's music, that is also his right to do so, but it would certainly be more appreciated if Mr. Khara could tackle the latter assignment with something remotely approaching emotional equilibrium despite the fact that Chuck Mangione is a white man. So please, Mr. Khara, do the two separately — they really don't mix.

Jurgen Kern

Vast judgements unnecessary

To the Editor:

Abdul Kol Khara, in his Below the Salt "review" of the Chuck Mangione concert at UMass, struck a few dissonant chords with me.

I felt, first off, that the review was highly racist in nature. By characterizing Chuck Mangione as a "perfect example" of a "typical white" musician, Abdul has helped to extend the racist categorizing of music and people.

Abdul claims that Chuck's music is middle-class. How can music know a class? I should hope that music is enjoyed by all, tastes being independent of race, creed, sex, color, or checkbook balance.

I resent being called part of a "smug audience". I resent being called an admirer of "sanitized pop". I resent Abdul's presumptuous judgements of what is musical theft and creativity.

I enjoyed the concert. I think Mr. Mangione puts together some excellent sounds — and makes use of a highly talented band. That is my opinion. Not a judgement of White music or Black music or Green music or Indigo music. If you have a different opinion, Mr. Khara, let us know it, without the frills of vast judgements on society.

Grad bargaining committee seeks student opinions

The Collective Bargaining Advisory Committee of the Graduate Student Senate has been meeting for the last several weeks and has come up with the following ideas.

Collective bargaining is a confidential process and we are not at liberty to discuss what goes on in the bargaining sessions. It is important, however, that we know the general opinions of graduate students on specific subjects that affect graduate students.

We have decided to hold open information sessions on Mondays at 6:45 p.m., right before Graduate Student Senate meetings and in the rooms that the senate meetings are held. The next meeting is today in Campus Center 904-908. For future meetings see the elevator schedule for room numbers or come to Graduate Senate office Campus Center 919.

Dogs located near airports to sniff out bomb targets

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Bomb-sniffing dogs are now strategically located within 30 minutes flying time of almost any American commercial plane that is the target of a bomb threat, the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration said yesterday.

Trained teams of dogs and handlers have been assigned to police departments of 29 cities across the country, including Boston, and in Puerto Rico where they can quickly check arriving planes or be flown 50 other airports, the federal agency.

Between rush trips to airports or other sites to sniff out possible explosives, the dogs perform routine K-9 police patrol duty, the LEAA said. Their handlers are hand-picked officers already on the force.

"Twenty-nine cities were selected so the nation would be covered as fully as possible," said Acting LEAA Administrator James Gregg. "The 29th city, San Juan, is now operational and the program is completed."

He said the dogs are located within a half hour flying time of most airports where a threatened commercial jet might be. Another spokesman said there were some exceptions.

Cities that received dogs during the past year include St. Louis; San Diego; Phoenix, Ariz.; Seattle and Spokane, Wash.

Besides San Juan, others are Albuquerque, N.M.; Baltimore; Bismark, N.D.; Boston; Buffalo, N.Y.; Cleveland; Dallas; Denver; Houston; Jacksonville, Fla.; Kansas City; Los Angeles; Memphis, Tenn.; Miami; Minneapolis; Nashville, Tenn.; New Orleans, Oakland, Calif.; Oklahoma City; Pittsburgh; Salt Lake City; San Francisco and Tucson, Ariz.

Gregg said the LEAA and the Federal Aviation Administration have trained 77 dogs and their handlers during the past three years, financed by $400,000 in LEAA funds. He said two to five teams were assigned to each city.

The dogs have made some 4,000 searches in actual investigations, 597 of which involved aircraft, Gregg said. They located explosives on 70 occasions and found six "live bombs" ready to go off, he said.

"We had great confidence in the dogs but they are far more effective than we anticipated," Gregg said.

To give them useful police work between bomb searches, the dogs also are trained to track, attack and patrol.

Buffalo's Jim Braxton bursts through a gaping hole in the Patriots' line to score a first quarter touchdown. (UPI)

Bills shock Patriots; Francis suffers injury

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] – Halfback Roland Hooks, lost in O.J. Simpson's shadow for three seasons, shredded New England for 155 yards and the Buffalo defense intercepted four passes yesterday in directing the underdog Bills to a 24-14 victory Sunday over the heavily-favored New England Patriots.

The Bills, notching only their second win in 17 games dating to last season, recorded their highest point total of the season. Joe Ferguson threw a 7-yard scoring pass to Reuben Gant, Jim Braxton had a 2-yard touchdown run, Carson Long kicked a 30-yard field goal and Doug Jones ran back an interception for 24 yards for the final touchdown.

New England, which fell to 5-3 — 1½ games back of AFC East-leading Baltimore and a game behind Miami — scored on Raymond Clayborn's 93-yard kickoff runback at the end of the first period and Sam Cunningham's 10-yard burst in the fourth quarter after the Bills had taken a 24-7 lead.

Hooks, a third-year player from North Carolina State, had a 66-yard run in the first period to set up the second Buffalo touchdown. He had been used sparingly over the first two seasons, gaining 80 yards against the Patriots last year in his best previous day as a pro. Hooks was playing because Simpson suffered a leg injury in the Bills' 56-17 loss last week to Seattle.

The Patriots lost All-Pro tight end Russ Francis on their first offensive series of the game. Francis suffered three broken ribs when hit by linebacker Bob Nelson on an attempted pass reception.

Ferguson, who missed the final half of last season after suffering a rib injury against the Patriots, completed 15-of-22 passes for 201 yards — 188 of them coming in the first half. The Buffalo defense, riddled for more than 550 yards by Seattle last week, intercepted two passes that led to 10 points and two more Steve Grogan tosses to shut off the New England offense.

★ Quinn, Arnold stand out

With 100 yards to go, Deegan finally sprinted past Treacy and won the race with five yards to spare.

"John (Treacy) is a great competitor and if we ran another race I couldn't predict who would win. I'm happy for the team and I definitely think our team can make an excellent showing in the Nationals," said the 22-year-old Deegan.

Finishing 35 seconds behind Treacy was Jon Flora of Northeastern. Flora ran pretty much by himself the whole race, finishing 19 seconds ahead of fourth place finisher Dan Dillon of Providence. For half the race Flora was 15 yards behind Deegan and Treacy but as the latter part of the race went on, Flora fell back.

Quinn, winner of the Yankee Conference championships last week, ran his second straight good race. Although this year's fifth place time of 23:56 did not match last year's second place record-making time of 23:13, Quinn was still happy.

"I thought overall that the race was easier than I expected. I felt comfortable and for a long time I thought I could catch Flora but he was too strong for me. It was a great race for UMass and I'm proud of our team's performance and especially the races of Arnold and Carroll," said Quinn.

As far as individual finishes go, Providence had first, second, fourth, 12th, and 16th spots while UMass garnered fifth, sixth, 10th, 15th, and 21st spots. Northeastern finished with third, seventh, 11th, 25th, and 33rd finishes.

UMass' next race will be two weeks from today in the IC4A's — the Eastern collegiate cross country championship. If UMass is one of the top three teams finishing, it stands a good shot of going to the Nationals in Spokane, Washington.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7 - Born today, you possess an excellent mind but are overly influenced by ambition and other's opinions. Determined to achieve success in your life, you are often at a loss as to how to do this. At other times, you are certain of your ultimate fame and fortune, but don't know how to deal with the circumstances that get in the way of your 'destiny.' You'll be better off if you become more concerned with the present than the future.

An adaptable individual you should have little trouble changing from one kind of work to another, one place to another, even from one group of friends to another. Only take care that you don't seek change for its own sake or you may find yourself friendless, jobless and eventually aimless.

Though adaptable you are still quite tempermental. When pushed too far by another's temper or sarcastic humor, you can react with a poisonous tongue. You don't respond physically, however, to the barbs of others. You prefer to keep things on an intellectual plane, slipping perhaps to a highly emotional one, but never to the physical.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.22) - To have things your way in the end, allow another's view the dominant position for the time being.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) - Be willing to discuss your likes and dislikes, or you are likely to be disappointed in a new assignment.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) - Endurance is essential to the completion of today's assignments and routine chores. Take your free spirit in hand.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) - Financial affairs may add to your confusion early in the day. Turn over money matter to one in the know.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) - If you are swayed by another's principles and not your own, you may be in for a good bit of trouble.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Practicality and caution carry you through a difficult day with flying colors. Don't hesitate to say no when you wish.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Commercial interest may conflict with artistic one. Consult with one who knows which side your bread is buttered on.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - An excitable visitor makes A.M. interesting. Don't expect miracles — but hope for the best at evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - If called upon to undertake the management of a complex enterprise, don't say no too soon. Think it over.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) - Family affairs bring you face to face with your own ability to be fair and unprejudiced. Do what you must, when you must.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) - - When everything that can go wrong has gone wrong, prepare for one more upset. Then the tide will begin to turn.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) - Consider another's position in an affair which you are presently disturbed about. You may be well off without realizing it.

The UMass volleyball team saw its hope for a .500 season vanish Saturday as it lost a hotly contested match at UConn.

The match went the full five games with the final game going into overtime. The scores were 12-15, 15-4, 15-7, 9-15, and 14-16. With the loss, the Minutewomen's record fell to 9-13 with just two games left on the schedule.

UMass suffered its first loss before the match began as junior Diane Mandragouras injured her ankle in the pre-game warm-up. In addition, several of the players were not feeling well and this weakened the bench strength that coach Dianne Thompson has counted on so heavily in recent contests.

In the first game, UMass fell behind 10-5 but rallied to tie the score at 12 before eventually winding up on the short end of the 15-12 final.

In the second game, the Minutewomen warmed up. Thompson said the team played its best offense of the year in the second and third games as no player committed a service fault in either game. The final in the second game was 15-4, UMass, with Deb Kuzdeba (served for six points) and Heidi Dickson (served for seven points) sparking the offense.

UConn only managed to get a little bit closer in the third game, losing 15-7. This time, Joyce Gresl (served for 12 points) led the charge as the Minutewomen ran off 12 unanswered points after trailing 4-1. Brenda Simmons also helped the cause as she came off the bench and played strongly in her relief role.

Peggy Barber and Kathy Higgins put forth solid efforts, especially in the blocking department, in the fourth game but it wasn't enough as the Minutewomen fell by a score of 15-9.

In the final game, the lead changed hands several times until UMass found itself up by a score of 14-12. At this point, the offense stalled and the Huskies rallied to win, 16-14. The final point was scored on a serve (which most of the UMass players thought was wide) that just caught the line when it was allowed to fall in untouched.

Thompson said that most of the people and even the officials said that it was one of the best matches they had seen all year. The officials commended the UMass squad for its outstanding sportsmanship and Thompson was also very pleased with her players' total efforts.

The Phoenix Suns and the Cleveland Cavaliers meet tonight at 7:30 in the Springfield Civic Center in the sixth annual renewal of the Basketball Hall of Fame game.

The contest, which is played to raise money for the hoop shrine, is designed "to pay tribute to the founding of basketball in Springfield," according to Mike Kogut, the Hall of Fame's public relations director.

In the first Fame game, the Boston Celtics beat the Detroit Pistons, 119-117, before 8804 fans. The crowd is still the largest ever to witness a sporting event at the Civic Center.

The teams to play in the game are selected on a rotating basis, Kogut said.

Phoenix, NBA playoff finalists in 1976, are led by all-stars Paul Westphal and Alvan Adams; Ron Lee, one of last season's outstanding rookies; and forwards Garfield Heard and Curtis Perry.

Cleveland, a playoff team in 1977, boasts a roster with such names as newly-acquired all-star guard Walt Frazier; other guards Austin Carr, Dick Snyder, and Foots Walker; forwards Jim Brewer and Campy Russell; and center Jim Chones.

Phoenix currently sports a 4-5 record and is tied for third place in the NBA's Pacific Division. Cleveland, meanwhile, is 7-3 and rests in second place in the Central Division.

The UMass junior varsity soccer team headed southbound Friday to take on its arch-rivals, UConn.

When the Minutemen finally waved goodbye to Storrs; they had left another victim in their wake. The sub-varsity team shot down the Huskies, 2-1, allowing UMass to still savor its undefeated season.

It was a typical rough and evenly-matched contest one comes to expect between the two schools. What provided the winning margin for UMass was a defense that refused to fold in the second half, despite the relentless pressure from a desperate UConn attack.

The mainstay for the defense was unquestionably Bobby Montalto. As UMass coach Joel Dryer commented following the game, "I've never singled out any performer in our victories before, but Montalto played so exceptionally well today he deserves individual recognition."

Other key contributors were Andy Hettinger, Clovis Rainford, and Peter Oulette. Oulette also scored the winning goal to go along with his excellent defensive efforts.

UMass got the game off to a flying start when Mark Miskin drilled a penalty kick low and hard into the back of the net, with just one minute elapsed. It was Dave Mains' hustle that drew the penalty, allowing Miskin the free kick. Mains was trying to work his way through a crowd and was dragged down in front of the UConn net.

One must remember, however, that next week's grudge match in Durham may include some emotion on the home side, as well. And reports from New Hampshire rumor that the chant after the Wildcat's 52-7 demolition of Springfield went something like: "Yoo-Mass, Yoo-Mass, Yoo-Mass...."

Women harriers third in East

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team, led by freshman Tina Francario's eighth place finish, grabbed third place in the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) Cross Country Championship Saturday at Rutgers University.

Penn State successfully defended its team title by amassing 47 points to lead Maryland (84), UMass (134), Rutgers (151) and Middlebury (175).

The victor's Kathy Mills also defended her individual title by running a course record 16:39 over the 5,000 meter Buccleuch Park course. The former record holder, Kris Bankes of Penn State, finished third.

Harvard's outstanding freshman, Anne Sullivan, outkicked Bankes for second place. Harvard, the New England champ, did not send its full squad, but Sullivan and two other individuals did run.

Depth keyed the three top teams, as Penn State had five runners in the top 15 places, Maryland had five in the top 24 places, while UMass put five runners into the top 36.

Francario continued her string of great races by touring the slippery red clay loop in 18:23, trailing Lucy Kelly of the University of DC by one second. She outran all the runners who had beaten her in the NE's, including NE third place winner Kathy Whitcomb, who she passed in the last 660 yards of the race.

"I came up next to her (Whitcomb) and looked at her, and she looked at me," said Francario. "Then I gave her a great big smile. It really blew her mind. Then I went by her."

Francario seems to be peaking as the season goes along. She didn't beat teammate Jane Welzel until the NE meet, and beat her again in the Eastern's, by 50 seconds.

"I definitely haven't peaked yet," she said. "I don't think I've ever peaked in a season before — they've always ended."

A blanket of 16 seconds covered the next five Minutewomen harriers. Co-capt. Jane Welzel established a position at the middle of the lead group and hung on to finish 26th in 19:13. She was running in her final cross country race for UMass, ending her third season as probably the finest runner over that period at the school.

A sure bet to continue the Welzel lock on frontrunning in a red uniform is sister Linda. She ran a super meet to pass teammate co-capt. Sue Swartz in the last 200 yards.

"I couldn't believe it," said Swartz. "I heard someone huffing and puffing and whoosh, Linda went flying by me."

Another of the Minutemen's outstanding trio of freshmen, she ran the course, equivalent to about 3.1 miles, in 19:20. A field hockey buff, she almost didn't run cross country, perish the thought.

Swartz was also running her last x-country race as a Minutewoman, and went out a winner in 33rd, running 19:22.

She was also finishing her third season (I can't believe it — three years, that's ridiculous") and was a steady performer who could always be counted on for a gutsy race. and a top five finish.

Junior Deb Farmer ran well to cop 36th in 19:27, after starting fairly slowly. She just got by Barb Callanan in the last 100 yards, as Callanan ran her heart out to finish 38th in 19:29.

The team's third freshman, Priscilla Wilson, suffered from a leg injury, but still managed to finish 51st in 19:53, easily in the top one third of the field of over 180 runners.

Booters extend string; tame Wildcats, 4-1

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — Tasso Koutsoukos scored the winning and insurance goals, Joel Mascolo popped in the first, and Mike St. Martin added the last as the UMass soccer team extended its winning streak to six games with a resounding 4-1 victory over the Wildcats of New Hampshire in a match played here Friday afternoon.

For the Minutemen, the win established a new season victory mark as the team upped its record to 9-4, while for hapless UNH the defeat was its eighth in succession, and dropped its record to an unimpressive 3-11.

If this game was to be the rout one would normally expect in such a matchup, it wasn't evident in the first half. Missed opportunities, the Minutemen's chief nemesis all season, continued to plague the team. The passes were connecting, but the shots weren't. Freshmen forwards Bobby Abt and Ion Bogdaneris came up empty-handed on several chances.

The drout ended at 25:11 of the first half when Joel Mascolo, a junior forward, scored from close range to the right of Wildcat goaltender, Gordie Tuttle. For Tuttle, it would be a tough afternoon, as he was machine-gunned by the UMass offense before being mercifully replaced by Allen Barnard.

It was in the second half that the Minuteman offense flexed its muscle. Three goals were scored in the space of three minutes and 41 seconds.

Koutsoukos got the first two at 3:39 and 5:13 respectively. The first came on a direct kick to the goaler's right as the ball angled and slid through his hands. The second, assisted by Andy Moore, was on a turnaround shot directly in front of the goaltender.

The most deserved goal, and also the last, went to fullback Mike St. Martin on a header scored at 7:20. He was assisted by Mark Vassalotti on a throw-in. A steady defender who has been a vital part of the UMass success thus far, The Saint got his reward for his consistency.

The lone UNH goal came with less than 10 minutes to play when halfback Bill Collins scored from close in to the immediate right of Minuteman goaltender Mark Hodgdon. By that point, UMass coach Russ Kidd had inserted basically a second-string lineup.

Despite the loss, the Wildcats can take solace in the fact that they broke their scoring drout, which was approaching its sixth game. UNH coach Art Young sounded a bit sore in defeat; "UMass is a really good team. That 17 (Koutsoukos) is a really good player. I could say a lot more, but it might sound bad."

About UNH, injured forward Mike Shannon said: "They were the worst collegiate team I've ever seen, and that includes Divisions two and three." Kidd, the Minuteman coach, used one word to describe the game, "super."

Now comes the toughest part of the season, waiting to find out who gets the final (fourth) spot in the NCAA playoffs. UMass' competitor here is Boston University. The general consensus among the players is that although BU beat the Minutemen, 1-0, back on Oct. 8, both clubs have basically even records, but UMass plays a more difficult schedule and is riding a six-game winning streak. As Russ Kidd puts it, "Now it's in the hands of the Gods."

Even if the club fails to make it, this has been a seson which can easily be described as rewarding. Season records for wins (nine) and goals (Koutsoukos' second broke the old mark of 32, set in 1970) were set. Hodgdon still has another chance to set a record for shutouts with six. Actually the record will be a credit to the whole defense, which hasn't slumped yet. The success is truly a team effort.

FOOT-NOTES....following in the footsteps of Shannon and Mascolo, Bogdaneris and Abt are in the midst of a freshman scoring slump...

Stickers tie twice

By JIM GLEASON
and MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team closed out its regular season with ties against Springfield 1-1, and Bridgewater State 0-0, this weekend.

Coach Judith Davidson was hoping for a more successful weekend as the team's record is now 8-2-4. "We played fairly well but I would have liked to win those to give us a winning attitude going into the playoffs," she said.

On Friday, UMass hooked up with Springfield in an excitingly fast, evenly-played game. Both teams applied pressure at different times and forced opposing goalies to make some fine saves.

The Chiefs scored first with 17:16 remaining in the first half, when Caryl Copland drove in a shot which rebounded to her after the original shot hit the goal post.

Down 1-0, the Minutewomen quickly applied pressure. Laura O'Neil scored with 5:35 remaining to tie the score and it remained that way to the end.

Play was ragged late in the second half due to the quickness of the astroturf and the warm weather.

Both goalies played large parts in the game. Sharon Schmickley, of Springfield, made some outstanding saves off Cheryl Meliones' hard shots in front of the goal off penalty corners. UMass' Kathy Gipps came out of the net numerous times to break up scoring drives and made many kick saves on bounce shots.

Gayle Hutchinson, who controlled the ball very well in the defensive zone, and Sue Kibling, who made some smart passes, received praise along with Gipps from Davidson.

Statistics were very even. UMass won the penetration time by only 15 seconds and outshot the Chiefs 16-15.

Davidson feels that although her team was looking forward to playing on the rug surface, the Minutewomen weren't as experienced as Springfield when it came ot the judging in quickness of the ball.

For seniors Judy Kennedy, Kibling, Meliones, Ginger Bulman, Gipps and Kelley Salls, the 0-0 tie against contest was their last home game.

But as Bulman remarked, "The best is yet to come."

UMass' post-season play starts this Thursday when it battles the University of Maine in the single elimination Northeast Regional tournament at Harvard. The two top squads from New England will be sent to the Nationals. Two years ago, Maine defeated the UMass stickers in the semifinals of the regionals by the slim margin of penetration time.

The Minutewomen clearly dominated the Bears yesterday in every category except the most important, scoring. UMass had a game total of 8:39 in penetration time, while Bridgewater acquired 3:44.

The UMass stickers unleashed 13 shots on the Bears' goalie. UMass goalie Gipps was outstanding in net with her five saves. Gipps made a fine save in the second half when she utilized her height to make a high hand block.

Bulman commented that her team "wants to learn from the last three games for the tournament."

Sixth straight victory

Gridders lance Crusaders, 28-6

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The big question before Saturday's UMass — Holy Cross football game was; were the Minutemen looking past the Crusaders to this week's game against New Hampshire?

They weren't.

The Minutemen, playing their last home game of the season, scored three first half touchdowns and added another early in the second half to defeat Holy Cross, 28-6, before 8100 partisans at Alumni Stadium.

It was UMass' seventh straight victory after an opening game defeat to Army, while the loss extended Holy Cross' winless skein to eight.

Any thoughts of an upset were put to rest early as the Minutemen controlled the line of scrimmage and marched for touchdowns on their first two possessions. UMass had the football five times in the opening half, scored three times, and just missed scoring on its other two attempts. The Minutemen's ball control offense proved too much for the over-matched Crusaders.

Quarterback Mike Fallon, recipient of the Dr. Eddie Anderson Trophy for the second consecutive year (given to the game's most valuable player) ran for two scores and halfback Billy Coleman clicked for the other UMass touchdowns.

"We came out there to get a win and we did," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson. "We had no problem getting our team up for Holy Cross."

That was evident on the Minutemen's first offensive possession. UMass got on the board as Fallon snuck over from one yard out, to cap a 12-play, 73-yard march. At this point the question changed from whether UMass would win to by how much of a margin it would win by?

On its next series, UMass moved 68 yards in 12 plays and scored on the first play of the second quarter. Coleman, who injured his ankle on his first carry from scrimmage in the first quarter, returned to the lineup just in time. After entering the game midway through the drive, he performed the scoring honors by diving over from the two. Although he scored two TDs and was awarded the game ball, Coleman managed to gain just 48 yards on 11 carries after twisting his ankle.

"It's tender right now, I'll just have to keep pressure off it," said Coleman in reference to his ankle. "It's the one that's always bothered me, I just hope it won't be too bad," he added.

The Crusaders launched their only offensive march of the game against a Minuteman defense that is ranked first in Division II against the run, and closed the gap to 14-6. Halfback Larry Ewald swept around the left side unmolested from four yards out for HC's touchdown. The score finished a 78 yard drive, in which quarterback Bob Morton completed three of his seven completions in the game.

"We thought we might surprise them by throwing out of the wishbone," said Crusader coach Neil Wheelwright. "But they adjusted well after that score and we couldn't do anything after that."

After a change of possession for each team, UMass scored its third touchdown of the half. Once again, Fallon, who hit eight of 12 passes for 132 yards, opted to rush it in himself. The TD was set up by a 39-yard pass to Dennis Dent two plays earlier, giving the Minutemen control at the Crusaders' one-yard line.

Dave Croasdale just missed field goal attempts of 42 and 48 yards, that otherwise would have made UMass a perfect five for five in the half.

Before the game was handed over to the subs, Coleman completed the day's scoring with a 17-yard spurt on UMass' second possession of the half.

"We got a chance to play a lot of people today and that's good," said MacPherson, who had words of praise for his defense. "Nobody has been able to stop their wishbone offense, but we did. We're proud of the defense," he added.

MINUTEMAN FUMBLINGS...UMass compiled 375 total offensive yards compared to HC's 214... Dennis Dent has developed into the Minuteman's deep threat. He had his defenders outdistanced most of the dav. and the only problem is getting the ball to him. Mike McEvilly took over for Fallon on QB early in the third quarter and finished the game by completing two of six passing attempts. Hank Sareault was the leading UMass ground gainer with 76 yards on 13 attempts.

Minutemen primed for Wildcat contest

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Businesslike. Verrry Businesslike.

That's about all you can say about the Minutemen's 28-6 pasting of a somewhat less than effective edition of the Holy Cross Crusaders.

Overall, the game was about as exciting as the burial of a relative. The first time the UMass offense got its hands on the ball, it scored. The second time it touched the ball it scored.

After building up a 21-6 lead at intermission, the Minutemen spent the second half trying not to heap too much dirt on the corpse.

Dick MacPherson had said that a UMass football team would never look past Holy Cross as long as the Minutemen had enough people from Central Massachusetts on the team. On the field, his troops proved MacPherson a prophet, but in the locker room, after the game, the team let its true feelings surface.

They surfaced in a chant that would have awed the Tibetan Monks. The lyric was brief, but to the point: "U-N-H, U-N-H, U-N-H..."

Co-captain Pete McCarty was the first to state the recurring "Biggest Game of My Life" theme.

"I was on a team that won a state championship in high school, but beating New Hampshire would be even better than that," said McCarty.

Cornerback and kicking specialist Dave Croasdale lives in New Hampshire. His reasons for a successful Saturday in Durham have a more local slant.

"My friends have been giving me shit since the summer, saying that UNH has a better team than we do," explained Croasdale, not without a tinge on venom in his voice. "Well, we'll see..."

John Romboli spends most of his time in a UMass uniform punting the ball to a safer place than wherever it was before he massages it with his foot.

"I've been playing football since I was eight years old," said Romboli. "I've been at UMass for five years. This Saturday's game means everything in the world."

Bill Coleman was injured against Holy Cross. Somebody stepped on his ankle while he ~~was~~ trying to make a cut, and the ankle was sprained and bruised at the same instant. Still, Coleman came back to score two touchdowns and gain 48 yards. His goal of rushing for a school record, 1000 yards seems farther away this week than it was a few days ago. A victory against the Wildcats would dwarf the record books as far as the senior halfback is concerned.

"It would mean the end of two years of frustration." A smile flashed over Coleman's

BOSTON — They say that second place is for losers, but certainly this weekend's second place showing in the New England cross country championships proved that UMass is an Eastern cross country power.

Providence College which right now is rated fourth in the country, showed why it is as it won the meet with a team total of 37 points. Freshman Gerry Deegan and senior runner John Treacy, both from Ireland, literally sprinted their way to the top two spots with record-shattering 22:47 and 22:49 times respectively. This broke the record for the Franklin Park five-mile course, which was set in 1976 by Treacy (23:06).

For UMass, captain Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold took fifth and sixth places respectively to spark UMass' second place total of 57 points. Northeastern, also running its best team race of the season, held third with 79 points.

Quinn and Arnold's finishes were important but even more critical were the races of UMass' third, fourth, and fifth men. Co-captain Frank Carroll placed 10th, Lou Panaccione 15th and Tom Wolff 21st.

"Any time that any team can place five runners in the top 21 shows they are a team of national recognition. We knew before the race that UMass would give us our toughest race and if not for the races of Deegan and Treacy, we would have been in great danger of losing our championship," said Providence coach Bob Amato.

"I can't pinpoint anyone on the team who impressed me the most but I will say this was our best team effort of the year. We knew we didn't have any chance of beating Providence but we sure came as close as we could. That's all I could have hoped for," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien.

Most happiest of the UMass harriers was Arnold, who had been sidelined for most of the season with hypoglycemia, a blood sugar disease. But Arnold ran his strongest race of the year and admitted that if he hadn't fell down halfway through the race he could have finished higher.

"About halfway through the race, I lost my footing and fell. Three runners passed me but I managed to pass them before the end of the race. But I am very happy that I finished well and I feel good," said Arnold.

For runners Carroll and Panacionne, it was a personal milestone. "I thought Frank had run his best race of the year last week in the Yankee Conference (third) but this week he even ran better. I know that he was waiting a long time to pop a big one. It finally came," said O'Brien.

Panaccione, a junior, ran his personal best time of 24:29 but said his only regret was that he didn't run his first two miles faster.

"I didn't get out as quick as I wanted to. But I felt better as the race went along. I tried to run with Frankie and it helped. Although I couldn't finish along side him, trying to keep up with another teammate helped," said Panaccione.

The race itself was run on a cold, damp, day with a slight wind, treacherous conditions in front of 300 spectators who jammed Franklin Park.

The crowd knew that the race would be won by either Deegan or Treacy but the question was — which one? Throughout the whole race, they ran together with only a one or two yard lead between them.

CRAEMAN GETHERS MUST DEFEND SELF

By Johanna P. Brassard

Craeman Gethers was granted a furlough of twenty-four hours from Norfolk Prison on Tuesday, the first of November. It has been a little more than three years since his arrest as a suspect in the hold-up robbery of the McDonald's restaurant on Rt. 9 in Hadley. In these past few years he has been hustled by two-bit attorneys, ignored by judges, and hassled by prison guards. He has also been studying court proceedings, as well as working systematically toward the recovery of his stolen freedom.

One aspect of Gether's system is the delivery of speeches on his own behalf. He spoke to a gathering of approximately fifty persons in Room 168 of the Campus Center last Tuesday from four-twenty-five until five-thirty.

On August 7, 1974 the McDonald's of Hadley was held up and robbed by three men. The merchants of the area became nervous, putting pressure on local police to solve the case. Unfortunately, Craeman Gethers fit the rather inaccurate description of one robber: a black male, approximately six feet tail.

Gethers was picked up by state police in the early evening of August 26, 1974 while sitting in the Kentucky Fried Chicken on Rt. 9 in Hadley. He was told only that he was in a good deal of trouble and not to make a scene. He was not immediately allowed an attorney and was not informed of the criteria used to obtain a man who was to be the first in a series of defense lawyers.

Gethers found that his lack of funds and knowledge of criminal proceedings virtually destroyed his chances for a fair, humane trial. The unconcerned lawyers he managed to obtain with his meager resources made every attempt to construe his testimony in order to coerce the jury into an acquittal, when a simple statement of facts would have been sufficient to illustrate his innocence. Although Gethers personally appealed to the judges at his hearings, the particulars of his story were never officially considered.

Now, Craeman Gethers acts as his own defense. He feels that in working to liberate himself, he is working toward the liberation of his people from a system run by persons more concerned with money and prestige than with the plight of common humanity. He needs the financial and moral support of every citizen conscious of injustice in America today. For detailed information about Craeman Gether's case, and how to join in the struggle, call the Cultural Office in the New Africa House at 545-0794. Or just drop in.

Palestine, the Arab Perspective

By W.J. WHEELER
Nummor News Staff

As part of its racial conscious leveling program the Center for Racial Understanding hosted guest lecturer Dr. Hatem I. Hussaini Tuesday, Nov. 2, to explain the views of the Arabs in regards to the creation of the state of Israel.

Dr. Hassaini is the associate director of the league of Arab states in Washington D.C. and has written many articles about the situation in the middle east. He received his B.A. degree at the University of Cairo and his M.A. and P.H.D. degrees in political science at the University of Massachusetts.

His remarks were very critical towards the attitude and practices by which the Israelies where able to defeat the Palestinian Arabs. He stated the Israelies would not have been able to defeat the Palestinians if it were not for the massive support they received from the United States Government. The United States gave the Israelies economic and military aid which Dr. Hassaini believes was in the neighborhood of 4-7 million dollars. He noted the similarities by which the Israelis occupied the Palestinian Land and then took it over are similar in nature to the way the colonial powers of Europe took over South Africa and Rhodesia.

Dr. Hassaini stated that the practices of Zionism are identical to the practices of Apartheid. The leaders of the state of Israel use the same oppressive measures as South Africa's leaders use to maintain control over the natives of those prospective countries.

Dr. Hassaini is appealing to the American people to call for a complete withdrawal of American aid to Israel because the same thing is happening in Israel that happened in Vietnam, where by America has itself involved in a civil war, that America is more or less determining the destiny of a people by its intervention.

One level that Dr. Hassaini is appealing on is the humanistic level, that the Palestinian Arabs are being denied the right to self-determination, they are being denied the right to political freedom and expression, that these rights are undeniable to a people in their own country and that the United States Government must immediately stop its intervention or serious consequences will occur if these actions are not forth-coming in the immediate future.

Dr. Hassaini stated that when the Israelis first came to Palestine they came with the notion that they were bringing democracy and civilization to the natives. He stated that this was a guise to eventually take over the land because the

Demonstration on South Africa

Once again the location is South Africa with the recent reprisals against Blacks in the last few weeks. On October 19, the South African government confirmed that democratic rights cannot exist under apartheid. The Vorster regime launched the most drastic crackdown against Blacks and opponents of apartheid that South Africa has seen since 1960. At least twenty organizations were banned, including the South African Students Movement, South African Students Organization, Soweto Students Representative Council, and the Black People's Convention. The ban was not confined to Black groups or political organizations. It included the multi-racial Christian Institute of South Africa and groups like Black Community Programs, which ran a network of medical clinics.

at the same time the government banned "The World," South Africa's major Black newspaper. Percy Qoboza, the paper's editor, was arrested along with about fifty other prominent critics of the government in pre-dawn raids on October 19. Under South African law these prisoners can be held indefinitely without trial. Other individuals were banned. This is to say they are restricted to their homes, can only meet with one person at a time, and cannot say or write anything for publication.

Massive protests had erupted earlier this fall following the death of Steve Biko while in police custody. Biko, one of the most influential Black leaders in South Africa, was said to have died as a result of a hunger strike. Evidence later showed that in fact Biko died of severe brain damage. Mourners at his funeral could see that the back of his head was crushed.

Twenty thousand Blacks joined the funeral procession for Biko on September 25, and protests later spread to a number of cities and Black townships throughout the country. This outcry posed a serious threat to the Vorster regime, which moved to crush it with typical brutality.

The White masses are armed to the teeth and are not hesitating whatsoever to murder young children, women and men that seek decent housing, medical attention and other basic human rights. Fifty-three per cent of all Black children under the age of five continue to die as elegant foods are consumed

Interview with Arthur Jackson, Associate Director of Financial Aid.

by Karien Zachery

Art Jackson

The primary function of the Associate Director of Financial Aid is to coordinate special financial programs. He also deals with "non-traditional students and anything that is not within the general framework of the University," CCEBS, BCP, University Without Walls, and working students.

The Associate Director primarily focuses on assisting students who either themselves or their families are financially incapable of supporting their education. This is done through grants, state scholarships, help loans, etc. Mr. Jackson is also concerned with funding students who may have partial funds for their education.

Mr. Jackson has been functioning in his present position for about two months; however, he plans to be at the University for a couple of years, while working on his doctorate. Prior to his job at the University he was the Asst. Director at State University in New York.

Some of the areas indirectly associated with Financial Aid are CCEBS program, the Billengual Collegiate Program (BCP), Univ. Without Walls, part-time working students, students doing independent study, counseling, etc.

"Basically the money for grants and scholarships comes from three main sources," Mr. Jackson said. The federal government, the state government and local sources. Other contributing areas are, private foundations, schools, loans and working programs.

"The main objective (of the Univ.) is to spend al. the money they are allocated, but not to overspend," Mr. Jackson said. The University is funded through the federal government and supported through government resources." The University has to justify every penny spent to the Federal government. They have little to say about the operation," Mr. Jackson added.

What about the millions of dollars students pay yearly in tuition? "Tuition only represents one third of the cost to run the University," said Mr. Jackson. Taxes cover a great deal of the cost. When asked, "what are some personal changes that you would like to initiate or see occur within the Financial Aid Dept.," Mr. Jackson responded, "I would like a closer repure with students." He desires to deal closer with specific problems, financial planning, budgeting money and dealing with graduate students.

He especially desires to teach students to deal with financial problems themselves. This will eliminate a lot of problems suffer for from major mistakes, for example, incorrectly filling out financial aid forms.

Mr. Jackson added that he will be handling workshops during the year associated with the Billengual Collegiate Program.

UPWARD BOUND CULTURAL DAY

Upward Bound celebrated its annual Cultural Day centering around the theme of "Afro-Latin Roots; Similarities and Differences." The day was begun with an analysis by Luis Fuentes on the historical aspects of Afro-Latin roots. He cited the common cultural link with Africa that exists between the Black and Spanish-speaking communities. He also talked about the racism that exists in the school systems, and how it affects Black and Hispanic students.

Following that was a dramatic poetry reading by Carlos Anderson who brought out the religious aspect of Afro-Latin culture. Diana Ramos dealt with dance as part of black culture. The musical aspect of the culture consisted of a historical presentation of Afro-Cuban, Afro-Latin, African, and Afro-American drumming and how the music has changed from continent to continent. The day was ended by a poetry reading featuring Carlos Anderson and Shareef Rasool. Wayne Wilson the director of Upward Bound cited the relationships of the different ethnic groups in Upward Bound in his closing remarks. The day allowed for the parents, students, counselors and faculty of Upward Bound to get together and celebrate their culture.

Hampshire College student gets four years probation

DEDHAM — Hampshire College student Rita A. Landman, 20, has been sentenced in Norfolk County Superior Court to four years probation after pleading guilty to a charge of conspiracy to commit armed robbery while masked.

Miss Landman, the daughter of a Bloomfield, N.J., physician, had originally been charged with being an accomplice in a Wellesley bank hold-up but the Norfolk County district attorney's office accepted her guilty plea to a lesser charge.

Miss Landman was to provide a getaway car for Ernest Powell III and Jack Crump Jr., who have since been convicted of holding up the South Shore National Bank in Wellesley on March 23.

Under the terms of her probation, Miss Landman must have permission from the Norfolk County Superior Court before she travels out of state and must visit a psychiatrist at least once a month.

Her sentencing followed a brief and highly unusual private trial Friday in the judge's chambers before Judge Robert Bonin, chief justice of the state Superior Court. The private session was requested by defense attorney Mark Shuman of Boston due to "the extremely emotional nature of the testimony."

Usually, closed sessions are held in cases involving juveniles and rape victims, when safety reasons dictate such a choice.

A transcript of the proceedings was released later.

Northampton psychiatrist

According to the transcript, Northampton psychiatrist Dr. Sanford Bloomberg testified that Ernest Powell III, the son of a Chicago trial lawyer, had saved Miss Landman from an abusive relationship with Vincent Gotay. Gotay, a local resident who is not a Hampshire College student, was well-known on campus. He allegedly had beaten and abused Miss Landman.

Dr. Bloomberg said that Miss Landman, who had previously been involved in abusive relationships, had been unable to get help from college authorities. She turned to Crump and Powell whom she met while playing basketball at the college. Powell persuaded Gotay to leave Miss Landman alone, her psychiatrist said.

During her own testimony, Miss Landman said Powell told her that "if I was going to be his woman, I would have to do what he wanted me to do and I should help him."

The help included providing Crump and Powell with a getaway car for the March 23 holdup. However, Miss Landman's car developed engine trouble en route to Wellesley and the car "switch" never occurred. The two men were apprehended after a chase on the Massachusetts Turnpike.

On April 20, Miss Landman was arrested at an apartment she maintained in Sunderland.

Peter Glucker, spokesman for Hampshire College, today said that "because of the nature of the case," he could not comment on the statements that Miss Landman had been unable to obtain the counseling help she needed at the college.

This semester Miss Landman is on field-study leave from Hampshire.

On Oct. 24, Powell was sentenced to 10 years in the Concord Reformatory. On Oct. 3, Crump, a former Boston State College basketball star, was sentenced to six to 10 years at Walpole State Prison. Crump also received a three-to-five-year concurrent term for unlawful possession of a firearm.

Third World caucas vs Craig Sherwood

By VUKANI MAGUBANE
Nummo News Staff

"Right now things are kind of sensitive" is how Craig Sherwood described the situation he is involved in. Sherwood is a white student who was elected to the Senate as a part of the third world caucus. Members of the third world caucus have introduced a motion before the Senate which if passed would call for the resignation of Sherwood whom they feel cannot adequately represent the needs of the third world students.

Sherwood however feels quite differently. "I feel that I can represent and carry out my responsibilites as a representative for third world students," Sherwood said. He then cited his Jewish background as a qualification for being a member of the third world. "People don't believe that they (the Jews) have been exploited for over 5,000 years. My feelings in that would qualify me as a third world student, regardless of my color." Sherwood feels that he was lawfully voted into the Senate. "I was shocked to learn that I was the first white to run with the bylaws as they stand. The bylaws did not give an active definition of third world." When told about the newly drawn up definition of third world Sherwood said he was against the definition because it was based on race and unconstitutional by the 14th amendment and other civil rights bills.

Sherwood was quite clear in his refusal to give up his seat. "I am willing to do anything in my power, short of resigning because I think they are trying to remove me on unfair grounds." If there is a recall vote and I lose I will have no choice then, but to resign.

When asked if he has gotten together with the other third world senators he said they had been hostile and unwilling to give him a chance. "It has been brought to my attention that they don't want me at the Steering Committee meetings," he said. He admitted that this controversy could be harmful to third world students if he and the third world caucus are unable to work together, but he cited the unwillingness onto the members of the caucus.

The Senate on Wednesday passed the recall petition and it will be another three weeks before the Craig Sherwood controversy can be resolved.

Blacks are 15% of enrollment at white colleges

By John Milne

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The number of minority group students at U.S. colleges went up 16.8 per cent between 1974 and 1976, and now minorities make up 15.2 per cent of the total enrollment, according to a new survey.

During the same period, total college enrollment rose 6.3 per cent, said the study released by the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

The study found major advances in black enrollment at traditionally white campuses. In fact, 68.6 per cent of the total black student population was at predominantly white schools. The fall 1968 survey found 60.8 per cent of all black students enrolled at 17 traditionally black colleges and universities.

The figures gathered from 351 camp[illegible] fall of 1976, show 144,948 minority students out of a total enrollment of 2,932,596. That's 15.2 per cent compared with 11 per cent minority enrollment calculated in the last survey, taken in the fall of 1974.

Black students made up almost half that figure, with 196,398 reported, or 6.7 per cent of the total enrollment. There were 104,866 students classified Hispanic, 69,831 non-resident aliens, 57,722 Asian or Pacific Islander, 16,131 native American. There were 2.4 million whites in college.

Although the total enrollment of blacks increased, the study said "the black percentage of total enrollment accounted for by blacks — the largest minority category — was down at the undergraduate level, compared with the 1972...report."

In the fall of 1972, black students were 8.4 per cent of undergraduate enrollment and in the fall of 1976 the figure for black students was 7.3 per cent. But many of the undergraduate students in 1972 must have gone on to higher education. In 1972 the percentage of blacks in graduate programs was 4.9 and in 1976 that percentage 9.8.

In 1968, only four colleges had more than 1,000 blacks on campus. The study said there were 15 in 1970; 32 in 1974, and 37 in 1976.

This, the study said, reflects the fact that "black students, as the largest minority category, have been the focus of much of the affirmative action effort on campus over the past decade."

And the figures are flowing the other way in some traditionally black schools. In the fall of 1968, only 4.4 per cent of the enrollment on 20 traditionally black campuses was nonwhite. In 1976, the number of whites has risen to 15.5 per cent.

Jamaica fetes Castro

Castro gets O.J. Governor-General, the Most Hon. Florizel Glasspole, conferred the Order of Jamaica on Cuban President Dr. Fidel Castro at King's House on Oct. 16. A citation describing Dr. Castro as "a giant in the struggle against imperialist intervention and aggression" was read by Prime Minister Michael Manley.

-Gleaner-Dowie photo

Kingston: Cuban President Fidel Castro has said that he will never interfere with Jamaica's internal affairs as the relationship of both countries was based on the sovereign rights of the people.

Addressing a rally at Sam Sharpe Square, Montego Bay, the visiting leader said Cuba did not intend to tell Jamaica what to do or how to manage its affairs, as no one had given Cuba such instructions in its struggle against imperialism and other forces.

Castro declared: "We know what the people want. They want justice, equality, liberty and dignity, because all people of sound thinking want these."

The Cuban leader, speaking to the large crowd through an interpreter, said Jamaica would in time undoubtedly achieve these aspirations because they have at their head "a dynamic and capable leader in the form of Prime Minister, Michael Manley."

He said that the vast congregation of people in the Square was an act of faith in Mr. Manley and their solidarity in the struggle for a better Jamaica where all people will be recognized.

Castro added: 'No one will be able to deceive the people as the force of the people is great'. It was not possible to besiege and enslave a people who have become alert and united as to what they want and where they would like to go.

The Cuban President was conferred with the Order of Jamaica by the island's Governor-General Florizel Glasspole.

The ceremony was held at King's House. Prime Minister Manley read a citation which described President Castro as "a giant in the struggle against imperialist intervention and aggression".

In receiving the honor, the Cuban leader said he was accepting it in the name of Cuban fighters, Antonio Maceo, General Maximo Gomez and Jose Marti, as well as the thousands of Cubans who fought for independence.

During his address at Montego Bay, Castro also expressed his gratitude to be able to celebrate with Jamaicans on the occasion of honoring their country's National Heroes, who have fought for freedom and without whose sacrifices and efforts there would never be an independent Jamaica.

"Jamaica and Cuba have many things in common and if in some way the Europeans discovered us, we also discovered the Europeans, but a Europe of freedom rather than a Europe of acquisition, one which was the mother of colonization and slavery. All Europe was responsible for the injustices and crimes committed in this world.

Meanwhile, five Jamaicans have been awarded top national honors.

Receiving the Order of Jamaica were Vernon Arnett former Minister of Finance and former secretary of the Peoples National Party, Vivian Blake, for political development and public service; Claude McKay, for Literature; Basil Robinson, for distinguished services in the Jamaica Constabulary Force, and Leacroft Robinson, for services in the field of law.

Receiving Orders of Distinction awards were Sybil Hill-Francis, Gloria Knight and Edward "[illegible]d" Ogilvie (deceased.)

Palestinians had not developed the land therefore the European settlers had every right to take the land and cultivate it. Not only says Dr. Hassaine do they believe this ridiculous pattern of thought they have now become exclusive and refuse to budge one inch off the Palestinian land, evenmore they have set-up or established a attitude of Zionism in the minds of the simpathetic and not-so-simpathetic Israelies to perpetuate the occupation of the land by the Israelis. The way in which the Israelies have been able to do this is thought the support they have been receiving from the United States Government. The Palestinian Arabs have lost three wars to the Israelies one in 1956, one in 1967 and the last war in 1973. The Israelies have also used the pretext that it is their god given right to the land and that the proof to this can be found in the old testament. Ridiculous says Dr. Hassaini. "The Israeli leadership has a whole set of ideas that it has presented to the American Government that Israel is the only democracy in the area around Syria, Egypt, Jordan, or Lebanon that protects American interests in the area that the Arabs are communists and therefore Israel protects democracy from communist takeover".

Dr. Hassaini predicts that the warfare will continue until some concessions have come to the Palestinian people, like an agreement to give back the land they now occupy, and complete political and economic freedom to the indigionous people of palestine.

New charges in Wilmington 10 struggle

NEW YORK — A North Carolina superior court judge and the state's attorney general were charged last week with improper and unethical conduct in appeals filed in state and federal courts in Raleigh to free the Wilmington Ten.

Superior Court Judge George Fountain and North Carolina assistant attorney general Richard N. League are charged with having worked out Judge Fountain's order in a post-conviction hearing for the Ten without notifying the defense lawyers, an alleged violation of the North Carolinia Code of Professional Responsibility and of a North Carolina statute.

In his order, issued last July, Judge Fountain denied the Ten a new trial after hearing evidence that the main witness against them had lied in their 1972 trial.

The alleged improper judicial conduct is being challenged in the North Carolina Court of Appeals and in a habeas corpus proceeding in Federal District Court which charges that Judge Fountain and League violated the federal Constitutional rights of the defendents.

The State Court of Appeals is also being asked to overturn Judge Fountain's decision on the basis of the evidence and errors he allegedly made in conducting the post-conviction hearing.

Meanwhile, U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell has denied reports the federal government is pressuring Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. to pardon the Ten.

"We wouldn't want to presume to tell the governor what to do," said Bell at a press conference last week. "I've talked with Gov. Hunt about it within the past month or six weeks. I've not tried to pressure the governor in any way," he said.

The Ten are nine black men and one white woman convicted of arson and conspiracy to assault emergency personnel during racial violence in Wilmington in 1971.

All except for the woman, who has been released on parole, are serving long prison terms.

Bell said he has "been keeping up with the case".

"I met with the lawyers and others interested in the Wilmington 10 case months ago," said Bell. "After the case has run its course in the state court system, we plan to look into it," he added.

Civil rights groups claiming the 10 civil rights workers were convicted on perjured testimony, have lobbied for their release. News reports last week quoted Justice Department officials as saying Hunt has been asked by government officials to pardon the Ten.

Freedom for Puerto Rican Nationalists

NEW YORK UPI — Puerto Rican nationalists demanding the release of imprisoned terrrorists took over the Statue of Liberty for nine hours Tuesday, and then were arrested by U.S. park police.

The Puerto Ricans, who ousted hundreds of tourists and a movie crew from the famed statue on an island in New York Harbor, were seeking freedom for terrorists serving life prison terms for attacks on Congress and President Truman's Blair House residence in the 1950's.

Some 35 U.S. park police began removing about 30 demonstrators peacefully shortly before 6:30 p.m. EDT, a spokesman for the agency said. U.S. Attorney Robert Fiske said the demonstrators would be arraigned in U.S. District Court in Manhattan Wednesday morning on charges of trespassing on federal property. He said they would be held overnight at the U.S. detention facility in Lower Manhattan after being taken in boats from Liberty Island.

Senate Approves Nomination

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate approved the nomination Thursday of Rufus A. Lewis, a former civil rights leader, as the first black U.S. marshal to serve in Alabama since the Reconstruction era.

Although Lewis was confirmed by voice vote without dissent for a four-year term, Sens. James B. Allen, D-Ala., and Edward Brooke, R-Mass., noted the occasion after the vote.

Allen said the nomination and confirmation of Lewis, active in civil rights work during the 1950s and 1960s, indicated the change in "public opinion that has taken place in Alabama in the last 10 or 15 years."

Brooke, the first black senator since Reconstruction, said it was a "historic moment" and added "this shows how race relations in the state of Alabama and in this country have improved in the last decade."

U.S. Arm's Embargo

UNITED NATIONS UPI — The U.N. Security Council Wednesday agreed to impose a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa in a compromise reached between the African bloc and the western nations led by the United States.

The agreement reached after a day of closed-door negotiations paved the way for a Security Council vote either Thursday night or Friday and certain — probably unanimous — passage of a comprehensive arms embargo against South Africa's minority white regime. "We have reached agreement," said Ambassador Mansur Rashid Kikhia of Libya, Council President for November.

Kikhia said he expected the Council to vote Thursday night "but more likely on Friday." British Ambassador Ivor Ricard confirmed the agreement reached after the five western members of the Council accepted an African demand to widen the embargo to also prohibit cooperation with South Africa "in the development of nuclear weapons.

Earlier, U.S. Deputy Ambassador Donald F. McHenry told reporters that the resolution's wording had been tentatively agreed upon in a meeting between African representatives and the five western powers, the United States, Britain, France, West Germany and Canada.

"I believe that a basis for consensus has been reached," McHenry said.

Canada and West Germany presented a first draft resolution in the Council on behalf of the western powers Monday after Britain, France and the United States had vetoed three African hardline resolutions demanding arms and economic sanctions.

The Africans rejected the first western proposal as too mild. In the ensuing negotiations a compromise was reached under which some of the previous African demands were included in the new resolution.

The vetoed African resolutions had focused on the existing South African military machine as a global menace and a threat to peace, a formulation which would have left the door open to a request for further sanctions.

Ghana, Nigeria pledged civilian rule by 1979

By SAM UBA

Nothing will make the present military governments in Ghana and Nigeria retract their promises to hand back power to civilians in 1979.

That assurance was given by the Ghanaian head of state, Gen. Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, and the Nigerian chief of staff, Supreme Headquarters, Brigadier Shehu Yar'Adua, at exclusive interviews in Accra and Lagos.

At the separate interviews, the two leaders were asked the same question: "Can you forsee or envisage a situation or development that could cause you and your colleagues in the ruling Supreme Military Council (SMC) to change your mind about returning the country to civilian rule in 1979 as promised?"

Both were emphatic in their answers.

Gen. Acheampong said: "The stand of the Supreme Military Council is that the two-year program we have drawn up is final. Nothing can make us reconsider the proposals because we know the whole world is looking up to us to honor our pledge."

Brigadier Yar'Adua: "I do not see anything that can get the SMC to change its mind on any aspect of the political program. As for the date for the return to civilian rule, there is no possibility of it being changed. That possibility was never envisaged, and we don't envisage it now."

Yar'Adua added that in the past two years they had experienced "one or two difficulties, not hitches" with their political program, but those were administrative matters which were only to be expected.

With the successful conclusion of the election to the 232-member Constituent Assembly (203 elected and 29 nominated), which began sitting in Lagos Oct. 6, the next step on the journey back to civilian rule would be for the Assembly to ratify the draft constitution.

After that the ban on political activities would be lifted, paving the way for a general election to usher in a civilian administration.

At age 34, Yar'Adua is generally regarded as the strong man of the Nigerian military regime. Recently federal government-owned Daily Times described him rather incautiously as "head of government."

The draft constitution provides for an American-style executive presidency, and many Nigerians believe Yar'Adua will be a candidate for a top political office after the change. He cannot run for the presidency because the draft constitution stipulates the president must be at least 40 years old.

But does Yar'Adua, the son of a top politician of the First Republic, have a political ambition? After the return to civilian rule, would he resign from the army to seek political office, or would he continue in the military?

Smiling innocently, he said that question had never crossed his mind. He said he was certain he would never seek political office because he did not believe he would make a good politician.

Whether he would stay in the army was a different matter. "That," he confided, "you could say is my problem."

In Ghana, Gen. Acheampong's commitment to return the country to civilian rule was reinforced by his political adviser and roving ambassador, Joe Appiah. He said he would not stay in office a minute longer if he thought the general would renege on his promise. His job, as he saw it, was to help insure the transition to civilian rule was effected as smoothly as possible.

The talk in Ghana is about union government, which Gen. Acheampong has described as "a national government formed by all sections of the community — the civil population, the army and the police."

Although Acheampong is committed to the union government concept, he made it clear he would not impose his wish on the country. A national referendum on the issue has been fixed for March 1978 and he and the SMC will abide by the verdict of the people.

He said after the transfer of the government: "As a soldier I pledged on the day of my enlistment and subsequent commission to serve my nation in any way that I am directed by the people or their accredited representatives. As to what I will do after 1979, I leave that to the Almighty God who koows best."

S.W. Africa drops 2nd race law

WINDHOEK, South West Africa — Taking another step toward dropping apartheid statutes, the South West African government has scrapped laws requiring blacks to carry passes designating where they were allowed to go and during what hours.

Earlier, the government had dropped laws forbidding sex and marriage across color lines.

The new repeals do not give blacks the right to work in areas proclaimed white. They must still get permission to do this.

The repeal of the race laws is part of an effort by an Anglo-American block and the government here to devise an acceptable plan for the country's independence next year.

Biko: looks like slaying

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — An official autopsy on black nationalist leader Steve Biko has been completed but an inquest to determine if criminal charges should be brought against anyone has been delayed until Nov. 14.

Protests by school children last summer and protests that followed Biko's death lead to harsh restrictions by the government against black leaders, groups and the two largest black oriented newspapers.

Western nations have responded to the South African atrocities by proposing an unprecedented, mandatory full arms embargo. A stricter economic sanction is being demanded by black nations. The UN Security Council was expected to vote Monday on what action would be taken.

Sources said the autopsy showed Biko died in a police cell Sept. 12 of severe brain injuries of the "contra-coup type" — a whiplash effect injury on one side of the brain by a blow to the other side.

They said two broken ribs, blood clotting and acute kidney failure also were found in an autopsy on the body of Biko, a 30-year-old activist considered the father of the black consciousness movement in South Africa.

The autopsy also showed that in the last week of his life Biko suffered from several symptoms of brain damage, including a condition called "echolalia" in which a person repeats automatically whatever he hears, the sources said.

Another symptom of brain damage was a disorder known as "planters toe" in which a person's toe involuntarily jerks upward.

The sources said it was in that condition that police drove Biko 750 miles from the southeastern city of Port Elizabeth to Pretoria and put him in a police cell Sept.11. He had been arrested Aug. 20.

Biko did not receive medical attention in the capital for several hours until late in the afternoon of Sept. 12. He died that night in his cell, they said.

Biko was the 20th and most prominent black police detainee to die in South African police custody within the past 19 months. His death triggered widespread rioting in South Africa and a tempest of international protest.

The autopsy report was not released officially.

Justice and police minister Jimmy Kruger first said Biko died after an eight-day hunger strike in prison. But last week he said an official investigation showed that although police did not kill Biko, "It might come out" that Biko struggled with police when they tried to handcuff him.

The autopsy report was submitted Monday to Jacobus Nothling, attorney general for Transvaal state, where Biko died. Nothling now must decide whether to hold an inquest. The autopsy was performed Sept. 13 by chief staff pathologist Johan Loubser and Dr. Jonathan Gluckman, appointed by Biko's family.

An attorney representing the victim predicted a full hearing will result in prosecution.

"Far more comes out in the inquest than from the (autopsy) reports," said Shan Chetty, the Biko family's lawyer.

In an inquest, Biko family attorneys would be able to call numerous witnesses whereas if a straight prosecution is launched by the state itself proceedings are limited.

Nigeria wins council seat over Niger

UNITED NATIONS — Nigeria, black Africa's most populous and economically strongest nation, has won a two-year, non-permanent membership on the U.N. Security Council after balloting marked by acrimonious debate and sharp dissent by losing candidate Niger.

After three restricted ballots last week involving the two countries produced no winner, but saw Niger gradually losing votes, Niger Foreign Minister Moumount Djermakoye Adamou withdrew his country's candidacy for the African seat.

The five permanent members of the council are the U.S., Soviet Union, Britain, France and China.

Nigeria has played a leading role in U.N. activities and wanted membership on the Security Council in preparation for decisions the council — as the strongest arm of the United Nations — will take during the next two years on the problems of Rhodesia and Namibia.

As one of the world's largest oil exporters and a member of the powerful organization of petroleum exporting countries, Nigeria can wield more influence with the Western world than can economically poor Niger, diplomatic observers said.

Can DOT bump firm with S. African link?

WASHINGTON — Can the government legally deny a contract to a firm because of its ties to South Africa?

This is one of the main questions facing the U.S. Department of Transportation because it awards a multimillion dollar contract, hopefully to a minority firm, for work on the Northeast Corridor.

The question arose last month, when it was reported that Maryland's Congressman Parren J. Mitchell, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, was supporting a Midwest minority firm for the contract—a firm that has ties with Grinaker Precast, Ltd. of Johannesburg.

Gayton said the department has received numerous telegrams about the issue.

One of the telegrams was from Dr. Joseph E. Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, who said, "It is incredible that the U.S., government, while giving verbal support to Gary Gayton, special assistant to Transportation Secretary Brock Adams, told the AFRO last week, "We have to look at the legal implications. Can you knock out a firm because of its ties?

"There would be no question if this country had concrete economic sanctions against South Africa."

majority rule would give financial support to South African firms which strengthen and uphold the apartheid policy of the South African nation."

Calls are also being received from other minority contractors trying to get the important contract, Gayton said.

"I'm trying to get this (contract) to a minority firm, but they can't keep fighting among themselves," he said, adding, "They're (minority contractors) calling me and telling on each other—they're fighting like cats and dogs."

The $30 million contract which involves concrete railroad ties is important, Gayton said, because "the firm that gets the contract would be setting up a new industry and have to be an expert on concrete ties."

Gayton said that the Midwest firm, headed by Lewis Smoot in Ohio, is not the only firm that has requested to bid on the contract.

A decision on who will be allowed to bid is expected to be made in about 10 days, he added.

He also said that personally, his first priority in awarding the contract is minority involvement and no ties with South Africa. He added, that to his knowledge, no contracts have ever been awarded to firms with South African ties.

BOTSWANA'S HELP TO REFUGEES

GABORONE — Tons of food from the World Food Program (WFP) are starting to arrive in Botswana, aimed at primary school children, the country's brigades of young school-leavers, other vulnerable groups and especially the refugees flooding into Botswana from white-ruled South Africa, Namibia and Rhodesia.

CATTLE FOOD FROM OIL WASTE

LUSAKA — Mobil Oil Zambia is planning a project to produce animal foodstuffs from the waste from oil and other raw materials.

The scheme will use oil waste as well as soya beans, cotton, sunflowers and groundnuts to produce food for cattle, pigs and poultry. All three industries are currently suffering from a lack of adequate feedstuffs.

TELEPHONE EXPANSION IN ZAMBIA

LUSAKA — Zambia's Post and Telecommunications Corp., has signed a contract for the provision of 37 new telephone exchanges throughout the country. The expansion will increase the country's telephone network by 33,500 lines, many of them in rural areas.

The contract has been awarded to a U.S. company and is expected to be completed by about the end of 1979.

MOVE TO PROTECT LAKE BIRDS

GENEVA — Kenya has responded to fears over the future of the one million-plus flamingo population on Lake Nakuru in the Rift Valley, according to the Switzerland-based World Wildlife Fund.

The Kenya government has reportedly decided to move a chemical factory from the shores of the lake. There was concern that the pesticides produced at the factory might escape into the lake and kill the algae in it on which the flamingoes depend for food.

LIVESTOCK STUDY IN MAURITIUS

LONDON — Four British experts are undertaking a study of the livestock potential of the island of Rodrigues — part of Mauritius.

They will assess the commercial, economic and technical, aspects of establishing an abattoir, coldstore and associated projects on the island.

The study is being undertaken by specialists in livestock production, refrigeration, meat processing, and economics. They are expected to make proposals for increasing the output of livestock, marketing, processing and shipment.

If the projects are assessed as viable, the team will produce a costed development plan with a view to early implementation.

Goodlett says Blacks must save themselves

Washington: Dr. Carlton B. Goodlett, president of the National Newspapers Publishers Association (NNPA) — Black Press of America, has called on Black people to save themselves from the results of American racism.

He was speaking here before the 62nd Annual Meeting of the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History at the Sheraton Park Hotel.

Other speakers during the five-day convention included Secretary Patricia R. Harris of the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs; Mayor Walkter W. Washington of this city, Dr. Hugh M. Gloster, president of Morehouse College; Dr. Charles Walker Thomas, Sr., president of ASALH; its executive director, Dr. J. Rupert Picott; and Dr. Joseph E. Harris.

Goodlett launched into American racism, saying "To an audience with your historical concern, I need not dwell on the marshaling of arguments which would establish the fact that the USA is a racist nation."

"And even today," he continued, "all the judicial, legislative and executive machinations have not permanently freed blacks from the status of second-class citizens.

"The truth is", Goodlett said, "that all the landmark political victories, the Supreme Court Judicial victories, and the legislative victories have disturbed very little the relationship between the white masters and the black slaves who endured two and a half centuries of hell, as well as between the white majority and the present day Blacks who inhabit the core cities of America 114 years after Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation.

Dr. Goodlett called on Black schools, the Black family, the Black Church, the Black Press, Black sororities and fraternities.

"Black financial institutions, and Black political leaders to join in a concerted, dedicated effort to save Black America.

Continuing, he added: "We live in a sick society. The avaricious greed of the early pioneers was joined in struggle by those seeking special privilege and favors in the founding conventions of the young nation, in which the supporters of materialistic values won the day against those of humanistic values.

"As we look back," Goodlett said, "in this 201st year of the founding of the nation, its history makes mockery of the American paean, "Freedom, Liberty, Justice and Equality!" For 201 years, property rights have been inviolate when in contest with human rights.

"From the landing at Plymouth," the publisher charged, "the activities of the white settlers and now the white majority began and sustained a ravenous, plundering march of physical and human exploitation which nearly destroyed the Red Man and for more than 249 years, dehumanizing Blacks in horrendous slavery."

Carter's Home Klan's Nest

AMERICUS, GA. UPI — Buddy Cochran, who smashed hissports car into a crowd at a Ku Klux Klan rally in President Carter's hometown of Plains, was convicted Tuesday on eight counts of aggravated assault.

A Sumter County jury of six blacks and six whites returned the verdict at 3 p.m. after deliberating about 13 hours.

Cochran, a 30-year-old Americus mechanic, faces a sentence of up to 10 years on each count stemming from the July 2 incident.

About 30 persons were injured, 19 of whom were hospitalized, when he rammed his car into a group of spectators and hit the speaker's platform.

Judge William Blanks ordered Cochran to undergo psychiatric tests at Central State Hospital in Milledgeville before sentencing.

The jury began deliberating Monday at 2 p.m. and reported it was deadlocked Tuesday morning.

Blanks ordered the jury to resume deliberation. "This is the eighth day of the trial and a lot of time and expense went into it," he said.

Robert Bryan, chief defense counsel, had argued during the trial that Cochran had an intense hatred of racism and the KKK as a result of his experience as a Vietnam War veteran.

District Attorney Claude Morris had contended, however, that Cochran was legally drunk when he attended the rally and said, "Mr. Cochran went there looking for trouble and when he couldn't find any, he created it himself."

Morris also said that thousands of young men served in Vietnam and when they returned they "did not commit acts like these."

Cochran testified he did not remember anything about the night of the rally.

At one point in the trial, the defense called the President's 79-year-old mother, "Miss Lillian" Carter as a witness. She told the jury she attended the rally out of curiosity, but left immediately after Cochran's car crashed into the group. Mrs. Carter was not injured. Several of the injured spectators have filed civil suits in Sumter County against Cochran, asking damages that total over $1.2 million.

"The Ku Klux Klan created a fire in Buddy's mind and they blew on the flames," he said. Bryan had urged the jury to send Cochran to a mental hospital to find out "what makes him tick," rather than to jail.

He said, "something snapped," in Cochran's mind as he was leaving the rally.

Harrassment of Black officials rife

By MARY R. WARNER

Washington: Systematic and nation-wide harassment of Black elected officials is charged in a report issues last week by the National Association of Human Rights Workers (NAHRW).

The report, entitled The Dilemna of Black Politics: A Report on Harassment of Black Elected Officials, is the result of a two-year study by NAHRW's Committee on the Status of Minority Elected Officials.

Cited in the repoot are over 100 Black officials who have been victims of various forms of harassment. The officials represent all regions of the country, all levels of office, and both urban and rural areas.

Research findings indicate though, that the "higher the level of office, or the more outspoken the official, or the greater the influence and power, the higher the incidence of harassment."

Documentation was obtained of distinct patterns of harassment, and in at least some instances the harassment is without doubt the result of conspiratorial activity.

Black officials identified as having been targets of attack include the late U.S. Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, U.S. Rep. William Clay of Missouri, Lt. Gov. George Brown, Lt. Gov. Mervyn Dymally, and Secretary of State C. Delores Tucker of Pennsylvania.

Mayors Maynard Jackson, Atlanta; Richard Hatcher, Gary; Coleman Young, Detroit; "Jay" Cooper, Pritchard, Ala., and Charles Evers, Fayette, Miss.; former Mayors Carl Stokes, Cleveland; Clarence Lightner, Chapel Hill; and State Senator Julian Bond of Georgia; NAACP Washington Bureau Director Clarence Mitchell and former State Senator Leroy Johnson of Georgia.

Principle perpetrators of the attacks on Black elected officials are identified as 1) the white press; 2) the intelligence community and enforcement agencies; 3) the corporate structure; and 4) representatives and allies of the corporate structure positioned in the executive legislative branches of the United States government.

The research did not determine that a single national or international conspiracy exists to destroy the institution of Black politics; however, neither did it determine that there is not such a conspiracy.

Jordon Stays On Carter

Jimmy Carter

ATLANTA (UPI) — Vernon Jordan, executive director of the National Urban League, is again criticizing President Carter for failing to deal forcefully with unemployment.

"We may balance the budget by 1981, but when we do there will still be cities on the brink of death, mass unemployment and continued inequality," he told the AFL-CIO industrial union department convention.

"We have to remind them (politicians) that the hands that once picked cotton picked the President," Jordan said. Since last summer, he has repeatedly charged publicly that Carter has reneged on campaign promises he made to blacks.

Blacks and labor elected Carter, Jordan said, and in return those groups are entitled to their desire for a guaranteed job for everyone.

We Must Rebel If We Are To Survive

The hands of the American government are dripping with the blood of the Puerto Rican people.

American corporations call Puerto Rico an "island paradise" — for the Puerto Rican people it is a living hell of exploitation and suffering. Exploitation by U.S. corporations in Puerto Rico has resulted in: an "official" unemployment rate of 23 per cent; a real unemployment rate of over 40 per cent; cost of living 25 per cent higher than in the U.S., and wages ⅓ less; 70 per cent of the people depend on food stamps to survive; thousands of workers are being poisoned by chemicals in U.S. factories, and the island's waters are being polluted by chemical waste; 35 per cent of the women of child-bearing age have been sterilized. A large occupying army and FBI-led assaults against the workers and independence movements protect U.S. investments in Puerto Rcio.

The millions of Puerto Ricans who were forced to migrate to the U.S. in order to service have fared no better. Here too we are used to cheap labor and denied the basic right to a decent job, education, housing and health care. The government admits that we have the highest rate of poverty and unemployment in the U.S. — but the situation does not get better, it gets worse. A greater percentage of Puerto Ricans live in poverty today than in 1960. In NYC, 85 per cent of us are forced to live in deteriorating ghettos where our children use abandonned buildings and garbage-filled lots as playgrounds.

In our communities we are shot down by police murderers who are then released. The Puerto Rican people will remember Ishmael Rodriquez who was beaten to death in 1975 while his wife watched, Julio Osorio and Rafael Cruz who were murdered by police terrorists in Humboldt Park, Chicago, this summer, just as we will remember Julio Roldan, Tito Perez, Clifford Clover and Randolph Evans, and many more. And these oppressive conditions are repeated in every Puerto Rican community in the U.S.

We have every reason to be burning with anger and hatred of those responsible for the conditions the Puerto Rican people face in Puerto Rico and in the U.S.

We must rebel if we are to survive! We have tried petitions, letter-writing campaigns and demonstrations. What has been the response of the U.S. rulers?—

—They have accelerated their plans to impose statehood on Puerto Rico — just as they forcibly imposed U.S. citizenship on Puerto Ricans in 1917.

—They have tried to passify and deceive Puerto Ricans here with smiling presidential tours through the ruins of the South Bronx — raising false hopes, telling people "Don't rebel — you have a friend in the White House." Meanwhile, our basic rights are denied. Meanwhile:

—They have stepped up their torture of the imprisoned Puerto Rican patriots, trying to force them to publically renounce the struggle for Puerto Rico's liberation.

—They have carried out the death penalty against Andres Figueroa Cordero.

—They have increased repression and political frame-ups against the entire Puerto Rican independence movement.

We have taken this action because the American government has left the Puerto Rican people no alternative. We carry with us today the sentiments of thousands of Puerto Ricans in the U.S. and in Puerto Rico who have shown by their actions their unity with our demands.

(1) We demand the independence of Puerto Rico!

(2) We demand immediate and unconditional freedom for the 4 Nationalists who continue to be tortured in U.S. prisons — Lolita Lebron, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Irving Flores and Oscar Collazo.

(3) We denouce the physical and mental torture and slow murder of Andres Figueroa Cordero. Andres was held in solitary confinement for 6 months and denied medical attention. When cancer had spread throughout his body, he was "pardoned". He was pardoned to die — outside the prison, so the U.S. rulers that murdered him could maintain their cover of "concern for human rights." (This is the same way Don Pedro Albizu Campos was murdered. He was subjected to radiation treatments and was released from prison in 1965 only after they had assured themselves of his death.) Despite this inhuman torture, our brothers, Andres, has remained firm in his commitment to the liberation of Puerto Rico — he is an inspiration to all freedom-loving people.

(4) We demand full democratic rights for Puerto Ricans in the U.S. - an end to discrimination based on our nationality, color and language, an end to discrimination in the workplaces, the communities and the schools.

(5) We protest the increased repression against the Puerto Rican independence movement. The frame-up of David Perez and Vicente Alba is a recent example of this intensified drive to terrorize supporters of Puerto Rican independence. Just as the government's "charges" in this case were proven false — so too are the charges against the 8 people in NY and Chicago who have been jailed for refusing to cooperate with Grand Jury witchhunts designed to crush the independence movement. We demand the immediate release of the 8.

(6) We demand amnesty for all those involved in this action today.

We take this action in solidarity with the struggles of the Black, Native American, Chicano-Majicano and Asian peoples. Our enemy is the same. We demand the release of all those who have been imprisoned for fighting for their people's liberation, like Assata Shakur who goes on trial today.

We are in solidarity with the American workers who in growing numbers are confronting the U.S. rulers. We have a special message of support for the striking miners of Stearns, Kentucky, who have set an example by taking up arms to protect their rights.

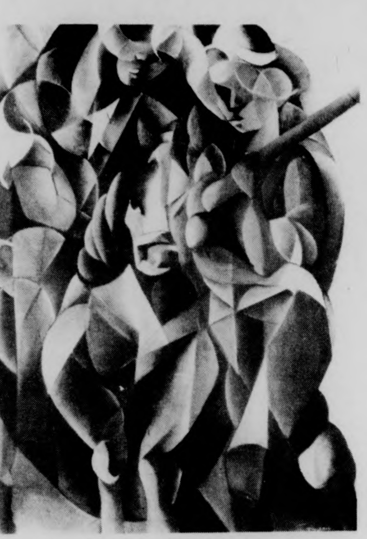
New York Haitian Artists Show at Brooklyn Museum



An exhibition of fifty paintings, tapestries, weavings and sculpture by ten Haitian artists opened in the Community Gallery of the Brooklyn Museum on October 30th. The show will run through December 4th.

Spencer Depas whose hooked and woven tapestries are on exhibit, started organizing this show two years ago. He is a member of the Community Gallery Advisory Committee.

All of the artists showing were born and trained in Haiti. They have stayed abreast the flux and flow of national, aesthetic and cultural currents while living and working in New York. They proudly affix themselves to an independent Haitian artistic school that came into firm existence after the Black led revolt leading to independence in 1804. C.L.R. James in THE BLACK JACOBINS documents this struggle by ex-slaves led by Toussaint L'Ouverture. Contributing to the cohesiveness that links early works to contemporary expression are the Africanisms that persist and permeate all Haitian cultural and aesthetic forms. This, as an identifiable element of Haitian art, is visibly present in the works being shown.

Nineteenth century artist, Numa Desroches, the artists with the Academie des Beaux Arts, and sculptor Normil Charles set forth precedents from which a groundswell movement peaked in the 1930's. William Edouard Scott, Chicago born, was inspirational to Petion Savain and Georges Remponeau, a participant in this show, who in turn were instrumental in the founding of Le Centre d'Art in 1944. This center had influence on the gaumut of aesthetic directions of Haitian art. Lucner Lazard, Toussaint August and Spencer Depas, among the Centre d'Art group, took park in formulating and creating the matrix of artistic thought that continues to be of importance.

Toussaint August first had his paintings introduced into this country in 1963 by a U.S. priest who presented one of his canvases to the United Nations committee that chose designs for their UNESCO fund raising Christmas cards. His painting was reproduced for one of these card designs and since then he has been showing in the United States and Europe. In "Market Near The Sea" stiff fish hang out of baskets like petaled flowers. Male and female figures flicker visually setting in motion tropical colors. Currently August is working on a voodoo subject but he inserted, "I don't have enough time to paint because I work."

Georges Remponeau submitted for this exhibition "Vodou Dance" a triad of women — two drumming and "Market Ceremony" where workers are rendered in a unity of circular movement, necessary and natural to such a setting.

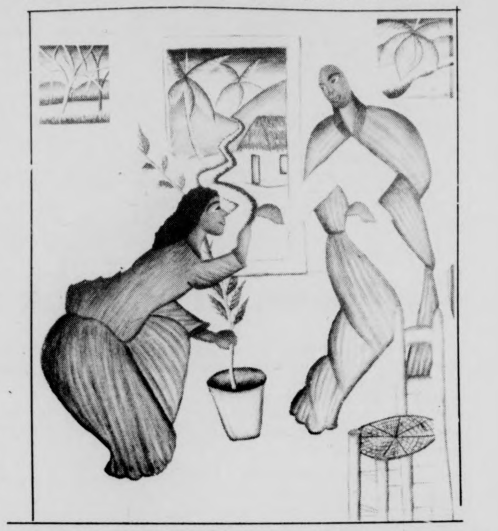
Haitian homescapes by Eric Girault offer contrasts of technique within each of his paintings that provide a sense of impending changeability from sky or sea forces. In "Jeremie", the village, by means of smooth, invisible strokes, is at angle to the sky with its clouds, lapped into brush-print roughness rather than salty sea breezes.

Fritz Edouard Joseph, born in 1948 in this village of Jeremie, injects history and its political interpretation by inference into his sculpted bronzes, while his titles speak more directly — "1804 Freedom in Haiti" and "Mao's Thought in Black Revolution 1980's" ....

In the August show at the Brooklyn Nuseum of "Black American Painters", New Jersey artist Jacob Lawrence in his "Toussaint L'Ouverture Series" infused his paintings with history — dynamically amalgamating armed and uniformed Black fighting figures in a design sensitive to dialectics. He utilized "natural and ancestral visual symbols" to commit his panels to speaking of the "intolerable conditions" of the slave struggles — even as they are manifested today. Thus he cited by way of historical theme how lives in Haiti today are tied to Africans in the Americas, wherever they think, create, work and struggle. He painstakingly depicts a past to formulate a conceptualization of the necessities for that inevitable future. Thus a bold statement such as Jacob Lawrence's is not present in this Community Gallery Show. It should be noted also that many contemporary Haitian painters create works communally and anonymously in rural collectives, in enclaves isolated by the effects of harsh political and economic conditions, or by choice, to maintain separation from the "art world". Works representing this genre were shown last year at the Studio Museum in Harlem.

Oils in reds, blues and yellows, but as the artist stressed, they were not "monochromatic", countered the commercial stereotyping of Haitian painting — "Primitivism". Painting traders import into the United States and Europe paintings by Port-au-Prince street artists selling them for $2000 with the help of agents and galleries employing slick Madison Avenue marketing practices. It need not be stated that anything above ten dollars reaches the painters' hands. Bernard Wah condemned this saying, "There's a sickness ... There can be too much painting — painting as an industry only to sell." Wah stated that his paintings and those by other Haitian artists were not "primitive" and may or may not be "popular" but that they did express the life of Haitian people. He is exploring on canvas the internationalities of the Haitian feeling, in addition to the objective elements that threaten this. "Traite Malad" mirrored his comments and thought. He reminded further, "The Haitian people are a religious people — it's in the dance, the music, the life ... All night we discussed this, artists and writers. Painters are close to writers."

Wah started painting at age ten and has over the past twenty years been engaged in clarifying an "abused" language." He founded an art school in Haiti based on voodoo — Calfon — "Crossroads". "I wanted all artists to meet, to work together," he stated.



Raphael Denis, Lucner Lazard and Abraham Mucius joined with the artists mentioned in creating a colorful reflection of Haitian life reminiscences not unlike what Haitian poet, Rene Depestre has written in A RAINBOW FOR THE CHRISTIAN WEST:

Here I am a brand new Black
I finally feel that I am myself
In my new solar geography.

by 'liberal' Calvinists who have based their economic-political relationships on racism.

As the Jewish population was required under Hitler to wear badges, all Blacks still are required to carry on themselves at all times passbooks that limit their movement according to authoritarian directives issued by the government according to its needs for Blacks in its economy.

In the meantime President Carter speaks out on human rights and refuses to use the tool of an economic, diplomatic blockade of South Africa. The United States was able to strangle the economy of Chile in 1973, leading to the overthrow of the democratically elected government there, and it continues to wield an economic blockade against Cuba, yet there is no such action taken against South Africa. The reason for this refusal becomes apparent as once again we see multinational corporations exploiting a cheap labor market, paying Black workers six to fourteen times less than White workers and running away with a higher investment-profit margin than anywhere else in the world. Again we see profits take precedence over human needs.

One then might ask, "Isn't it possible that these corporations could effect affirmative action policies and work in a positive direction on the South African economy?" South African law however, says different and any business within its boundries are required to abide by South African law. Token measures are possible but when Blacks are forbidden to vote, organize unions or strike, be in supervisory positions over Whites, then we start to see the real motive of South Africa and the multinational corporations which make up the backbone of its economy.

We here in the United States need to pressure our own government to break with South Africa and apartheid. The U.S. has about 1.5 Billion dollars invested in South Africa. The minority regime depends upon severe repression to maintain itself as it has demonstrated with the jailings and killing of thousands of students in Soweto last year and over the country in the last few weeks. The Commiitee for the Liberation of Southern Africa to effect international justice and in solidarity with the majority of people in South Africa, call for the U.S. to initiate a total economic and diplomatic blockade of South Africa, for the South African government to end the ban, for freedom for all South African political prisoners and for an end tt apartheid. We urge you to join with in in our activities over the coming months working for these goals. A demonstration is being planned for November 19, on the Amherst common, there will be teach-ins and conferences on the situation as well. To help the Black people in South Africa attain justice, come to New Africa House, room 116, at 8 p.m. on Thursdays.

Why Not Jazz

DON SCHLITTEN/ORNETTE COLEMAN, 1962

by Kevin Jones

The denotative definition for the word jazz is, a kind of music syncopated and highly rhythmic, originated by New Orleans musicians especially Negroes. Lately there has been an objection of the use of this word "jazz". Many musicians feel that the use of this word is not concommitant to the complexity and the beauty of this musical art form.

CHARLIE PARKER AND MILES DAVIS, 1945/ERNEST SMITH COLLECTION

There have been many suggestions to use in place of this word. Black Classical Music, Creative Black Music, African-American Music, or just black music are some of the terms that have been offered to replace such an emotive term.

But, why not use the term "jazz"? To begin with the term first came about through the use of slang language. When people first heard the music in New Orleans and afterwards, it seemed very foreign to them. Of course they didn't understand it, so they tagged a name to it, something which seemed to convey the excitement and energy of the music.

Because the term is so loosely used, it connotates a negative image of the musician. The stereotyped role of the musician is no longer being played by today's musician. The use of drugs, wild and unclean lifestyles were portrayed by only a few musicians. Even those who did portray that life style were forced into it through the nature of the business. This being that musicians are so often underpaid and the fact that blacks being the creators are in a business controlled by whites. This is increased by the fact that black artists never receive fair recognition for their creations. Consequently many turn to drugs and alcohol as an escape route.

The concept of changing the term "jazz" is not a new one. Edward Kennedy "Duke" Ellington was first conscious of enriching the African-American culture during a time called the Harlem Renaissance. He made one of the first efforts to change "jazz" to "Negro Music". Although it was progressive during that era, the term "negro" is also outdated and unappropriate.

Black Artists such as Max Roach have spoken on the implications of the word "jazz". "...I detest that word, I work "jazz" festivals and "jazz" concerts, and "jazz" workshops etc. Its a compromise. If I don't do it that way, I might as well just forget about being in the business because it is controlled by whites and we have no control. We have no real estate to preserve and perpetuate our culture. Also, its getting so bad now that we were asking ourselves if there is a black culture."

It is also a matter of respect for the master musicians that have gone before us such as Duke Ellington, Charlie Parker, Bud Powell, Dizzy Gillespie and Max Roach not to label them with such a derogatory word as a "Jazz Musician". Contrastly, we have specific labels for European Classical Music. Their music is labeled by eras in which the music went through. Baroque, Classical, Romantic and Impressionistic are a few of their titles. We have labels such as "swing", "bebop", "cool jazz" and "hard bop". This is the reason why we need a more dignified label than Jazz. Personally, I would label it Creative African-American Music. You may ask, why African-American Music? Because this art form was created by Americans of African descent and have been the major contributors and innovators.

With this in mind, we hope for the day when the system will change and bring forth an appropriate title for Creative African-American Music.

I Sang the Blues

"My name is Sam Greenlee; I am a Black American, and I write; not necessarily listed in their order of importance I was born of a black refugee family in Chicago, July 13, 1930, a second-generation immigrant from the deep south. At the time of my birth, my father was a chauffeur, my mother a dancer in the chorus line of the Regal Theater on Forty seventh and South Parkway, on the south side of Chicago.

"I received a non-education in Chicago ghetto non-schools and played catch-up at three universities; Wisconsin, Chicago and Thessalonikki. I speak fluent Greek, Indonesian-Malay and enough Arabic, French and Italian to order a meal and argue with taxi drivers. I served for two years as an Infantry Lieutenant in the U.S. Army, in the 31st Infantry 'Dixie' Division, whose divisional insignia is the Confederate flag and whose band marches in Confederate uniforms. I was threatened with court martial for refusing to wear the latter and salute the former.

"I was employed for more than seven years as a professional propagandist in the foreign service of the United States Information Service. I served in Iraq, Pakistan, Indonesia and Greece, resigning in order to devote full time to creative writing. I was given the Agency's third highest award, the Meritorious Service Award, for activities during the 1958 Kassem revolution in Baghdad. The following year I was passed over for promotion: showpiece spades are not pupular if they think they have been hired because of, rather than in spite of, competence.

"I have written a book about a colonial revolution in the United States because I feel Black Americans are no more citizens of the U.S. than were the Algerians citizens of metropolitan France prior to their country's independence. The Black American has followed the classic Marxist 'advancement' from slavery to colonialism.

"I consider THE SPOOK WHO SAT BY THE DOOR a study of the revolutionary character in general and the farcical nature of racial integration in the U.S. in particular. It is a book about white face and black masks and a warning that African masks have historically and traditionally served the dual function of both entertaining and threatening the enemy. In that it is the story of one ghetto Black man's reaction to the hypocrisy of the bourgeoisie, it is autobiographical; in that it is a tale of man's reaction to oppression, it is universal.

"At the risk of supporting cherished sterotypes, I run fast, sing, dance and have been told that I am good in bed. My chief literary influences are Charlie Parker, Lester Young, Miles Davis and Billie Holiday. As a writer, I consider myself a jazz musician whose instrument is an Olivetti typewriter. I write in 4/4 time, in the key of E and my audience are the swinging free, regardless of their chains.

"I do not consider myself a victim of white racism because a victim submits. Nor am I appalled by European and/or American history because I regard it as fiction. Sing no blues for me because I sing my own; and to a Black man, the blues are a freedom song."

Contemporary Chinese Art

By: JOHANNA P. BRASSARD

The Distinguished Visitors Program brought Han Suyin to the Student Union Ballroom last Thursday night. Officially, she is a medical doctor, practicing in her native China, and the biographer of Mao Tse-Tung. But she described herself as "the sort of person whom has the tendency to put her foot into everything". Because of this tendency, she has attracted the attention of many countries. Our university's attention was attracted to Han Suyin by virtue of her study of contemporary Chinese art.

Han Suyin has spent the past year working on a systematic survey of painting in contemporary China. She undertook the survey out of concern that no book or article was available pertaining to the subject of the impact of various revolutionary movements from 1949 to the present on painting in China. Her year of research included extensive travelling to different areas of China, and the interviewing of various artists — professional artists, working-class artists, peasant artists.

Han Suyin told our audience that there had been two types of painting in China before the Communist Revolution. There had been the painting of professional artists. These artists concentrated on traditional subjects, depicting birds, fishes, landscapes and flowers. Due to a decline in the area of professional art before 1949, the professionals became heavily influenced by the French Impressionists. It was very difficult to make a living at painting professionally in China before 1949.

The second type of art work prevalent before the Revolution were Folk Paintings. These were New Year's pictures, painted by individual peasants chosen by other peasants each year in individual villages. The subjects were not original, but prescribed representations of cherubic children and beneficient Genii.

But the Communist Revolution changed the values as well as the political structure of China. No longer were learning and creativity to be reserved for a privileged elite.

After 1958 and the Great Leap Forward, Cultural Centers were instituted on factories as part of Mao Tse-tung's literary drive. Professional painters went among the workers and peasants to gain inspiration, but soon began teaching artistic skills. Creativity in wood-cutting and painting were encouraged by the government in order to improve the quality of life for the general populace. This movement did not develop evenly throughout the country, but it continued.

In 1970 the program was reinforced by Chou En-lai, and flourished until 1973. Refresher courses were set up in communes, factories and mines. There was an enormous surge in creativity throughout China.

1974 saw the rise of the "Gang of Four" political group in China. They were a paranoid lot, seeing insulting innuendoes in the work of professional artists. Many artists were persecuted. The Gang of Four emphasized manual labor and the despiction of all things cerebral; they nearly undid the progress of the Cultural Revolution.

Today, Academies of Art closed by the Gang of Four have been reopened and restored. The persecuted professional artists are painting again. Workers and peasants continue to express themselves through art. Modern Art historians from the United States are now travelling to China to study these new works.

Most of the older professional artists still paint in the traditional manner. But the workers and peasants concentrate on the depiction of their immediate environment. These paintings are colorful and vibrant, expressing the joy which the people feel for the social, political and technological development of their country.

Persons in factories, villages and art schools create posters with messages both political and moral. Paintings are also done of scenes from everyday life, and are often very detailed, resembling photographs. This art is done on scraps of paper and the walls of rooms and buildings; not only on traditional canvases. The workers and peasants attach no monetary value to these works and so make no egoistic attempts to preserve them. Creativity is for fun; for the enjoyment of all. The government, however, does choose some of the best works to be reproduced and distributed at a low cost throughout China, in order that all citizens may enjoy the art of their comrades.

Those in capitalistic countries may not understand these practices. We have been socialized to believe that only an elite few may paint, and that these treasures must be locked from the sight of the many, whick only serves to sully the creation. But the People's Republic of China operates under the belief that all persons should experience the joy of creation. By encouraging everyone to try their hand at art, the Chinese government has seen fine work from a larger sector of the population. Han Suyin provided her audience with an insight into the nature of our society when she said: "Individualistic art is important in society where people are thrown back on themselves — China is not that way." Is our attitude towards art just another reflection of the alienation created by our political, economic and social system?

Rumi Songos

On the night of October 30, AHORA sponsored one of the most talented Latin American groups that have ever come to campus. RUMI-SONGOS, a group of young musicians from different parts of South America, interpreted the songs of the spirit of the high Andes peasants. They interpreted from "El Condor Pasa" to the song of chilean hope "La Plegaria del Labrador" with the typical instruments of the Andes region. We had a very enthusiastic evening full of solidarity and with good committed art. This art is committed with all the Third-World countries, sharing the same culture and struggle: "A song of Liberation".

Poem to Eno

With muscles like wrought iron, a man swings
Dance, splinting and healing
yesterdays of beauty, of Africa.
Torso forged wonderfully to hips chin jutting out, head tilted back; Baule sculptured with the geometry of dignity.

the eyes, wet divining stones, burn with memory:
cones of sand, the crystals
filter away slowly.

razed pyramids. scorched scrolls of the libraries.
gems stolen out of the eyes of sarcophages of pharoahs.
bushes torn viciously out of the ground.

spirit beings contained in chained flesh, chained to the destinies of great European gardens.
His legs arc between planets, and he opens up to let the universe flow in, allows the ancestors to move his body, listens to the messages hissing up from the wells of our unknown being.

What is spirit dance?
Eno.... recalling forgotten ceremonies, remembering the essence that cannot be taken, the universe within where all parts have come again complete.

Smith sells Firestone stock in S. Africa

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Trustees of Smith College have sold nearly $70,000 of stock held in the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company.

As a result of a student petition signed last spring by 600 of Smith's 2,500 students, the investments committee of the Board of Trustees decided to make written requests for information about how four firms in which stock was held were meeting their "social responsibilities" in South Africa, said Smith spokesperson Ann Shanahan.

The firms in South Africa in which Smith owned stock were General Motors Corp., Caterpillar Tractor Co., IBM, and Firestone.

Shanahan said, "We received from each of the four corporations a response. General Motors, Caterpillar Tractor and IBM all gave satisfactory responses."

According to Shanahan, the problem with Firestone was a plant recently constructed near segregated land.

Firestone provided inadequate responses when asked why the plant was placed right outside this segregated area, and what is being done in South Africa to promote equality for the nation's black majority, according to trustee Roger Murray, chairman of the board's investments committee.

Shanahan said "The answers were simply incomplete. Firestone was not responsive to the questions. The trustees did not have enough information to determine whether or not Firestone was acting with social responsibility."

Shanahan said the Firestone stock had been purchased shortly before the student petition was presented last May.

"Usually stocks the College invests in are looked at over a long period of time — looked at carefully. The Board of Trustees sometimes does not have a chance to review the investments immediately," Shanahan said, in reference to the Firestone investment.

Some 42,014 shares worth $687,728, have been sold as a result of the inquiry.

"This sale is not an isolated incident. Mr. Murray has for years been in the forefront of all kinds of investor responsibility activities, and he's very knowledgeable. This was not a decision that was taken lightly," Shanahan said.

Earlier this year trustees of Hampshire College and UMass voted to divest their

A Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide

Course guide ready; pick it up today

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to present "more than just an advertisement of courses," a guide containing more than 500 course and teacher evaluations has been compiled by the Undergraduate Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee.

According to committee member Joe Connolly, 20,000 copies of the guide entitled "On the Other Hand" will be available today in dining commons, Student Union and Campus Center.

Connolly said the guide will contain listings of the salaries and tenure status of UMass professors, as well as information regarding contracts and grants received by UMass faculty.

Three evaluation techniques were used in compiling the guide, academic affairs committee member Karen Hakala said.

The first type of evaluation is derived from information obtained from the personnel files of professors. According to Hakala, permission was sought from 1400 professors to examine evaluation forms completed by UMass students. Approximately 300 professors agreed to allow the academic affairs committee to review the evaluations and write summaries based on that information. Hakala said most of the course evaluations contained in the guide are based on information compiled from professors' files.

Opinions based on responses to a survey in the Collegian comprise another group of evaluations. Hakala said the guide will contain all the quotes obtained from the survey which was conducted last spring.

In addition, the guide will contain the opinions of ten students regarding individual courses and instructors. Hakala said the guide will also contain correspondence from the academic affairs committee to UMass President Robert C. Wood, former FBI director Clarence Kelly, and CIA officials regarding research done at UMass, and outside consultation work by professors. Connelly said this information previously was not available to students.

"It is our hope that some basic administrative policy changes can be implemented to improve the quality of education at UMass," Connolly said. "We'd like to see more emphasis given to instruction when faculty members come up for tenure."

Student Government Association co-president Jon Hite said, "The issue of the course and teacher evaluation is a good first step in providing the student body with the information they need in selecting their courses."

Hite added that while this year's guide was incomplete, "it should put both the student and faculty on notice that the SGA is serious about this type of guide and that we are committed to doing it again next year."

The present guide contains evaluations of more than 500 courses, but does not contain descriptions of most of the course offerings.

"This represents the first step toward getting public access to the faculty and administration," student senator Greg Tarpinian said. "This (professor's salaries and tenure) will be an issue at the bargaining table. It is a crucial issue for students in their quest to gain recognition as a viable force within the University community," he said.

Socialist assesses Carter

By MICHELE BIAGIONI
Collegian Staff

Socialist Party member Frank Lovell yesterday gave a Socialist view of Carter's first year in office, attacking the president for not fulfilling campaign promises with performance.

Lovell, a regular columnist for the Militant, a Socialist news weekly, cited Carter's stand on human rights, his pledge to cut nuclear arms spending and opposition to Washington's massive bureaucracy as areas where the president has fallen short. He also discussed the Marxist analysis of history.

Lovell said the major problem of the current administration is its handling of the faltering economy. He criticized Carter for depending on various proposals, such as the energy plan, while operating in a capitalist system which, by its nature, is "planless", he said. Although Carter has not alleviated the unemployment problem, as he had claimed he would do, Lovell said, its current figure of seven million is consistent with that of a year ago, and Carter is not completely to blame.

The principle causes Lovell cited were "the social forces which President Carter and others don't know about and can't control." Consequently, he said, Carter is not totally at fault for his inability to act. The major antagonists are the employers, he said.

Lovell said the social and economic ills crippling America are a result of an overproductive world capitalist system. Because of the over-production, he continued, the economy cannot accommodate for the employable sector of the population. The interests of the employers are preserved so they can continue to operate at a profit at the expense of the working class, said Lovell.

Lovell called for the working class to find means of political organization in an effective way, as they have achieved economically in the formation of unions. Through unions, he said, the working class can voice their political ideas and organize to change the system.

Once the working class is recognized, he said, its leading course of action should be to institute a federally funded public works program and a cut in the corporate profits. Lovell said he believes that as long as the employer class continues to manipulate the economy, inflation, unemployment, environmental and social (racism and sexism) ills will continue to plague the country.

The Socialists answer in the public works program, he said, would be the creation of a building project for housing, a cleanup of our urban centers, and the establishment of a widely expanded and desperately needed public transportation system.

Only through a reform of the economic system with a politically active working class can the government effectively confront its major problems, Lovell said. As he explained in his Socialist interpretation, Carter, like his predecessors, will continue to be ineffective if confined to a capitalist system.

Parking headaches may end

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

Temporary relief for downtown parking headaches should be on the way by next week, according to Amherst Town Manager A. Louis Hayward.

Hayward last night said the town would announce by next week, possibly as early as Thursday, plans to create additional parking spaces in the downtown business district.

Town Planner James P. Cope last night presented to the Board of Selectmen a proposal to create 50 additional temporary parking spaces on a half-acre lot behind the main business district on Main Street. Once approved, "temporary spaces" would be used for 12-14 months, he said. Cope said an additional 17 spaces could be made on Lessey Street, which borders the proposed lot.

Development costs for the lot, which would have to be paved with one foot of gravel to prevent cars from sinking into the mud would be around $2,800, Cope said. The site has been approved by the Chamber of Commerce and the Amherst Redevelopment Authority. The proposed lot is on land slated for use by the ARA for the Boltwood Walk project.

Amherst Selectmen

Although the temporary parking proposal is not subject to approval by the selectmen, board Chairperson Diana H. Romer said Cope and Hayward had the selectmen's support in pursuing "any action they deemed appropriate."

Proposals for long-term solutions to the parking problems will be heard by the board at their regular meeting on Nov. 28.

Cope also outlined a "sketch plan" for additional parking spots in an area on Main Street behind Delano's, Time-Out, Judy's and other neighboring stores. Cope stressed this was only a rough proposal, subject to future change. He said the area could be developed within the next year.

Also considered last night were various proposals to install new parking meters in selected spots around town, and to lower meter times. Area businessmen voiced strong opposition to raising meter rates above one cent, maintaining the hike could only scare business away from the center. Various downtown merchants stressed the importance of adequate downtown parking on the busy upcoming Christmas shopping season.

In other business, the Board of Selectmen also granted permission to an anti-cigarette smoking group to set up petition tables in downtown Amherst. The group, the Citizens for Clean Air in Publicly Used Buildings, will set up a table on Saturday, Nov. 19, on the walkway between the Unitarian Church and the "103 Shops."

A pilot town recycling program will be run in March and April of 1978. Hayward announced. Bimonthly curb-side collection of newspapers and bottles sorted by color will be made within the district downtown, he said. The program will not extend as far as UMass.

The selectmen last night also approved a note to borrow $35,000 for a new pumper fire truck. Last May, Town Meeting appropriated one-half the purchase cost of the $70,000 truck. Last night's action completed the deal. The truck is scheduled to arrive Nov. 11.

The board unanimously approved an application from Charlie's restaurant-lounge for live entertainment and dancing weekdays and Sundays, and a juke box weekdays.

All six articles for the Nov. 14 special Town Meeting were approved by the board, five of them unanimous vote. Four of the articles, including two water search articles, reconstruction of a drainage tunnel, and construction of a sidewalk mall along Boltwood Walk, were placed on the warrant, or agenda, by the board.

One of the two articles by a private citizen, Article 5, calls for a town study of existing water supplies. Article 6 asks the town to endorse legislation being planned to reform property taxes in the state.

Grad Senate prexy to meet with Puryear

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Graduate Student Senate President Sally Rees will meet with Vice-Chancellor of Academic Affairs Paul L. Puryear this week to discuss summer fee waivers, it was announced at the GSS meeting last night.

The senate yesterday received a notice from UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery saying he was referring to Puryear the decision of whether to bring the issue of summer fee waivers before the Board of Trustees.

A motion passed by the senate on Oct. 15 requested "that the Board of Trustees instruct the Division of Continuing Education to waive summer course fees for those graduate students under contract with the University and who are receiving tuition waivers for compensation."

Graduate Students who had been exempt from payment under the summer tuition waiver in previous years must now pay for some of the summer courses under the new waiver, based on fees rather than tuition, Rees said. Those affected are primarily teaching assistants and resident assistants.

Other matters brought before the senate last night include a report from the Collective Bargaining Advisory Board, elections of Graduate Council members, and motions from the finance, executive and elections committees.

Emily Rosenberg, the GSS representative to University collective bargaining sessions, last night said the ability to sit in and observe the sessions would give the Collective Bargaining Advisory Board a "good knowledge of the ins and outs of the University."

Graduate Senate

The opportunity to participate in negotiating sessions is a result of this summer's administration and faculty pre-contract meetings which accepted one graduate and undergraduate student from the Amherst and Boston campuses to sit in on the sessions, Rees said.

Elected to committee and council positions last night were Regina Brown to the Health Council, Don Froust to the Graduate Council, Prescott Smith, Extensive Council, Sue Ziller to the Arts Council alternate, Barbara Stack, Status of Women Committee, Beate Riesterer, Student Health Advisory Board, and David Biggers, to the Student Affairs Committee of the Graduate Council. Biggers was also elected as an alternate on the Collective Bargaining Advisory Committee.

The Finance Committee last night moved to guarantee a Beer Blast for a deficit up to and including $600 for Prince House.

RSO investigates alleged snack bar deficit

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

An audit is being conducted through the Recognized Student Organization investigating an alleged $5,000 deficit of Greenough Snack Bar, Central Area Council President Mark Zinan said last night at a two hour CAC meeting in Chadbourne dormitory.

Zinan said according to Greenough figures, the snack bar has made $500 from pinball machines and $500 from food and beverages.

Zinan told the council that snack bar workers said they wanted the CAC to pay for any of its deficits, and "not get involved" if the operation earns a profit. Zinan said snack bar employees are not work-study positions and if the council ever "took over" the concession, it would require staff to be work-study students in order "to save money".

Zinan said an "earth-foods type" snack bar being considered for the Orchard Hill area might result in Greenough's losing business.

In other action, a heated discussion followed a comment made on the concept of student unionization by Student Organizing Project members David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham.

Birmingham said the SOP will provide an organization that will "allow students to have a say in the quality of their education." She added UMass students have $1.1 million which is theirs, but "have very little say about it."

Central

Barenberg said he has "enough confidence that students will get involved" in their academic rights "if they have a vehicle with which their involvement can be facilitated."

Birmingham continued, "Students are represented, as opposed to doing what they want... We should use collective power to deal with issues. Presently, the senate doesn't provide resources. We should organize ourselves better... so that when issues come up we can help each other deal with them."

New World Center Coordinator Nkrumah Olinga questioned the role of SOP as an "organizer." He said he has dealt with many organizers, such as those combatting racism, and would not consider SOP a structured organizer. Olinga said he is "looking for improvement" in student government and wants to see "actual steps" taken toward improvement. He added, "When SOP organizes, more people will listen."

Olinga said he was more interested in the "methodology" of SOP than in its theories.

Terry Byrd, President of the New World Center, said he thinks SOP would allow students to deal with issues other than those concerning money. He said area governments "are always talking money, money, money.... while students today ridicule older people for trying to make the bucks... all they want themselves is bread."

Greenough representative Ron Coler questioned the need for increased student organization, saying "people don't care.... and the majority of people you'd want to represent you don't give a damn."

In other business, the CAC voted unanimously to allocate $85 to Chadbourne and Greenough dorms to host a joint coffeehouse Nov. 20 in Chadbourne.

Chadbourne representative Wendy Trock said she thinks the coffeehouse "will be a good thing for the area... it will be a multicultural event." She added, she Is "looking for a better quality, more coordinated, and smoother coffeehouse."

Sylvan government discusses program council

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Sylvan Area Government members last night discussed functions of the newly developed Academic Program Development Council, and its members.

Sylvan

The Academic Program Council will support local organizations such as the Racial Awareness Training Program, Anacoana Center, Sylvan Cultural Society and other organizations. The coucil will consist of the three Sylvan heads of residence, the assistant area director, the residential resource manager, a representative from the Human Oppression Center, three area government officers and four Sylvan Area residents, including two Third World members and two women.

Sylvan Area Government officers also voted last night to support the Northeast Area Government suit against the undergraduate Student Senate concerning the allocation of Student Activity Trust fund monies.

Sylvan Area President Linne Donaldson also introduced the newly hired area secretary, Anne Igoe, a resident of Cashin House. Donaldson also announced the new director of The Parchment, the area's newspaper, Steve Galvin and the new coordinator of the Craft Shop, James Messier.

Correction

Scott Wieler, president of Orchard Hill Area government, incorrectly stated in Sunday's OHAG meeting that the Undergraduate Student Senate lent $1500 to OHAG. Actually, the senate lent Field House Snack Bar $1500, according to Mark Hergenrother, OHAG vice president.

Students unknowingly contributed an average of $6 dollars each to support the operation of the Campus Center last year in addition to the $79 Campus Center fee.

The $6 was the average profit the Textbook Annex made per student from the sale of textbooks during Fiscal Year (FY) 1977, according to unaudited figures from the Campus Center Business Office.

Since students are practically obliged to buy most or all of their textbooks at the Annex, each student pays approximately $85 per year for the privilege of using the Campus Center, regardless of whether or not they use the building.

The annex, despite its separate location in a University owned building, is considered part of the University Store, and its profits become part of the Campus Center revenue.

The textbook annex reported net profits of $206,900 on total sales of $1.86 million in FY '77. The actual profit of the annex was $127,800 after deducting some administrative costs shared by the annex and the University Store.

The entire University Store (including the annex) realized actual profits of $315,700 on sales of $3.35 million last year.

The Textbook Annex accounted for over 40 per cent of the actual profits of the entire University Store, and over 55 per cent of total sales.

The profits were used to pay off the annual debt service of the Campus Center (the total cost of the bonds sold to build the complex), and the expenses of other accounts in the Campus Center which do not show a profit. The annual debt service of the Campus Center is approximately $1.56 million. The bonds will be paid off in 33 years in the year 2011.

The two methods by which students contributed to the operation of the Campus Center is comparable to the two types of taxes: direct and indirect. The $79 Campus Center fee is a direct tax much the same as an income tax. Profits generated by the revenue accounts such as the Textbook Annex are indirect taxes like sales taxes.

Other revenue accounts in the Campus Center include Food Services, Accommodations Services, Conference Services, Maintenance and Operations, and Retail Services. Along with the University Store, these accounts brought in estimated revenues of $6.70 million in FY '77. The accounts are budgeted to reflect an increase in their combined revenues of over $60,000 during this fiscal year.

Campus Center revenues have increased dramatically over the past several years. The Campus Center fee rose $15 since 1975, from $64 to the present $79. The total sales and profits of the University Store have also increased over the last four years. Total sales have risen more than $550,000 since 1974. During that time, profits rose by approximately $100,000.

The average profit margin (the percent difference between the cost of an item to the seller and to the buyer) on the books sold at the Textbook Annex is about 18 per cent. The overall University Store profit margin averages 30 per cent according to the accounting figures.

According to Winthrop L. Cummings, manager of the University Store, the Textbook Annex discounts about five per cent of the suggested retail price for hard cover books. Paperbound books are sold at full retail price.

Cummings said only about three or four other textbook stores in the country offer such a discount and some stores, including one at Brown University, increase their prices by about five per cent from the suggested retail price.

"I realize there is a co-op movement afoot at UMass, but I think such a move would be fatal," Cummings said.

"We have a very efficient system here. It takes a hell of a lot of expertise just to break even in the textbook business."

The second part of this series in tomorrow's Collegian will discuss how the Textbook Annex operates so efficiently that it not only breaks even, but make a profit of over $315,000.

Seabrook trials start

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

Trials for demonstrators arrested at the Seabrook nuclear power plant in connection with an anti-nuclear rally last May yesterday at Rockingham County Superior Court in New Hampshire.

The two cases scheduled to be heard yesterday were recessed and scheduled to resume today. Mark Wentworth of Hampton, N.H., and Robert Cole of East Kingston, N.H. are appealing convictions of criminal trespassing—Wentworth for his part in the May 1977 occupation, and Cole for the August 1976 demonstration.

Fifty-nine people have appeared for the trials of 62 who appealed their cases. Many of these were members of the anti-nuclear group, the Clamshell Alliance. According to Myra Levy, Aliance member, a deal was made between the state of New Hampshire and the Alliance which stated that the state must agree to hear their cases.

However, Rockingham County Superior Court officials said only three trials will begin today and five more are scheduled for Wednesday. Levy said there is no way of knowing if the remaining 54 cases will ever be heard.

According to Levy, some of the defendants are defending themselves, while others are using either public defenders or other forms of legal counsel. She said two New England lawyers at the hearings, Eric Blumenson and Manny Krassner, have been working with Alliance members on earlier district court trials and negotiations since the May occupation.

Levy said the defense for the trials will be built around a "Competing Harms" statute of the state of New Hampshire. The statute states that it is permissable to break one law to prevent a harm from occuring that is more of a threat to life and property than the law broken.

The demonstrators are arguing that occupation of the Seabrook plant was necessary to prevent a greater threat, the construction of the 2.3 billion dollar plant.

In the United States, 67 licenses for the construction of nuclear power plants were applied and granted.

"This proves that civil disobedience is necessary if the public has any say in whether nuke plants get built," Levy said.

Group studies police

By KAREN PARMENTER

NORTHAMPTON — "I was more shocked than any other person in the city of Northampton. If the sergeants do not know, then how do I know? They never communicated with me," said Northampton Police Chief James Whalen summing up his reaction to the recent series of criminal charges made against several Northampton police officers.

Chief Whalen was one of four police officers to appear before the mayor's ad hoc committee studying the police department, which held its first public meeting last night.

Communication within the department and organizational responsibility were the two central issues at the meeting. Along with Chief Whalen, the committee interviewed Sergeants Lebiecki, LaFrance and Veredy about their duties and possible improvements within the department.

The three sergeants told the committee they did not feel they had the authority to discipline a patrolman beyond a reprimand and-or a recommendation to the chief. Chief Whalen expressed surprise, saying "they do have the authority, I think they won't take it."

He noted the authority to reprimand or otherwise discipline is written into the sergeant's job description. The chief has sole authority to suspend an officer for up to five days.

In discussing training procedures with Sgt. LaFrance, the committee discovered that detectives in the department required no special training. According to both LaFrance and Chief Whalen, the only requirement for an office may be put on the detective division merely by volunteering. But the final decision is up to the chief, Whalen said. "A man works for it (a spot on the detective's division) he is not afraid to work late. It is just a natural affinity to this type of work," Whalen said.

The department does not currently have a sergeant detective. Chief Whalen told the committee he would like to appoint one, but requiring the removal of a man from night duty. The division is now overseen by Chief Whalen during the day and by Sgt. LaFrance in the early evening. Sgt. LaFrance stated he could redirect the priorities of the detective division, if necessary, when he came on duty, but Chief Whalen later said his orders could not be contradicted.

Asked by Committee member Francis Collins Jr. what steps he had taken to bolster the morale of the department, Chief Whalen said, "I don't know. There is a morality problem. I tell the men to hang loose and don't let these people from outside destroy us."

Women's health series

Alcohol-related problems increasing for women

This is the seventh in a weekly series of articles on women's health care by Julie Melrose.

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

Note: Facts and statistics in this article, unless otherwise attributed, are taken from a fact sheet on women and alcohol distributed by the National Clearinghouse for Alcohol Information (NCAI, '75).

Alcohol use among women is on the rise. The proportion of adult women who drink has been increasing steadily since World War II. An article by B.D. Cohen (Washington Post, 2-2-75) cites the results of a Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) study; 38 per cent of seventh grade girls in California in 1969 said they did drink; the figure rose to 67 per cent in 1973.

Not surprisingly, there is a corresponding reported increase in the number of women exhibiting alcohol problems. Ten years ago, one out of six persons with a recognized alcohol problem was female. A 1974 Alcoholics Anonymous survey found that one out of every three new members in the past three years was a woman.

Joanne Gravell, a Staff Health Educator at the Alcohol Education Project here at UMass, said according to a 1976 consumer survey done by the Project, women at UMass drink only slightly less than do UMass men.

'Heavy drinking may result from...

a confusion about self-identity...'

—Dr. Morris Chafetz

What are some of the reasons why women drink? Many recent studies (Balfor '71, Wilsnak '73, Burton '73, Fraser '73, Curlee '70) indicate female drinking is often precipitated by a specific life crisis such as the death of a loved one, separation or divorce, grown children leaving home, and obstetric or gynecological problems.

A 1973 study by Sharon Wilsnak (Psychology Today, 6-73) reports that many women drink to feel more warm, loving, considerate, expressive, open, affectionate, sexy and feminine ... characteristics expected of women in this society.

Wilsnak draws a profile of an alcoholic woman: she consciously values traditional female roles but experiences chronic doubts about her own adequacy as a woman. The potentially alcoholic female may cope with these feelings quite well until a specific incident (i.e. divorce, miscarriage) directly threatens her sense of feminine adequacy. Then she may turn to alcohol to gain artificial feelings of womanliness.

A 1966 research project and two surveys cited by the NCAI show that alcoholic females have more incidence of alcoholism and psychiatric disorders in their family background than do alcoholic males. The same sources suggest that many female alcoholics had dominant mothers and alcoholic fathers.

Dr. Morris Chafetz, director of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, feels there may be a tie between the current process of breaking away from traditional sex roles and the increase in female problem drinking.

"Heavy drinking may result from a dissatisfaction or confusion about self-identity brought on by a new consciousness and pressure for change," said Chafetz in a 1974 press conference.

It has been suggested that some women, in trying to achieve equal status with men, have adopted traditionally male drinking behavior (men are twice as likely to be moderate drinkers and three times as likely to be heavy drinkers than women).

Contemporary women, who experience the extra pressure of living at a time when "femininity" is becoming less clearly defined, are "victims of history." Since it appears predictable that many women may turn to

UMass ZooMass because of its mass

By MICHELE JOSEPH

UMass is often referred to as "ZooMass," reflecting its reputation as a big "party school," probably earned by virtue of the number of students. Twenty-five thousand students, and their visitors are bound to have a lot of parties.

UMass is most known for parties among high school students. High school students visiting friends are more likely to be taken to parties and bars than classes. Weekends are the best time for parties and that's when friends from high school usually visit. The impression a high school student has of UMass may depend on what area he or she visits. There are obvious differences between Southwest and Sylvan which may be due to the way they are set up. The vast amount of students crammed into Southwest do give it "zoo" like qualities.

UMass is a state school, with a wide variety of students who have diverse ideas about what makes a good party. Many students like to "get high" or drink at a party. Some people like mellow parties. Other people need to get rowdy to unwind.

Loud parties contribute to UMass' reputation as a party school. People here need be responsible only to themselves. They don't have to see their parents at the end of the night. As a matter of fact, they don't even have to end their night. There are always places to party, and the beer is relatively inexpensive. According to Paul Barbados who buys alcohol for the Blue Wall, between the Blue Wall, the Hatch, and the T.O.C. 130 kegs of beer are sold each week. The amount sold per student is low considering that those places are patronized by the five colleges in the Amherst area. Thirty to 40 per cent of the alcohol consumed is hard liquor; the rest is beer. Wednesday through Saturday are the biggest party days. Wednesday night is a big party night at the Pub with Friday afternoons from 3 to 6 p.m. Happy Hour. Pub mugs may be purchased for $1.50, and beers are only 25 cents during Happy Hour, with a Pub mug. Beer is usually free or 25 cents apiece at dorm parties.

Whether a student at UMass sees the University as a party school or not depends on what he does with his time. There are so many options available. A student can reside here as a partier, a student, a worker, or just a person trying to pull his life together.

Whatever the case, there are always quiet places to study and read as well as places to party.

Committee votes return of check cashing

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors Space Allocation Committee unanimously approved a proposal yesterday to return check cashing to the Campus Center. The plan now goes to the full board for approval on Thursday.

The proposal, sponsored by the Student Organizing Project and written by Stephen Sandler, calls for the use of the Campus Center cash handling facility (room 155) located at the bottom of the escalator on the first floor, for a student run check cashing service.

Check cashing facilities were removed from the Campus Center last spring because of security problems at the facility, according to Bursar Robert Mishol.

Since the closing of the Student Union facility, the Bursar's Office has proved to be an inconvenience due to its location and long lines.

Mlshol said he would like to see check cashing return to the Campus Center because "we (the bursar's office) don't have the space, we're not doing it justice."

The proposal calls for the establishment of four campus agencies to sponsor the facility. These are the Undergraduate Student Senate, the UMass Student Federal Credit Union, the Campus Center Complex, and the Bursar's Office.

The student senate would cover all deficits if any, although the plan predicts that revenues should cover all operating costs. The senate would have to cover all bad checks and would have to supply employees for operating the facility. These would be mostly work-study students, although a supervisor and collections office will also be on the payroll.

The Credit Union has agreed to provide accountants and will serve in an advisory capacity, overlooking the finances.

The plan provides for the Bursar's Office to transfer the lump sum payment at the beginning of operations to be used for the cashing of checks. Bill Staub, a Student Organizing Project spokesman, estimated the amount at no more than $100,000.

The Campus Center is being asked to provide space, furniture, equipment, and room modifications as necessary.

BOG Space Allocation Committee chairperson Bruce Belcher said he expects the plan to pass at the board meeting on Thursday.

From there, Staub said, contracts must be drawn up between all parties concerned and the plan must be approved by the senate.

holdings in stocks of companies operating in South Africa.

UMass divested $680,000 worth of stock in 19 companies, while Hampshire College sold $19,000 of investments.

Amherst College kept $20 million of South African stock. Amherst College President John W. Ward at the time said, "We would consider divestment, if the corporation is unresponsive to our objections."

The Firestone stock, sold in mid-October, amounted to less than 1 per cent of Smith's $82 million endowment.

Senate looks for contacts to groups

The status of over 160 Recognized Student Organizations is being investigated because they do not appear to be active.

These groups have been the target of a two-month effort on the part of the Undergraduate Student Senate to locate and find a contact for these groups. All RSO groups were asked to leave the name, address and telephone number of a contact number at the senate office. Despite an intensive effort to reach every group, over 160 RSO groups have still not responded.

Consequently, the registration of these groups has been suspended. Any group suspended for this reason can have its registration reinstated by stopping by the senate office and leaving information about a contact number.

The following RSO groups should report to the senate as soon as possible:

The Last Resort
Atomic Energy at Seabrook
On August 1, 1976, eighteen men and women were arrested for occupying the site of a planned nuclear power plant in Seabrook, New Hampshire.
Nine months later, more than 2000 people took possession of the same atomic site in a non-violent attempt to halt construction.
THE LAST RESORT is a documentary film about the battle of Seabrook, the international nuclear controversy, and the question of civil disobedience.

Dams pose major threat to all people downstream

TOCCOA, Ga. (UPI) — The earthen dam that burst in the northeast Georgia mountains two days ago, deluging a sleeping Bible college campus, was never inspected by federal or Georgia officials, a congressman charged yesterday.

The official death toll for the disaster stood at 37, but officials said two men were still missing and presumed drowned. All other faculty, students and children associated with Toccoa Falls College were accounted for, a college spokesman said.

In Washington, Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif., chairman of a House panel investigating dam safety, said the dam above the college had "never been inspected by any agency of the state of Georgia nor by the Army Corps of Engineers."

He said the dam — and thousands like it across the country that have not been inspected — were "like loaded shotguns pointed at the people downstream, and all it takes today to trigger that shotgun is a heavy rainfall of the kind we had over the weekend in Georgia."

At a late afternoon briefing in Toccoa, college officials dodged questions about the structural soundness of the dam, referring reporters to the Corp of Engineers. A Corps spokesman earlier had said the agency had no authority to make such inspections.

College President Kenn Opperman said earlier yesterday he did not know if the dam had ever been inspected.

The search for the two men still missing — identified as Dr. Jerry Sproull, 45, and Paul Williams, 76 — stopped as night began to fall. The search is to resume Tuesday.

President Carter, cutting through federal red tape, issued a disaster declaration at 1 p.m. EST, less than 36 hours after the dam burst, to speed federal relief aid to the area.

Supreme Court to decide if power plants are liable

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court, in a case the government says could determine the future of nuclear energy development in the United States, agreed yesterday to decide whether power plant operators ever may be sued for more than $560 million for a nuclear accident.

The justices said they will review a decision by a federal judge in North Carolina that the liability ceiling approved by Congress is unconstitutional.

Congress passed the Price-Anderson Act in 1957 to help encourage private development of nuclear energy. Several amendments to the original legislation have upped the maximum amount of liability facing nuclear plant owners for a major nuclear accident or catastrophe.

U.S. District Judge James B. McMillan ruled last March that such a limit denies persons who might be injured in such a "nuclear incident" their right to due process and equal protection of the law.

Justice Department attorneys, appealing McMillan's ruling for the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission, said it "could stand as a major impediment to further private development of nuclear energy in this nation."

Because available insurance is inadequate, the government said, power companies would not build plants if confronted with unlimited liability.

The trial judge's decision also was appealed by the Duke Power Co.

The controversy stems from a lawsuit filed by the Carolina Environmental Study Group against Duke Power involving two power plants under construction in the Charlotte, N.C., area.

The environmental group challenged the federal law limiting Duke Power's liability in accidents at the plants, and Judge McMillan ruled that area residents "are threatened with certain injury of relatively minor nature, and with the reasonable likelihood of major or perhaps catastrophic injury, without assurance of adequate compensation."

IRS worker wounds ten in hour-long shooting spree

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — A tall man, hardly noticed by lunchtime crowds on central business district sidewalks, walked calmly into an office building Monday and shot three people, then quietly turned towards the street and shot two more.

"He was calm and never said a word," said an employee of the Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith stock brokerage, where the incident occurred. "I didn't pay any attention to him because he looked very normal."

Carlos Poree, 35, unemployed since being fired from the Internal Revenue Service a year ago, was arrested after surrendering to police. Officers said 10 people, including the suspect's estranged wife and father-in-law, were wounded in a citywide shooting spree.

Joyce Saylan, on her way to lunch with her 9-year-old son Jeff, said the man shoved the two aside as he entered the brokerage firm, pushed a door into a secretary's face and began firing.

After calmly leaving the office, the gunman strolled onto the sidewalk and shot two pedestrians.

Maggie Christensen, an insurance office worker, said she heard shots and saw a victim fall to the sidewalk as she walked to lunch.

"I heard the shots, then saw everyone diving for the street," Ms. Christensen said. "I tried to get away into Sears, but everyone in the store was trying to get out so I yelled at them to get back."

Vincent White said the pedestrians shot on the street apparently tried to stop the gunman.

Women effected by cancer-causing jobs during W.W.II

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — Rosie the Riveter may have gotten cancer in the line of duty, said women's health activist, Marlene Mainker.

Mainker said during World War II — when the men went off to fight — nearly three-and-a-half million women who stayed behind replaced them at their industrial jobs. Mainker said increased incidence of cancer in women who are now over 50 may be due to exposure to cancer-causing chemicals back in the war years.

Studies on job-related cancer, said Mainker, have focused mainly on men. In addition, it's difficult to track down women war workers, because most of them have since changed their names through marriage or divorce.

Women who were exposed to toxic chemicals during WWII should write to Marlene Mainker, Womenpower Projects, Inc. 18 Oak Ridge, Springfield, NJ 07081.

Soviet Union test satellites

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter is concerned that a "major arms race" may develop around killer satellites which the Soviet Union apparently already have tested, press secretary, Jody Powell said yesterday.

"We are concerned about the prospect of the major superpowers being involved in an accelerated major arms race in this area," Powell told reporters.

Powell volunteered his comments, saying, "we have expressed our concern to the Soviets."

"We do feel... it would be unfortunate if the United States and the Soviet Union became involved in competition in this area," Powell said.

The Pentagon has announced the Soviets have conducted several experiments that appear to involve simulated attacks by one space satellite against another.

On the U.S. side, "We do have an R-D research and development program in that area which we consider to be quite adequate for the time being," Powell said.

Powell said the administration has broached the subject of limiting the program with the Soviets. "We would like to reach an agreement that avoids what we consider would be a destabizing area of competition.

Breast surgery often performed unnecessarily

Her Say News Service — Federal health officials have overruled the recommendation of their own doctor-dominated advisory group and have decided to notify 53 women who were victims of unnecessary breast surgery after a federal program incorrectly diagnosed them as having cancer.

The decision comes in the wake of controversy over a $54 million government health program, in which 200,000 women received annual breast X-rays, and 2500 alleged breast cancers were found and removed.

A study group led by Doctor Oliver Beahrs of the Mayo Clinic found, when it reviewed the X-ray program, that breast removal operations had been performed on 53 women who didn't have breast cancer at all. Beahrs and his associates recommended to the government that the physicians who diagnosed the breast cancer incorrectly need only "consider" letting the women know their operations were needless.

Now the National Cancer Institute has announced it will notify all the women who mistakenly received mastectomies.

Experiments led to suicide

Her Say News Service — The former lawyer for Baader-Meinhof group member Ulrike Meinhof, said Meinhof was subjected to bizarre experiments in sensory deprivation for eight months prior to her alleged suicide in 1976.

West German attorney Klaus Croissant said Meinhof was held in solitary confinement in an all-white, totally noise-free cell, for eight months before her death. During that time, she was watched 24 hours a day by prison authorities.

Meinhof was in prison for alleged terrorist acts, including a bank robbery and the firebombing of a U.S. Air Force base during the Vietnam war. She had not been convicted of the criminal charges by any court at the time the sensory-deprivation techniques were used.

The soundless white cell was reportedly part of an alleged scientific experiment. The results of this experiment were sent to a special research section at Hamburg-Eppendorf University.

Carter places strict controls on all drugs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter, linking the national crime rate with heroin abuse, yesterday advocated strict controls on all drugs, including barbiturates, which he said may cause as many deaths as illegal narcotics.

"We have had a remarkable success already in the first 10 months" in trying to bring the nation's drug problem under control, Carter told a meeting of his newly sworn in Strategy Council, formed to halt drug abuse.

He said his administration was trying to seek "control of the so-called legal drugs, the barbiturates, which probably cause as many deaths as... the other drugs."

"The purity of the heroin is at the lowest point it has been in seven years," Carter said in reference to street sales.

"In the first six months of this year we've had a seven point reduction in the national crime index, which I think is quite often directly related to heroin use," he said.

The FBI recently released an interim report which showed serious crime committed in the United States during the first six months of this year was 7 per cent lower than in the first half of 1976.

★Alcoholism and related problems rising among women

alcohol to help them cope with changing sex roles, we need to channel energy into finding healthier alternatives for easing that pressure.

Because many women are isolated in their homes during the day, they may be well on the way to alcoholism before anyone recognizes their problem. When a woman's drinking problem is discovered, friends, relatives, doctors and police officers tend to take a more protective stance than they would for a male problem drinker. Husbands may cover up for their wives socially; police officers may escort female drunken drivers home instead of arresting them.

People may think they are doing a woman a favor by protecting her from the double moral stigma of female alcoholism (that of alcohol abuse in general and that of drinking as "unladylike" behavior). In reality, they are delaying recognition and treatment of her illness.

Myths abound which suggest alcohol contributes to female sexual "promiscuity". An article in Psychiatric Medicine (Schuckit, M., 3-72) said 95 per cent of female problem drinkers complain of a diminished interest in sex. It is possible that when a woman relaxes after consuming a moderate amount of alcohol, she allows herself to experience sexual feelings that she ordinarily inhibits due to her socialization.

Over 40 per cent of alcoholic women suffer broken marriages. Alcoholic women have a higher divorce rate than alcoholic men. Fraser (Addictions, 3-73) reports that for every ten wives who stay with alcoholic husbands, only one husband in ten remains with an alcoholic wife.

An alcoholic mother is likely to physically and emotionally abuse her children. They will often show signs of emotional disturbance and will run a higher risk that other children of becoming alcoholic themselves.

Researchers (Jones, Smith, Abramson) are currently investigating the recently recognized Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS). Babies of alcoholic mothers are likely to be shorter than other babies, have a lower birth weight, underdeveloped jaws, small heads, heart and limb abnormalities, and low I.Q.s. They may also show symptoms of brain damage and liver disease.

Babies can be born as true alcoholics, who go through withdrawal after birth. Some researchers feel FAS is the result of alcoholism and malnutrition in the mother, but all agree alcohol appears to be a major factor. There is also a possibility that victims of FAS are "programmed" to become alcoholics when they begin to drink socially.

As widespread problem drinking among women becomes more visible, the lack of adequate treatment facilities for women also becomes more evident. Treatment facilities for women have often been a few beds in a facility for men, with no privacy or child care available. This is changing, slowly but steadily. New treatment models are being developed that are geared to the special needs of women.

Only when female problem drinking is recognized and understood will it be dealt with in a realistic and constructive manner.

Objectivity — a fallacy

greg tarpinian

Objective newsreporting is a myth. Newsreporters are not cameras, as some would like us to believe, but are human beings.

As members of society we are shaped by a multiplicity of forces. We are all the products of unique family lives, educational experiences, economic backgrounds, and so on. We are not objective. Because of our individual histories we all have unique biases. We cannot forget this fact when confronted with arguments which oppose political, cultural, and ideological slants in reporting.

The Daily Collegian is the students' newspaper. By virtue of its status as a student-run newspaper it is inevitably bound to the conceptions of student; students with unique historical backgrounds and aspirations.

The sentiment promulgated by many Collegian "staffers" towards the goals and content of newsreporting is based on the maxim of "objectivity in the news." I contend that the thinking which abides so unceasingly to such nonsense could only find shape in modern society.

In a society which has as its lynchpin the ominpotence of private property, 'freedom of the press' is a false notion. "Freedom of the press" is a phrase coined by our forefathers and mothers at the turn of the nineteenth century. Recall: our forefathers and mothers owned the presses. 'Objective newsreporting' is doubly invalid when it is utilized as a precondition of freedom.

We are not objective . Because of our individual histories we all have unique biases. We cannot forget this fact...

What is objectivity?

In this society objectivity is that which adheres to this society's basic ideological foundations. The Boston Globe is objective, for it puts forth perspectives on news which do not diverge all that much from the basic ideological formulations most prevalent in this society. The Valley Advocate — a leftist publication — is 'subjective' or 'off-the-wall', for its 'line' comes into drastic conflict with the basic thinking of American society.

Freedom of the press exists for those who control, own, and reap profits from the presses. They define objectivity. They define what is legitimate. The owners of the presses have their own biases, which become clear through the editorial policy of their newspaper. So, then, objectivity is a concept used to recreate the existence of certain media practices.

Why, then, must the Collegian, a student-run, non-profit newspaper abide by such an erroneous conception? Why isn't it an advocate for the students instead of a breeding ground for the sycophants who will go on to write so uncritically of a state of affairs demanding change?

As far as I can see, the Collegian should be the student's advocate within and outside the university community. Clearly, the position of students within the university and society speaks to this need. Who gives a shit if Randolph Bromery enjoys so-called "line administration" versus some other kind (I don't know what it is), when 400 students are being transported around campus because of the blindness of junior administrators over in Whitmore? We can get news of Carter's energy plan in the Globe, Times, Gazette, etc., etc. We can't get news of graft and embezzlement in the Campus Center in those papers (see Outfront, last issue).

'Objective newsreporting' is doubly invalid when it is utilized as a precondition of freedom. What is objectivity?

Aside from being an advocate, the Collegian should be an open forum for ideas. The Collegian is not the property of its newsreporters, editors, columnists, business managers, or anyone in particular. It has an obligation to the student body. It is the property of the students. Any RSO group should be able to place 'inserts' or articles in the Collegian Collegian staffers do not represent the University community. In fact, they are in general a peculiar lot, who get their jollies by playing 'Jimmy Olson and Lois Lane: ace newsreporters.' Don't get me wrong. Most of the people who work for the Collegian are sincere and honest people, who are merely trying to perfect a skill, or enjoy writing for the public.

There is talk of barring the so-called 'political' inserts from space in the Collegian. There should not be a blanket policy barring political, religious, cultural or any other type of insert or article from publication in the Collegian. Why? Because nothing is solely political, cultural, or religious. Our society is a complex one in which each of its different aspects penetrates the other, affects the others, and confuses the others. Examples: Nummo News is not solely cultural. It has a particular political and ideological bias also. Below the Salt is not solely of the arts. It too conveys a particular political and ideological bias. Outfront is not solely political. It is a cultural phenomenon too; it also presents a "student" perspective of the University community. Each insert should be judged individually!

If a non-profit, student newspaper was to lay down policies which would exclude a large number of students from presenting their views it would be detestable.

The Collegian is the student body's newspaper, not Millers', Datsuns', the reporters', the board of editors', the business managers'. It is a service for the student body, not a club or business for a few of the student body's members. All policy should have this at its base.

Greg Tarpinain is a Student Senator. His column appears every other Tuesday in the Collegian.

Party pooper's lament

b.j. roche

"So he thinks it would be fun to own a newspaper. Fun to own a newspaper!?"

from Citizen Kane, a film about a man who built an empire around a newspaper.

"Sometimes it just ain't no fun, right guys? Jeez, between them loudmouthed wimmen and themuppity black folk, and those hippy type crybabies who all want their own way, it's enough to drive ya ta drink ... "

from Citizen Collegian, the story about a newspaper empire built around men

It seems we're spoiling the Collegian's fun again, this time with frivolous girlie talk of censoring sexist ads in general, and ads featuring Siglinda Steinfuller and Kandi Kane in particular.

At first glance the arguments against censorship are noble, but they are also superficial, and reveal something of a double standard within the Collegian.

Freedom of speech, that is freedom from censorship, has been through the wringer in the past few years, used as a dubious defense for such artists as Larry Flynt and kiddie porn producers. This is a lame defense in regard to national advertisers. By censoring advertisements from Schlitz and Miller, the Collegian would not be denying a voice to the advertisers, it would be denying a certain tone of voice. Miller ads found in the Boston Globe are not the same as those found in college newspapers. And not only are the ads demeaning to women, but they insult the intelligence of any male "bright" enough to get into college.

The Board of Editor's sudden concern for freedom of speech is touching, considering the recent denial of distribution access to Outfront, a newspaper whose ideology just happens to differ from the Collegian's. But it is highly unlikely that Outfront could pay the Collegian $200 per page (as does Schlitz.)

The other argument is that sexism is indefinable, and thus, the Collegian Board of Editors are incapable of making a judgement as to whether or not an ad is sexist. Translates, it means women are not a political threat to the newspaper. When black students saw that changes were not forthcoming in policy, they took over the Collegian office to help those changes along. And when the shit hit the fan, the Collegian came up with a working definition of racism in news and ad copy. It's time the Collegian came up with a working definition of sexism for use in judgement of ads. But to my knowledge there has never been a wide scale write-in or sit-in by women in protest of ad policy. Certain editors think this is because women like pictures of other women in tight tee shirts and hot pants.

I don't buy the idea that Schlitz has an inherent right to use the Collegian's pages for ads that insult me. And to ignore sexism just because there's no definition of it in the dictionary is irresponsible. Let's be real. The Collegian wants the money.

A women's vigilante force is in order to conduct sit-ins at the Collegian office as these ads appear. There, armed with smoke bombs filled with feminine hygiene spray and nail polish, we could do enough damage to make a $200 a page ad seem just not worth the price.

B.J. Roche's columns appear every other Tuesday in the Collegian.

Lest we forget

To the Editor:

Even though the wine punch, tea and cookie celebration at Everywoman's Center did not give visitors a sense of how the center came about, I eagerly read the Collegian write-up of the sixth anniversary hoping that some sign would attest to the "establishment" of the center.

Everywoman's Center is a child of the Vietnam War. Everywoman's Center was a negotiated demand after the takeover of the ROTC. Cambodia was bombed in 1971. There were protests. Remember Jackson State and Kent State. Remember the takeover of the School of Education, because just like there was saturation bombing in Indochina to force submission from a people fighting for economic and political independence, so were there saturation tactics of degradation and manipulation at the School of Education. There was a corrupt hegemony by racists hiding behind the guise of open enrollment, democratic procedures and touchy-feely exhibitions that enforced the premise that any Third World student who wanted to receive a degree must submit and thereafter do a "Yes sir, boss" routine.

Women planned the takeover of ROTC. An agent within the group called out after the decision was made on when, how, etc. Then the women eventually invited the Vets to take part. The Vets from that time on, on the whole, stood steadfast to certain principles and continued to fight against the militarization of campus, etc. They also tried to fight the sexism within their ranks. The woman agent who called out during the initial planning for the takeover along with her husband, in the Vets, stayed on the job for months evidently reporting to their superiors and getting paid for it. Negotiations at Whitmore eventually led to the granting of space and basic resources for the women's and vet's centers.

Women were on the front line in solidarity with the Vietnamese, in solidarity with the Third World students at the School of Ed and very conscious of their roles as movers, doers and creators of history. They were in the fore of the creation of Everywoman's Center in 1971.

By calling attention to the origins of this sixth anniversary, I also want to state that those times of strong push for rights, for countering the fascist-racist tendencies always rearing its head at times of recession or depression have come from the unity of sectors within the working class. Necessary is an eye to the external and the objective, to the whole, to the dynamics of all vents as they lean on women's lives, on the poor, on the working poor and the ethnic nationalities of this country who have spilled the maximum of blood for the least return, who have worked the hardest, again for the least return. Women within these societal sectors are in the forefront of struggle to push society into rectifying the economic, political and social ills that make life miserable to differing degrees. At the time that ROTC was taken over, the women who participated and planned it were not thinking of a desk and phone, rather they were acting in unity. They were carrying forth a tradition. For this I joined the sixth-year celebration at Everywoman's Center.

'Grease' review 'horrifying'

To the Editor:

I read in horror the review of GREASE in a recent Collegian, and although I'm not much in the habit of writing to periodicals, I felt I had to.

It bothers me terribly that those individuals who claim to write reviews in the valley put out the kind of literary "garbage" that was printed yesterday. That review didn't tell anything about the show. How was it directed? What was it like technically? How was the music? And most importantly, what was it about? The review told me none of this. About all it told me was UMass students enjoyed imitating it as they left.

Her claim that lines were jumbled together — well, I happen to know the show fairly well, because I worked on it in Los Angeles, and that is intentional. But really, that's not the point of this letter. What I'm trying to say is this. Theatre events deserve good coverage, and solid cohesive journalism. [That's why Theatres have Press Agents. To HELP the reviewer!] If you as a staff are incapable of giving us a readable and sensible review, why don't you just stop reviewing all together?

I'm sure that there are other Theatre Majors who agree.

'New Solidarity' is bad news

To the Editor:

This letter is written to expose a new group on campus. This new group, The New Solidarity, alias National Caucus of Labor, and U.S. Labor Party, hides behind the label of a left-wing group, but any one who has ever dealt with these people can tell you their real intent. They are in reality no better than a fascist, reactionary group out to destroy the gains made by the Progressive Left, minorities, women, the working class, and all affiliated organizations.

They have a history of underhanded, cheap shots directed at groups working for the people. At times they have even resorted to physical violence. They work in concert with the C.I.A., in attempts to destroy the left.

Right now they're here, working against the Clamshell Alliance, and propounding their pro nuclear power message. They have a right to do that. But next time someone comes up to you with a New Solidarity paper, ask they why they have to resort to tactics like disrupting Clamshell meetings? Why do they have to stoop so low as to publish libelous lies about key people in the Alliance, along with slandering other members of other leftist groups, saying things like certain people are gays, or child-molesters, or claim that members of certain organizations run guns across borders, and rape women? Why do they have to resort to physical violence like their Operation Mop-Up, where members of the NCLC crashed meetings or left wing groups and beat up the members with chains and clubs?

Then while that NCLC member stands there trying to explain their warped philosophies, ask them to explain how they can manage to spend $28,000 a week with only $6,500 a week income? Is it through C.I.A. funding, loans from such anti-left organizations like Chase-Manhattan, to the tune of $60,000?

One can easily see the inconsistencies of the NCLC. They are a dangerous organization. Right now their target is the Clamshell Alliance. But what's to stop them from working with those at Whitmore who wish to stop Student Unionization, like they did when they worked with the bosses to disrupt the Wisconsin Coalition, a labor group for social changes near Milwaukee, or the countless other times that the NCLC got together with the corrupt powers in an attempt to stop necessary and just changes?

The NCLC should be kicked off campus, but until that time comes, the NCLC should be regarded with caution. Do not talk with these people, let alone volunteer any information about your group. They will only use it against you. If they come up to you as you pass their table outside of the SU, politely ignore them. They are trouble.

'Manipulated into limbo'

To the Editor:

On Wednesday, November 3, an article written by Lisa Melilli appeared in the Collegian. The article stated that "Mr. Hite also has been reported to have maneuvered certain reporters to cover certain stories which would support his viewpoints and has been known to use those priceless items of manipulation: booze, pot and a friendly handshake, according to Collegian sources.".

While attending a Student Senate meeting to give a report on campus wide issues, I was given a first hand experience of Jon Hite's pot pushing politics. I was sitting against the wall in the back of the Senate meeting when I was asked if I could spare five minutes to talk. This was requested of me by Peter Graham. I agreed to talk with Peter and he suggested we go outside and smoke a joint while talking. When we were outside the room he said "consider this a complimentary joint from Jon Hite." I had never talked to Peter before, but I did know he was working on the state-wide committee to decriminalize marijuana. The entire time we were outside the room we did not discuss anything and I began to wonder why Peter had asked if he could talk to me.

I arrived in the Senate meeting just in time to give my report on check cashing and student towing. Another minute and I would not have been part of the advocacy services report. While giving my report on student towing, I asked the Senate how to go about issuing a supportive agreement so negotiations could continue. The time was growing short and the Senate had not received any of the material they should have had a week ago.

While this was being considered Bill Bluestein, chair of Finance Committee, said the issue would be before the Senate next week. I went on to say that we would not have enough time by then to submit a bid. All of a sudden, David Gold, a member of the Student Towing Task Force, signaled to me that we can wait a week. Baffled, I went to the back of the room to see what happened. David told me that Senator and former Co-President, Jay Martus, informed him that if the issue of towing was brought before the Senate he would say that the information in the report was erroneous and went on to give his reasons why. These reasons worried David, so he stopped me in order to give us time to verify them.

I talked with Jay Martus the next day and asked him to account for his actions. He said that "there is no reason why the towing service should be totally student run." I asked him about the information he gave David, he admitted that what he said was false. That's right! Jay made up the story to prevent the Senate from deciding on the towing issue in time to submit a bid.

Jon Hite was asked how he felt about Lisa Melilli's article and his reply was "that's politics." This is indeed the politics of Jon Hite; he and the other members of his camp, as he likes to call it, manipulated me and the entire Senate into limbo on the Senate towing issue. Many of his comrades that make up his camp are working as student administrators, a job acquired by being influential within the student body and pro-administration.

This camp has revealed itself to be of an anti-union position; without a union the administration can be happily suppressive. Students will not realize any significant gains if this manipulation is allowed to continue within their decision making process. A union begins to progress and gain power once a common unity is found and infiltration of the oppressors has ceased. The common unity should be in identifying ourselves as a class of people oppressed by the business administration and its puppets.

The Hite camp, as well as the administration and the structure of our educational environment, promotes competitive self interest. The student body can no longer be a breeding ground for such anti-social behavior. We need each other to create an educational structure that will promote healthy change in our selves and our environment.

Wednesday, November 9, the Senate will have the towing issue on the agenda. With a lot of effort there is a slight chance of subverting past manipulation and producing a bid for student run towing. Come and support each other, don't be fooled like I was and let your good intentions fall short of your desire through manipulation.

Rape article commended

To the Editor:

The Southwest Men's Center wishes to commend Julie Melrose for her informative article on rape in the Nov. 1st Collegian. We have ambiguous feelings about some of her statements, which need clarification, but overall we think she did a good job of raising an issue which is in desperate need of discussion and action on this campus.

We were also pleased to read the response of Barry Maddix and Neal Quinlan in the Nov. 3rd Collegian. We do not agree with some of their statements, nor with the acerbic tone of the letter, but it did show that men are becoming increasingly sensitive to the issue of rape and are willing to enter into dialogue about it.

The Southwest Men's Center is in the process of forming a study group to educate ourselves about rape and to design a men's workshop on "Sexual Violence". We invite any interested men to contact us at 545-0263.

News in Brief

Soviets celebrate sixtieth anniversary

[AP] – Hundreds of tanks and rockets thundered through Red Square yesterday as the Soviet Union marked the 60th anniversary of the Bolshevick revolution with its biggest military parade in years.

For the first time since 1974, tracked vehicles, including the new T-72 tank, rumbled across the cobbles, with the roar of their engines reverberating off the Kremlin walls.

In a light sprinkle of snow, Politburo leaders stood atop Lenin's mausoleum to watch the tanks, armored personnel carriers, rockets and artillery, including two new self-propelled howitzers never before displayed.

President Leonid I. Brezhnev and other leaders remained throughout the two-hour parade, which included more than 100,000 cheering, chanting Muscovites.

At the Kremlin reception, Brezhnev declared "peace and socialism are inseparable. We will do everything in our power for easing the threat of war, for strenghtening peaceful cooperation among states."

He noted that "Soviet people live better today than ever before both in spiritual and material respects. At the same time, we can clearly see what still needs polishing up and improvement and know how it shall be and will be done."

Carter postpones trip to foreign nations

[AP] – President Carter officially postponed his planned foreign trip to devote himself to energy legislation. Actually, aides said yesterday, Carter also will be busy with planning for 1978 during his stay-at-home time.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance announced the postponement, saying Carter messaged heads of the nine countries on his intended route that he hopes "a mutually convenient date could be found for a later visit in the near future."

Vance said the president's message emphasized a conviction that "his personal involvement was vital to the development of sound energy legislation."

Carter will reiterate his concern about energy policy today in a broadcast address to the nation scheduled for 9 p.m. EST.

Since Carter already has engaged in extensive personal lobbying of Congress members in behalf of his energy package, there is a limit to what else he can do on that matter during the stay-at-home period.

Mormon will trial starts selecting jury

[UPI] – The trial to determine the authenticity of the so-called "Mormon will" attributed to the late Howard Hughes became embroiled in the first day of jury selection yesterday with questioning about the Mormon Church's refusal to allow blacks full membership.

Milton Brown Jr., a black who is retired from the Air Force, was the first prospective juror among 200 to be questioned by attorneys. He survived more than an hour of grilling by lawyers from both sides and was accepted preliminarily as a member of the panel.

Attorney Harold Rhoden, who is seeking to prove the three-page, handwritten will is valid, asked Brown whether he was aware the Mormon Church would not allow him full membership because of his race.

Brown said he knew the church would not allow him to be a full member but that it didn't matter since he had never thought of joining.

Lawyers had expressed great concern that it would be virtually impossible to find a juror who had not formed an opinion on Hughes or his estate and to find jurors who had not been flooded with information on the subject, especially in Las Vegas where Hughes lived for four years.

Order oil distributor to refund customers

[AP] – The federal government yesterday ordered a New England oil distributor to pay back customers more than $4.7 million because it allegedly overcharged them for home heating oil during 1973 and 1974.

A spokesman for the Energy Department said C.H. Sprague & Co., based in Boston, has 10 days to file an appeal with the department's Office of Administrative Review.

Officials at Sprague were not available immediately for comment. In the past they have denied any overcharges.

The order, issued by the department's Economic Regulatory Administration, concludes more than three years of investigations into the pricing policy of the company which has among its major customers utilities in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine.

Under yesterday's order, Sprague and its parent company, A. Johnson & Co., of New York, were told to make refunds of $4.7 million plus interest to customers within 30 days and if the customers cannot be identified pay the refund to the U.S. Treasury.

Leonardo painting underneath fresco

[AP] – An American-financed research team, using sound and heat for the first time to look for art, has concluded that a lost masterpiece by Leonardo da Vinci is probably under another fresco in Florence's Great Council Hall.

Now it's up to Italian authorities to decide whether to look under the vast wall painting by Giorgio Vasari, who remodeled the room four centuries ago, and see if the researchers are right.

"We've passed the ball to them at this point," said Maurizio Seracini, scientific director of the year-long project that used ultrasonic and infrared equipment.

Leonardo's "Battle of Angiari," commemorating a 1440 Florentine victory, was completed in the early 16th century during Florence's brief history as a republic. It disappeared after the dukes took over and ordered Vasari to remodel the hall in 1563.

Some art historials believe Leonardo used an untried fresco technique and the colors faded away. Others believe the fresco was covered up because it glorified the republic.

Careers night tomorrow

The annual fall Careers Night sponsored by the political science department will be held tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Thompson 106.

This year students will be able to listen to individuals who are living politically in a variety of ways.

William Brewer, a career Foreign Service Officer in residence on campus, will share his experience along with Leslie Laurie, founder and director of the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, David Kaplan, a lawyer and activist from Northampton, and Karen Meenan, Project Director at Mass PIRG.

The theme of the evening is the relation between politics and work, shifting attention to the discovery of social needs as well as professions that provide an opportunity for meaningful work. An effort has been made to present "living proof" that the significance of a liberal arts education cannot be understood simply in terms of measurable skills.

After short presentations by each speaker, there will be an opportunity for questions.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8 - Born today, you are an extremely excitable individual whose bark is worse than his bite. You have very high hopes for your destiny, believing in your ability to succeed, and you won't tolerate any actions in another that would lessen your chances to do so. On the other hand, when you make mistakes you are very lenient, finding all manner of excuses for the failure. In short, the demands you make of others you don't usually make of yourself, and this could be fatal to your ability to work with other people.

You are somewhat shortsighted in your choice of friends, especially in the selection of your daily companions. Though you speak of associating only with those who can help you in your career, you are generally to be found with those who have been unable even to help themselves. You would be wise to check again your criteria for companionship. Your answer to the problem of companions lies somewhere between those who can help you and only those who can't.

You intend to be wealthy, but are not especially gifted in financial matters. The area of economics being very much over your head, you will want to associate with a partner who can handle finances. If this shouldn't happen, you may well gain and lose more than one small fortune in your lifetime.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. Still, another must be taught to give credit where it is due.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - A lack of incentive may be restricting your ambition. Look into a new line of work; try to interest yourself.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - Generosity may be misunderstood. Be sure another doesn't think you're interfering. Be tactful with an offer.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - Anything that brings contact with others should run smoothly today. Be prepared for an argument at evening, however.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - Harness humanitarian principles to help others meet their needs. Abuse of those principles is possible.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - Your concern for another's stability is not to be dismissed. There is a need for professional services.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - Pressures of circumstances on the home front may cause confusion at work. Soft pedal disagreement.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - Today's goals can be achieved if you are willing to ask the right questions of one who's "been there."

CANCER(June 21-July 22) - Small beginnings are of such a nature today that they point to definite material gain in the near future.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) - A real estate investment can't be made to satisfy a loved one today. Personal attention to another's feelings is required.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) - You have an opportunity to choose a friend from among many who are new to the scene. Choose wisely.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) - Today's demands all but preclude frivolity. This does not mean you must be depressed, however, only serious.

UMass defensive tackle John Willis (84) (left) received Yankee Conference honorable mention laurels for his outstanding performance in the Minutemen's 28-6 victory over Holy Cross, while his teammate, quarterback Mike Fallon (7) (right) was named co-offensive player of the week. (Staff photos by Dave Rodgers and John Anderson)

Fallon, Willis honored

New Hampshire tailback Bill Burnham and Massachusetts quarterback Mike Fallon have been cited as offensive co-players of the week in the weekly Yankee Conference poll. Connecticut's Herb DeGraffe earned defensive laurels, while Rhode Island's Jon Rodgers was named league rookie of the week.

Burnham, a 6'2 — 210 lb. senior from Dorchester, gained 152 yards in 31 carries as the Wildcats upended Springfield, and scored New Hampshire's first four touchdowns. Burnham also established a single season New England rushing mark during the afternoon with his 1341 yards gained this season.

Fallon, a 6'1 — 199 lb. senior from Roxbury, Mass., scored two first half touchdowns in the Minutemen's 28-6 triumph over Holy Cross and set up two other touchdowns with his passing, completing 8 out of 12 attempts for 132 on the afternoon.

DeGraffe, a 5'7 — 152 lb. senior from Portsmouth, N.H., sparked the 23-21 Huskie win over Boston University with a 94 yard kickoff return for a touchdown, ran six yards for another score, returned 3 punts for 37 yards, and, while playing defense, had six tackles and deflected three passes.

Rodgers, a 5'7 — 152 lb. freshman from Cheshire, Conn., was pressed into a starting role because of injuries and had a 47 yard touchdown run among his 18 carries. He also returned a kickoff 73 yards and threw a 4 yard touchdown pass for another Ram score.

Patriots start for third time with Francis on the shelf

BOSTON [UPI] — The New England Patriots have to start the National Football League season for a third time — and get it right this time — to make the playoffs that seemed a certainty eight weeks ago.

Hoping for a quick recovery by injured All-pro Russ Francis, the Patriots watched a horror movie yesterday of their embarrassing 24-14 loss to the Buffalo Bills on Sunday.

They also learned Francis, a third-year tight end, will be lost for three to six weeks because of three fractured ribs. Francis, crunched by Buffalo defender Steve Freeman in the first period Sunday, stayed overnight in Norwood Hospital before being released.

The loss dropped the Patriots to 5-3 and snapped a four game winning streak. They had gotten off to a false start, losing two of the first three games while linemen John Hannah and Leon Gray were striking over a contract dispute.

The linemen returned and helped the club to the month's worth of victories. Then came the unexpected loss to Buffalo, and vows of winning the rest of their games.

★Kelly Salls

This year, Kelley is having her best season of her career. She attributes it to the team saying, "when the whole team is playing well, you naturally play your best."

Now field hockey is her favorite sport though she also plays lacrosse in the spring.

"Field Hockey is such a good sport because it contains so many aspects. Not only do you have to be an athlete, but you have to be very agile with the stick. It is a demanding sport to play."

In order to be in shape, Kelley had to run during the summer. It has payed off for she feels that it is her and the team's good conditioning which has won them many games this year.

Now that her team is in the playoffs, Kelley can look and say that it's been a good season.

"Any time you can beat Springfield you can call it a good year," she said. "But it isn't over either. I'm ready to go to Colorado (where the Nationals are being held).

Either way, her college career will soon be over. But she would rather not think about that until later, perhaps when she is playing another intramural sport. She wants to play club association hockey near Framingham next year because she likes the sport too much to give it up.

Kelley Salls has played the best, most consistent defensive hockey this school has seen. For those who need statistics, she has managed a shot on goal this year. Though it is hardly worth remembering, it is not what she is noted for. What is important are the seven shutouts the team has recorded this year.

Swimming for $

On Thursday, November 10 the University of Massachusetts Men's and Women's swimming teams will conduct their annual "Crawl-a-thon." It begins at 4:00 p.m. and all spectators are invited to attend at the NOPE pool.

The purpose of this event is to raise money to help finance travel expenses to championship meets, improve the facilities, and further develop the swimming and diving programs at the University. In order to raise this money sponsors are being solicited.

Each swimmer swims either 200 laps or for 2 hours, and sponsors can pledge a certain amount of money for each lap swum. Last year the combined swimming and diving teams raised over $1,000 with contributions from students, faculty and various businesses in town such as The Sport Store, Russell's Liquors, First National Bank, and Fred Houke Jewelers.

The swimming and diving teams really need this added income, so come on down to NOPE pool on Thursday, November 10 and make your pledge.

Polo team divides four

The UMass men's water polo team split four games last week, defeating the University of New Hampshire and Exeter Academy, while losing to Harvard and Brown. UMass will face Williams tonight in the final game before going to Brown University for the New Englands this weekend.

Last Wednesday, UMass played a doubleheader at Exeter Academy against Exeter and the University of New Hampshire. Against Exeter, the UMass squad outplayed a young, inexperienced team and won, 13-8. Duncan Lomas was the high scorer for UMass, netting a personal high of seven goals. Other scorers for UMass included Russ Yarworth with three goals, Bob Corb with two goals, and Joe Hebert with one goal.

In the second game against UNH, UMass found itself trailing 4-1 after the first quarter. UMass came out swimming hard in the second quarter, resulting in five unanswered goals which gave the Minutemen a 6-4 lead at halftime. UMass went on to win 13-7. High scorer for UMass was Tom McGinn with four goals, followed by Yarworth, John Gallagher, and Stew Carlisle with two goals each; and Chris Lomas, Mike Reardon, and Bob Deconnic with single scores.

Last Saturday, UMass traveled to Harvard to face Brown and Harvard in NCAA league competition. In the first game, UMass was soundly defeated by the nationally ranked, number one team in New England, Brown University, by a score of 23-4. Scoring in the losing cause for UMass was Gallagher with two goals, followed by Yarworth and Reardon with single tallies.

UMass couldn't shake off the effects of its loss to Brown, losing their second match 11-7 against Harvard, a team UMass had defeated twice in contests earlier this season. UMass trailed Harvard 9-4 at halftime and made a run at the Crimson in the second half, closing the gap to 9-7 before Harvard scored two unanswered goals to upset the Minutemen. The UMass combo of Mansfield and Yarworth combined to score all the UMass goals in that game.

The J.V. Volleyball team closed the season at 6-3 last week, defeating Smith College in straight games by the scores of 17-15, 15-5.

The first game began very slowly, but with good serving and very consistent play on the part of the UMass squad, and it was tied at 15 apiece before the Minutewomen put it out of reach, 17-15.

In the second game, UMass just dominated play. Two stars emerged from this match, Patricia McGrath and Brenda Simmons. McGrath, who showed very good movement, also served and set well and was instrumental in determining the outcome of the game. Simmons, who was coming off an ankle injury, devastated the Smith team with her spiking prowess. The final game of the match and the season was won by UMass 15-5. A fitting end to a successful season.

It is hard writing a story about an athlete without mentioning figures because for some reason a person is seen as more worthy when there are statistics to back them up. Players without these stats often go unnoticed.

Such has been the case with Kelley Salls, right back for the UMass field hockey team. Now a senior, she has been the quiet, key player for four years on the defense — a defense which this year is the best the team has ever had.

"I know we wouldn't be nearly as good as we are without Kelley," said UMass coach Judith Davidson. "She's an integral part of this team."

Goalie Kathy Gipps, who has played with Kelley for the past eight years, can remember the situation as always being the same.

"She's played exceptional hockey ever since I've known her. I've relied on her for so long and she's always come through."

It is this quality of being reliably consistent that has impressed everyone on the team.

Playing a defensive position, Kelley rarely has the chance to score goals. Her responsibilities are to break up opposing drives and to keep the ball in the offensive zone. When she does her job, she goes unnoticed by most people.

"I guess you could call her the unsung hero of the team," said Davidson. "She is a steady player with excellent talent."

Field hockey has played a large part in Kelley's life. Though her reasons for originally taking up the sport were varied, she gradually began to realize her potential and took hockey seriously. By her junior and senior years at Framingham South High School, she, along with Gipps, had helped her team win the Bay State Championships.

After graduation, she went looking for a college with a good hockey reputation. There were many, but only one (UMass) had the major she wanted, which was East Asian History. She remains one of the few on the team who has a major other than Physical Education.

Her freshman year at the university was a very frustrating one because the introductory courses were not what she wanted.

"I considered leaving school and probably would have, had it not been for field hockey. It was that much fun."

The following year was a very positive one for Kelley. It was her first year on the varsity level in hockey and she started on the defense for a team that was seconds away from making the nationals.

Kelley remembers, "we were playing Maine in the semifinals and the game ended in a tie but they had a few more seconds of penetration time and so they were considered the winners."

That year she started becoming friends with the people who were later to become her roommates and teammates on a very successful intramural team which won titles in soccer, football and softball over the last three years.

Three wrestlers score

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The members of the University of Massachusetts wrestling team flexed their muscles Sunday, as three grapplers won awards in a tournament sponsored by Springfield College.

Larry Otsuka (142), Tim Fallon (158), and Kevin Griffin (167) all won championships in their respective weight classes. What is even more impressive is that each of these wrestlers competed above their normal weight classes. Otsuka generally wrestles at 134 pounds; while co-captains Fallon and Griffin usually compete at 150 and 158 pounds respectively.

Charles Rigogoliso, a freshman from New Jersey, also looked impressive, finishing third at 142 pounds. Also, Steve McLarney (another freshman) finished in fourth place in the 150 pound category; while Anthony Perry, another frosh won his opening match at 126 pounds.

Coach Dave Amato was very pleased with the performance of his team, noting that the majority of his wrestlers won a match.

Sub harriers triumph in New England meet

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

A Friar fan sounded a bagpipe triumphantly when the first two competitors to cross the finish line at the JV New England Championship wore Providence jerseys. However, when the team trophy was presented, the UMass contingent reserved the rights to a victory celebration as it posted the low score of 29. Providence was second with 41.

Coach Arnie Morse's pre-meet forecast of "basically a dual meet against Providence" proved to be accurate as the chute at the end of the five mile course filled early with the top four men from each squad. The determining factor was the performance of the fifth men, as UMass' Matt Anderson finished in 11th place, while his counterpart from Providence could do no better than 21st.

Friar Peter Crooke, who won this race two years ago as a freshman, shattered last year's meet record by 26 seconds as he ran the soggy Franklin Park course in 24:28 Teammate Brian Dillon also eclipsed last season's standard as he was a distant second in 24:50.

The next four positions belonged to the Minutemen, as the 100 or so spectators at the finish line witnessed the impressive wave of maroon uniforms. Veteran Bobby Neil led the assault on the third through sixth positions, as he crossed the finish line in 25:01. Stevie Hilyard, exhibiting his finest form of the season, captured fourth place. Sophomores Mike Morris and Glen Lyle completed the show of strength with times of 25:12, and 25:16 respectively.

"They all did what they had to do," commented Morse. "They helped each other out and competed very well. I told our frontrunners to get position early, and work as a group together."

The race, involving 14 teams and over 200 individuals, was run over the rain soaked Franklin Park golf course.

"I felt strong near the end of the race," said Bobby Neil. "But on several hills I found it difficult to concentrate because I was conscious of the slippery footing."

The impressive performance by the Minutemen marks the third time in four years that they have enjoyed the title of "the best sub-varsity team in New England." Nov. 14 concludes the fall campaign for Morse's troops, as a dozen JV harriers will display their skills against the best squads in the east at the St. Johns Invitational at Van Cortland Park in New York City.

Season ends tonight

Spikers rejected

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The fact that UMass volleyball will end for the year tonight in Westfield, with the locals squaring off in a tri-match against Westfield State and Keene beginning at 6:30 p.m., does not sit well with coach Dianne Thompson's crew.

The reason?

UMass had hoped to be one of the contestants in the state tournament which begins Nov. 11, but they received word from the selection committee last Friday that their application had been rejected.

Coach Thompson filed the team's application when its won-lost numbers (4-10 at he time) were not exactly impressive. However, as she points out, the Minutewomen had played a lot of tough Division I teams at the beginning of the year nd she feels that this should have been aken into account. UMass is currently 9-13.

"Boston College (9-5 for the year) was accepted into the tournament," explained Thompson, "but they played a lot of Division I and Division III teams that we wouldn't even consider playing because they'd be no competition for us."

In addition, UMass entered under a Division I classification and only four teams were accepted in this category while each of the other two divisions will have eight teams participating in the tourney.

Thompson blames this on the selection committee. She said that the committee is too concerned with quantity and not quality.

"I feel personally that if the three members of the committee knew more about the caliber of the out of state competition (that UMass played) and the caliber of Division I teams, we would have been better off," said Thompson.

Hopefully, the spikers won't let this disappointment affect their efforts in tonight's finale.

Keene State should be the tougher of the two teams according to Thompson, even though the Minutewomen beat the Owls Oct. 29 by the scores of 15-1, 10-15, 15-13 on their way to a second place finish in a quad match.

Westfield State, coached by Sheila Gammons, has played many of the same teams that the local spikers have played but are in the midst of a "rebuilding" year and its record (1-10) reflects it. UMass lost to Westfield last year but tomorrow should be quite a different story.

"We should easily beat these people tomorrow," said Thompson.

The team is still suffering from assorted injuries and illnesses, although Thompson is hopeful that Diane Mandragouras (sprained ankle), the major casualty, will be ready for tonight's match.

SPRINGFIELD — Walt Frazier didn't how. Campy Russell didn't show. Paul Westphal didn't show. Ira Terrell didn't how.

Despite the absence of two members of ach team, the Cleveland Cavaliers and the hoenix Suns managed to put on a good how last night at the Springfield Civic enter.

In the sixth annual Basketball Hall of Fame hibition game, the Cavaliers defeated the uns, 106-94, before 5772 fans.

As for the two missing main attractions, it s reported that Westphal had an injured ee, while Frazier caught a virtue and was ck in his hotel room. C'est la vie.

Cleveland placed six scorers in double figures while posting the win. Sub center John Lambert had 18 unspectacular points while deadly Dick Snyder pumped in 17. Snyder came in on the second quarter and logged a seven for 10 night from the field.

Jim Chones had 16 points, Austin Carr pumped in 12 (but on a six for 20,gun-all-game performance), and Jim Brewer and rookie Ed Jordan (remember Rutgers?) had 10 apiece.

Phoenix, meanwhile, received a 26 point performance from the slick Alvan Adams. Rookie Walter Davis chipped in with 19.

But, as Adams sat out the second quarter, a 28-24 first quarter lead disappeared and become a 57-52 halftime disadvantage. Although the Suns crept back to within two points (78-76) after three, the Cavs outscored them 28-18, in the final stanza to post the win.

Fair weather spirits

I guess all along, its been missing.

And the bonfire only served to prove it.

School spirit here at UMass' Amherst campus is as dead an issue as building an ice hockey rink here by the year 2000.

On Friday night, a football rally was held near the campus pond.

But of the 24,000-plus that supposedly attend school here, only a few hundred, if that, bothered to show their support (or express it) for the (or should I say OUR) football team.

There were probably more people in the Bluewall, well, maybe not at that time, at the Pub, than attended the rally.

It's true that rallies in general don't go over too big here at 'U. Apathetic' no matter what the issue.

But a football team that has improved from a dismal year of 5-5 last year, to 6-1 (prior to H.C. victory) deserves some credit from its followers.

Was it because UMass was playing Ronnie Perry's boys who aren't exactly racking up wins left and right?

Or that a UMass-H.C. game isn't the kind of rivalry a UMass-UConn basketball game is?

Or does it have to do with UMass football in general?

It may be true that it's not exactly the most exciting brand of football one can view this side of the Connecticut, but it beats not having football at all (like U.Vermont).

And it's not on the same level as 'big time' football, i.e., Michigan State, Georgia Tech, etc. But then again, that's not the goal of UMass' program; or it shouldn't be since we'd have to pour thousands of dollars more to get to that level.

Maybe it comes down to the students. If you look at UMass' athletics in general, there are only a few teams which receive student support; Leaman's basketball squad and Garber's Gorillas. And the basketball fans status is shaky.

When the hoopsters have a game (game in this context meaning just that, a game-UMass vs. UConn, URI or BC, not UMass-UMaine or UMass-UNH; those are supposed to be more like a scrimmage) then the fans show. If the Minutemen are hosts to one of the less fortunate schools from the sticks, you never have to burst your can to get into the Cage.

And how many loyal fans will venture down to Springfield to cheer on our boys in the red-and-white suits?

Once upon a time, a Boston College squad ventured into the Cage. The crowd was psyched. Standing and chanting, "BC sucks", the 5,000 students practically blew the doors off our little pyramid arena.

Now, the cheer might not have been exactly pleasant to some of the more sophisticated fans (or non-college age adults) ears, but it was spirit nonetheless.

For some reason, be it the sport, the field, or good weather for drinking and watching a game, Garber's Gorillas always get the support of the campus. And the opponent has nothing to do with the attendance; students show up for them anyways — even going as far as to skip afternoon classes (imagine that) for weekday contests.

If the baseball team and lacrossers happen to be playing at home the same day, you can bet money there'll be way more people at the lacrosse field than down at Lorden's diamond.

Now, true, the lacrosse field may be a little more accessible than the baseball team's playpen, and the air is sweeter by Boyden than down past the animal farms, but that's no excuse. If the two were switched around, I get the feeling there would be no attendance change.

The school spirit is there for lacrosse. It's somewhat there for basketball. It comes and goes in football. And the only way students won't forget baseball and hockey exist is if the score of the game makes the Collegian.

The spirit will be there in Durham this weekend; not because it's not lacrosse season, but because it's a big game.

After that, the spirit could extend to BC the following week. IF UMass wins this weekend.

Otherwise, the only spirit on this campus will be the kind students consume in the Bluewall.

They'll be drowning their sorrows. Waiting for lacrosse season to come.

Financial Aid out of money

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The Financial Aid Office has run out of funds.

At the end of October, the office discovered there were no funds available for needy students because of the great demand for aid this semester, according to Associate Dean of Students Daniel Fitzpatrick.

There are 800 to 1,000 more students this semester receiving University financial aid than the total number of recipients last year, from September to June, he said. The UMass Financial Aid Office has given out $1.5 million already, over both semesters last year, said Fitzpatrick.

Last year there was an abundance of funds, and the office had trouble using up the money available, he said. Because of this, an extensive work-study program was developed last May and June. Of the $16 million used in aiding students last year, $7,000 of loan money was returned at the end of the year, Fitzpatrick said.

Fitzpatrick said although there is no more financial aid money available, students can continue to fill out applications in case of a turn in the present situation.

The office is in the hole, he said, and hopes to break even by the end of the year if no additional money is awarded. "We've helped more students than we thought we could, and part of the demand is due to the large freshman class.

"The present freshman class is 30 per cent larger than last year's, and we had to help those students that came to us," said Fitzpatrick. Another reason for the great demand for aid, he said, is because there has been about a $300 increase in the cost of University living, which makes more students eligible for aid.

Anyone that has aid now will continue to receive it, as the office is honoring commitments that have already been made Fitzpatrick said. As of now there will be no aid available for incoming January freshman and transfer students. There is no solution to the problem, according to Coordinator of Student Employment Gerald Scanlon, because aid is given on a first come basis and there is no way of planning how many students will need aid, he said.

Students needing aid will have to depend on the Basic Education Opportunity Grant or the Board of Higher Education Grant, Scanlon said.

Often, student employment is reduced or cancelled because a student received outside scholarships or self-help, Fitzpatric said. This action is based on individual cases and happens every year. It has no correlation with the lack of funds.

Scanlon said letters have been sent out to hundreds of students that have accepted work study positions, but have not taken job assignments. This has nothing to do with the lack of aid, he said, but is a warning to these students to go to the Financial Aid Office and straighten out their situation or work study positions will be cancelled.

Each student that has work-study at the present time or some other form of aid will continue to get this aid, said Scanlon. Due to the insufficient funds, no additional financial aid will be given out or projected until after June 30 of this year.

CC in debt: Trustees may set funding plan

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

UMass Vice Chancellor James L. McBee will decide, possibly next week, whether to recommend to the Board of Trustees a $200,000 maintenance subsidy to which would offset a $417,000 Campus Center oversight. However, this subsidy is much less than what the Undergraduate Student Senate was led to expect.

According to Robert Dion, chairman of the Rents and Fees Committee, last year's state fund fee schedule assumed that a $472,000 oversite would not be held liable to the Campus Center and that an additional $225,000 would be funded every year for the next five years.

McBee last night told the Collegian in a telephone interview fee schedule was not meant as a promise. "It was a five-year projection made up by somebody else," he said, "I had nothing to do with it."

McBee assumed his role as vice chancellor this fall.

McBee said the $472,000 will not be funded and the $225,000 was scheduled for two years only and is now available only at the administration's discretion. "This is the administration's opinion, not mine." he said.

The Rents and Fees Committee had expected the proposed fundings to be furnished. Dion said last night, "The way I look at it they put it down on paper as a justification of the student fee at that time." However, Dion also said it is "common for them (the administration) to go back on their promise," on projected budgets.

McBee said he sees the $472,000 funding expected in Fiscal Year '77 and the $225,000 expected every year for the next five years as one optional funding of $200,000. An additional $25,000 will be funded by the state.

The $472,000 was an oversite made by the Campus Center before McBee's arrival. The Campus Center assessed their financial position in 1976 to determine their Long Range Bond rating. A mistake, which could have been intentional in an attempt to gain better bond ratings, stated that the Campus Center $472,000 more than they did.

It was also assumed in the fund fee schedule that the Campus Center "would not be held liable" to this oversite.

According to Dion, the lack of funding will eventually cause a student fee increase. Dion said, "You figure that we are not getting $200,000 of the promised $472,000 which is essentially needed, and that there are about 23,000 students in the school. That is approximately $10 a student."

Dion cited that the Campus Center Fee was projected at $64 for his fiscal year but students now pay $79. "Somehow the fee went up $15," he said, "So it's obvious they don't adhere to their promises."

There is also a question of where the additional $25,000 is coming from. According to the Fee Based Revenue Account Book, which was approved by the board in May 1977, the funding is to come from Project 14.

Dion said that "Project 14 should have no money in it."Money in the project was taken from the residential halls to buy Fraternity-Sorority Park, and "they should have taken only what they needed."

McBee told the Collegian last night, "I have never heard of Project 14. The $25,000 is state funding."

The decision of whether or not to include the $200,000 should have been made in early October, according to Dion. The Rents and Fees Committee, which is a watch dog for student fees, reviews and makes recommendations on all proposed fee increases. According to Dion, they did not receive a single fee proposal on the requested date.

The budget proposals are supposed to go to the Board of Trustees meeting in December, but Dion has gotten a promise from George Beady, director of the Office of Budgeting, that the committee will get three weeks to review the fees "even if it means holding up the board."

Dion had been worried that "students were going to be pushed out of budget making decisions."

McBee and Dion have had several meetings where they discussed the $200,000 funding. "McBee explained to me that he has not yet made his decision whether or not to recommend the funds to the board," said Dion.

McBee has been invited to attend at least one committee meeting, but did not do so. "Maybe I will, maybe I won't," he said when asked if he will meet with the committee. "It depends."

Dion said he is sure McBee "wants the Campus Center to be a self sufficient operation. "He (McBee) has kids that go here too," Dion said.

UMass leads metric conversion projects

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The matter of metrics may well be the most embarrassing event to hit college campuses since Johnny who can't speak, read or write.

A glaring example is UMass which leads higher education in the country in the conversion to metrics and doesn't even know it.

UMass is the headquarters of the Northeast Metric Resource Center, whose latest project is the changeover of the northeastern United States to the SI (System International) metric system; however, the administration at UMass has no policy regarding metric conversion whatsoever, according to Vice Chancellor James L. McBee, has not got round to discussing it, and was previously unaware of the NMRC's accomplishments.

Metric workshops and in-service training for the faculties of elementary and secondary schools all over New England have been sponsored by the NMRC and the result is that approximately 1,000 school systems in the nine northeastern states are in some phase of metric conversion right now.

Many of these students who are well-schooled in metrics are reaching the university level and discovering, to their frustration, the metric system does not exist on campus where students and faculty wouldn't know how to use it if they had it. "Universities in general are doing very little the way of metric education," says Evan Johnston, director of the NMRC. "This is causing students at different levels who are caught in the middle of conversion with some very serious problems, such as a total breakdown of the metric learning accomplished at the earlier levels and a good deal of confusion."

This dilemma poses the question — "If public higher education is not going to take the responsibility for teaching the metric system, which has been since 1975 the official measuring system in the U.S., then who will?"

UMass is ahead of the 3,100 institutions of higher education in this country to the extent that the chemistry department at UMass was the first in the nation to adopt the SI system in its teaching methods.

Judge ousts no-nuke testimony

EXETER, N.H. [AP] – The judge presiding over the first jury trial of one of the 1,400 anti-nuclear power demonstrators arrested at Seabrook ruled yesterday he would not allow testimony on the possible harm of atomic plants.

Rockingham County Superior Court Judge Wayne J. Mullavey sustained a prosecution objection to the key strategy of those arrested during May's mass occupation of the Seabrook nuclear power plant construction site.

Eric Blumenson, representing Carter Wentworth, 26, of Kensington, told a jury his defense would be based on the state's competing harms law, which he said could justify the violation of a law to prevent a greater harm.

Blumenson said he would show the demonstration was justified because it could prevent harm caused by construction of the power plant.

But Mullavey agreed with prosecutor Peter McFarland that the competing harms law was not relevant in the case.

Mullavey then refused to allow defense witnesses to answer questions relating to the dangers of nuclear plants.

However, he allowed Wentworth to make a personal statement about his objection to nuclear power.

Mullavey presided over one of two trials going on at the county court.

Cathy Wolff, a spokeswoman for the Clamshell Alliance, which sponsored the May demonstration, said the group was disappointed with Mullavey's decision "to ignore a New Hampshire law". She said the demonstrators' actions cannot be judged out of context of the atomic power issue.

The defense rested in the Wentworth trial. Summations in the case will be presented today.

Judge William Cann heard the appeal of Roger Cole, 22, of Hampton, found in contempt for violating a court injunction against trespassing on the Seabrook property. Cole was arrested during an August, 1976 demonstration.

Cole's lawyer said Cole had not been served with an injunction and wasn't a member of the Clamshell Alliance.

Cole's trial is to continue today.

The Seabrook-related cases began Monday. Sixty-two cases are on the docket. Most stem from the mass occupation April 30-May 1.

During that demonstration, 1,414 people were arrested and charged with criminal trespass.

After most were held for almost two weeks in National Guard armories, they agreed to accept guilty pleas in District Court and appeal to the Superior Court, where they could have jury trials.

SWA to give money for Gethers

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

After 15 minutes of heated debate the Southwest Assembly last night voted to give $150 to the Craeman Gethers legal defense fund.

Gethers, once a UMass student, was convicted over two years ago of robbing the McDonald's on Rte. 9 in Hadley during the summer of 1974 and has already served 26 months of an 8-12 year sentence in Norfolk State Prison.

In delivering her presentation, Consuelo Williams, a member of the New Africa House Steering Committee said the trial of Gethers and Earl Brown, both accused of the 1974 robbery, resulted in a hung jury. The two men were later tried individually and convicted on "circumstantial evidence" she said. Gethers is appealing to the State House for a retrial and Brown is back at UMass, on parole until 1980.

Those opposed to the bill argued the money was not directly related to the Southwest community.

"Several weeks ago the Revolutionary Student Brigade, consisting of many Southwest students, proposed a bill to finance a trip to Kent State to protest the construction of the new gymnasium," Bruce Aronson, Patterson house representative said. "They were turned down because the money, like that allocated to Gethers, was not being spent inside the Southwest community. Therefore, I have to vote against this bill," he said.

Diana Fessenden, Southwest Assembly president, voted in favor of the defense fund allocation saying, "Gethers use to be a Southwest resident and since one of the assembly's goals is to combat racism I believe we should show our support by giving money to Gethers' legal defense fund."

Women's self-defense class rewarding

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Women interested in staying in shape and protecting themselves through defensive training are finding the course Women's Self-Defense a rewarding experience.

The main objective of Women's Self-Defense are learning what to do in defensive situations through the advantage of body weight, reflex training, blocking, and counteracting in a one-to-one situation, according to this semester's instructor, Dan Partridge.

Calesthenics and physical fitness exercises are also part of the training program. "Relaxation is the basic technique when one comes in contact with another person in a defensive situation," Partridge said.

One of the guest speakers this semester is a woman from the police department speaking on rape and how to break hammer locks and holds.

About 60 women participate in the two sections of the course, but because of the importance of individual attention in technique and form, the classes next semester will be smaller.

Women's Self-Defense began several semesters ago because of a demand from UMass women, said George Flood, supervisor of General Physical Education.

Usually the instructors of the course, who have been both men and women, have a black belt in one of the Martial Arts, said Flood.

One of this semester's students, Amy Margulies, a senior, said of the course, "I spend a lot of time going places alone and I want an awareness of how to protect myself. It's also a great way to keep in shape instead of sitting around reading books all the time."

Another senior, Linda Stern, said the atmosphere is "much more comfortable and less competitive" because there are all women participants.

Institute brings together campus on environment

By PATTI TROPED
Collegian Staff

In an effort to "bring together" the members of various departments on campus in dealing with environmental problems, UMass established in 1971 the Institute for Man and Environment.

Largely administrative in organization, the institute encourages a multidisciplinary approach to problems dealing with the interraction of people with their social and physical environment.

Dr. Hugh C. Davis, acting director of IME, said, "We serve primarily as a catalyst and clearing house for research and public service programs on the state and local level. We appropriate research projects to the different departments on campus on topics dealing with anything related to the environment."

Davis went on to say that the institute, which is independent of all departments and colleges of the University, does not compete with departments on campus for grants or research students.

"If we get a request for a specific type of research to be done, we contact the persons or departments that are interested and qualified to do it. They will then work with us, not against us," he said.

Davis assumed the position of acting director of IME upon the recent departure of Dr. Ervin H. Zube, who headed the institute from 1972 until September. Zube is now director of Renewable Natural Resources at the University of Arizona, Tucson.

Davis is professor of resource planning in the department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning. He is also academic sponsor for six BDIC students.

The institute is organized as a group of centers under which the majority of programs are conducted. These include, the Center for Community Renewal Studies, the Center for Environmental Policy Studies, the Environment and Behavior Research Center, the National Park Service Cooperative Research Unit, and the Education Program.

"The institute began in 1971 with a total staff of three workers; two administrators and a secretary. It now includes 20 full- and part-time staff members," Davis said. "Graduate research students are chosen by their own departments and are paid by the institute, which receives the grants."

A smaller number of undergraduate students were given Environmental Research Scholarships. According to Davis, "These grants were originally funded by the Alumni Association. They go directly to the student, and pay the costs of travel and materials for the research."

Last year IME was funded primarily by outside research grants. The total budget for fiscal year 1977 was $527,370.

Davis said he has hopes for making some changes in IME in the near future.

"It is still in the planning stages, but we would like to see the name changed. Institute for Man and Environment sounds a little bit sexist," he said.

Textbook Annex called "very efficient"

This is the second in a three part series examining the finances and operation of the Textbook Annex.

By PAMELA LINDMARK
ROBIN COSTELLO
and JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

University Store Manager William L. Cummings says his $1.86 million a year operation is "very efficient."

Here's why:

The UMass Textbook Annex received over 216,000 textbooks in the fall of '76 alone.

It reported net profits of $206,900 of these total sales of $1.86 million in Fiscal Year '77.

The annex supplies not only textbooks for many of the 23,000 students at UMass, but also offers over the counter services to other students in the five-college area.

As Cummings put it, such a highly profitable and extensive business must necessarily be efficiently run.

Textbook Annex Manager Russ Evans, in a recent interview outlined the present system used in managing this operation. The annex first obtains initial book orders from professors. Each order includes approximately two titles. In all, the annex each semester processes over 1,800 orders, 5,000 titles.

The Textbook Annex does not decide on which books are to be chosen, although Evans cited this as a common misconception by students. It is the professor's decision, he said.

For books to be in by the semester's start, professors are asked to have book orders submitted by a specific date. For the spring semester of '78, the deadline was Oct. 28. The purchase orders are then submitted to the publishers, said Evans. Books should be received starting in December.

Evans pointed to the January semester break and the summer months as being the busiest times for those working in the annex. These are the times when textbooks are coming in and being shelved for the upcoming semester.

This is also the time when many student employees are hired as temporary help. Evans said there are over 50 cashiers hired at the beginning of each semester. There are also 12 full-time employees at the annex, and during the summer months approximately 13 students are hired for a 1-3 month period.

Textbooks are ordered and received through use of an International Standard Book Number (ISBN), which is found inside the cover of every book published. Once the textbooks have been received and accounted for, they are shelved alphabetically by subject, then by course number. Shelves are divided into four sections and specific subject areas are separated by a color code. Evans said this has been especially helpful in aiding students find books.

Also to be accounted for are those books which, for one reason or another, remain unsold. Most books, said Evans, can be returned to the publisher. Non-returnable books are the annex's expense unless professors decide to use them in following semesters. The annex can also advertise nationally to other colleges for their use.

Refund policy of the annex states that any student who returns textbooks by a specified date, accompanied by both student ID and the sales receipt, full refund will be granted.

At the end of every semester, a separate Used Book Company which deals only with the purchase and sale of used books is available for students wishing to sell textbooks.

Student discounts are also included in the sale of textbooks. According to Evans, the Textbook Annex buys textbooks at the standard textbook discount of 20 per cent below the list price. UMass students buy the textbooks at a discount of 5 per cent below list price. The 15 per cent difference between the two is the approximate profit made by the annex.

This difference amounts to a sizeable figure: the annex reported net profits of $206,900 in FY '77.

UMass students now are wondering if this high profit margin is a result of unnecessarily high prices charged by the annex.

Author lectures on his CIA novel

By GARDE WELLS
Collegian Staff

Sam Greenlee, author and co-director of The Spook Who Sat By The Door, a film about racial injustice in the CIA and in America, last night gave a film presentation and a speech in the Campus Center auditorium.

The book was rejected 42 times before it was published in this country, according to Greenlee, whose best-selling novel won two top book awards in London while it was "systematically banned" in the United States.

The Spook Who Sat By the Door tells the story of a young black man who becomes a CIA agent, against impossible odds.

Unable to advance because of overt racist opposition, he leaves the CIA to become a social worker in Chicago, where he secretly organizes and trains a terrorist group of society's ghetto victims.

After policemen shoot down an unarmed young black in an alley chase, a riot ensues. People are beaten and arrested, and finally the National Guard is called in to take control of the ghetto.

Enraged by police and troop brutality, the terrorists wage guerilla war on the National Guard. Force is met with force and the Guard refuses to move out of the ghetto even after the mayor's office is blown up and the officer in charge is kidnapped and murdered by the terrorists and the movie ends when the news reports that the president has declared the United States in a state of emergency.

After the movie, Greenlee spoke about his work.

"The book was successfully banned in the United States for three years, for reasons other than its literary merit," said Greenlee. He said the CIA, the FBI, and the little known DIA, the intelligence branch of the Pentagon, held a series of meetings in the interest of keeping the book suppressed.

"The major reason it was difficult," said Greenlee, "is that contrary to popular propaganda, free speech in this country is a myth.

"Hearst Newspapers came out with a story that linked the book to the Symbionese Liberation Army before the movie finally came out, and United Artists urged repeatedly that the film be taken off the market," he said.

Greenlee said the film was finally released on Labor Day Weekend in 1973, "the worst possible time, strategically, to release a movie, although it grossed $78,000 in its first week.

"I think we're seeing an increase in overt racism," Greenlee said, "and it's going to get worse."

He pointed out that CIA and FBI activities in foreign countries "are actively perpetuating the White regime in South Africa."

Harry S. Chapman, Jr. (D) was voted new mayor of Northampton yesterday as voters went to the polls in the pouring rain. The unofficial vote after all the precincts were tallied was Chapman-3,377, George D. Tobin (D)-2,931.

In the race for City Clerk Adeline Murray (D) won with a vote of 5,560 over Stephen J. Bernier-965.

In the closed race for Councilor-At-Large, Francis H. McNulty overturned incombent William C. Ames with a vote of 4,539-3,368. Paul Bixby had 3,786 votes.

The following Councilors won: Ward 1 – Mario Mazza (D); Ward 2 – Marian E. Mendelson (D); Ward 3 – Leonard Budgar; Ward 4 – Harold Craig (R); Ward 5 – John E. Fitzgerald; Ward 6 – Charles W. Baranowski (D); Ward 7 – Carol J. Parsons (D).

For School Committee-At-Large John D. Lawlor, Jr. (D) defeated Christine Grab (D), a Smith College student, by a vote of 4,498-4,268.

Boston

BOSTON [AP] – Boston elected its first black school committeeman in a century and turned out of office its former top vote getter, Louise Day Hicks, in an election day filled with upsets.

John D. O'Bryant finished third in the school committee race and Elvira Pixie Palladino, a staunch opponent of forced school busing, finished out of the running. Kathleen Sullivan finished in first place, followed by David Finnegan, John McDonough and Paul Tierney.

Hicks finished in 10th place for the nine-member city council, some 130 votes behind Patrick McDonough. State Rep. Raymond Flynn and Rosemarie Sansone, who ran Miss Sullivan's successful 1975 school committee race, will be new faces on the council, ousting Hicks and John Kerrigan. Former school committeeman Paul Ellison, now serving a prison term for larceny, finished last in the council race.

O'Bryant, 46, a teacher and guidance counselor in the public school system, will be the first black school committee member since the post Civil War era.

State

SPRINGFIELD

City Council President Theodore DiMauro defeated State Rep. James Grimaldi by a 2-1 margin in Springfield's mayoral race. Dimauro, a 44-year-old lawyer, credited his victory to his emphasis on downtown revitalization.

A ballot question that would change city council and school cottee elections from at-large to district races was voted down.

HOLYOKE

Holyoke Mayor Ernest Proulx won a second two-year term, defeating Alderman Ronald Mihalak by a more than 4-1 margin.

CHICOPEE

Chicopee Mayor Howard W. Redfern Jr. conceded defeat to Alderman John Moylan with two-thirds of the precincts counted in that city. Unofficial tallies showed Moylan with 55 per cent of the vote. Redfern, who served one term, suffered in his reelection effort because of a $65 property tax increase last year.

LAWRENCE

Lawrence LeFebre, a salesman, upset 10-term Lawrence Mayor John J. Buckley by a 2,000 vote margin. Buckley, a former governor's councilor, was hampered by a district attorney's investigation into alleged violation of the state campaign finance law.

FITCHBURG

Firefighter David M. Gilmartin, at 25 the youngest mayoral candidate this year in the state, won election in Fitchburg. Gilmartin led City Councilor Richard J. Ryan by a 2-1 margin in unofficial results. Incumbent Mayor Hedley Bray was defeated in the preliminary election.

ATTLEBORO

Councilman Gerald J. Keane scored an upset victory over Attleboro Mayor Raymond MacComber taking about 52 per cent of the vote. MacComber was trying for his fourth term as mayor, but ran into heavy criticism for the city's rising tax rate and deteriorating roads.

Voters also approved a change in the method of electing school committee members, switching from the current at-large system to district elections.

MELROSE

Melrose Mayor James E. Milano won a second term, defeating former alderman Dudley V. Carr by a more than 2-1 margin.

SOMERVILLE

Thomas August was elected the new mayor over challenger Eugene Brune. Incumbent Mayor S. Lester Ralph decided against seeking re-election to a fifth term.

National

NEW YORK [UPI] – Veteran Democratic Rep. Edward Koch got a quick and convincing victory in New York's mayoral campaign Tuesday night, and voters in Albany sent Erastus Corning back to city hall for his 10th consecutive term.

In Cleveland, voters in the non-partisan election chose maverick Democrat Dennis Kucinich, a 31-year-old municipal court clerk, over regular Democrat Edward Feighan. Kucinich will be the youngest mayor of any major city in the nation.

Hartford's Mayor George Athanson, a Democrat, won his fifth term as expected over Republican Edwin Maher, an advertising executive.

Minneapolis Democratic challenger Albert Hofstede defeated incumbent Charles Stenvig, an independent. It was the third match between the two.

Other returns from across the country showed that voters in Louisville, Ky., elected Democrat Willian Stansbury over Republican Russ Maple, a 39-year-old businessman with no political experience.

Protest against S. Africa

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Editor

A regional demonstration is being planned for Saturday, November 19, for the struggle of South Africa, here at UMass. On October 19, 1977, the South African government launched an all out attack on the non-white peoples of South Africa. Moderate whites were also arrested.

The world had been pressuring South Africa to end apartheid, and the attack was the government's response. The South African government has killed hundreds of people over the past 3½ weeks, banned the two prominent Black newspapers (although one has recently been reinstated), and imprisoned hundreds of people from children to adults.

Almost all Black organizations are banned. The infant mortality rate in South Africa is 53 per cent for black people, due to lack of food, disease and lack of hospital facilities. In one hours' time 60 children below the age of five will die as a result of apartheid, racism, and neglect for Black people.

There have been reports of U.S. companies working thousands of retarded people in South African diamond mines. The U.S. has invested 1.5 billion dollars in South Africa. The U.N. embargo on South Africa is for military trading and it remains to be seen whether Britain, France, Israel, West Germany, Canada, and the U.S. will live up to the U.N. sanction.

The demonstration is for all people. It is designed to be informative, and to encourage other schools across the country to demonstrate against this inhumane country.

The demonstration is to put pressure on the U.S. government to use its influence to get U.S. businesses out of South Africa, and to get other countries out of South Africa.
There will be more details coming up.

Bakke, a step backward

By ROY WILKINS

The case of Allan Bakke vs. the University of California, which will be heard by the Supreme Court, is expected to result in a landmark decision as far as college education for blacks and other non-white minorities is concerned. Bakke alleges that he was denied admission to the University of California Medical School at Davis because of the program of the university under which less qualified black students were admitted.

After extensive argument in the Carter Administration, the U.S. government finally has decided to uphold the plan for minority admissions as it now stands. A brief will be filed in the Bakke case for the United States which will be signed by Attorney General Griffin Bell, upholding the practice of the University of California on minority admissions.

Some black leaders feel that the decision on the Bakke case is as important to the future of the higher education of blacks in America as the decision in the Brown case, which outlawed separate but equal education, was back in 1954.

The debate over blacks in college classes started over half a century ago, strangely enough with the disputes of two black men, the late Dr. W.E.B. DuBois and Booker T. Washington (of course, a black man — John Russworm — had graduated from Bowdoin College as early as 1826).

W.E.B. DuBois had earned a Ph.D. at Harvard in 1895. He believed that blacks should have an opportunity for education in the nation's best universities even as he had. He inspired and encouraged blacks toward college educations and helped in the development of black scholars in his day.

On the other hand, Booker T. Washington was in no hurry about blacks finishing college. They had no business there under his program of training for technical and service jobs, and he followed this course in the development of Tuskegee Institute.

He related that a part of his own admissions examination was dusting a room (he did it three times) before being allowed to remain at Tuskegee Institute and he apparently believed this a suitable part of an entrance examination.

White people were pleased with Dr. Washington's program of education for blacks and gave financial support which enabled him to develop Tuskegee Institute. Happily, today, over 60 years after Dr. Washington's death, Tuskegee has a regular college curriculum with a well trained faculty and high standards.

Should a black student who has obvious potential for development into a first-rate doctor be forced into an industrial job because the only undergraduate training available to a black boy in his locality was lacking in certain areas of study?

Should a black student with high intelligence quotient be barred because the unequal education he received did not acquaint him with areas of knowledge in which a white student in a prep school was exposed?

Will the Supreme Court take away from minority students the small advantage given them by special admissions programs of some colleges?

Are we now attempting to revert to the Booker T. Washington philosophy of education for blacks?

Students representing UMass as well as the Five College area, went south to Atlanta, Georgia for the formation of the National Black Students Association during the past weekend, November 4-6. The conference came out with some positive positions that Black Students around the country should address themselves to. Some of the desired goals and objectives are to address the issue of Affirmative Action around the country, and cutbacks in Black enrollment in colleges. Other things discussed were a call for a demonstration in front of the White House in Washington, D.C., to protest the U.S. not cutting off trade with South Africa. The organizers of the demonstration are the National Black Students Association, along with Dick Gregory. Gregory asked for support from the N.B.S.A., and it was agreed at the Conference to participate in the demonstration. The sentiments expressed were that Blacks and other concerned people had nothing to be thankful for as long as this country oppresses another country. Also the issue of Affirmative Action will be addressed at the demonstration November 24, 1977. More details about the demonstration, and the N.B.S.A. Congress will appear in the next issue of Nummo News. We will win in our struggle to liberate ourselves. I am quite proud of the UMass delegation to the Conference. There will be a meeting of all conference participants on November 10, Thursday at 6:30 in Butterfield.

High Notes...

This week we set out to answer the question; what is there to do around this place? Or more to the point, where can somebody go out and dance? The choices are limited now with the closing of Rachid's, the dropping of disco at the Bluewall (which wasn't really my idea of a discotheque anyway) and the change in format to rock at Poor Richard's.

However there are some choices that do remain if you can or want to do a little traveling. There's Arabian Nights in Chicopee (the home of the world's largest kielbasa), The Vanilla Tree, The Stanchion, and the newly formed Margo's all in Springfield.

Closer to home in Northampton is Zax. Recently opened under new management, Zax is the only remaining real Discotheque in our little corner of the Pioneer Valley. The decor is just as good as that you'll find at the previously mentioned clubs (in the case of Margo's, better) and an advantage that it has over Arabian Nights is that you can dance on the dance floor. And dance they do at Zax to the music of yours truly and Eric Jellison, both accomplished DJs. Both are up on the latest music (in most cases ahead) and put it together smoothly and pleasantly for your dancing pleasure. Eric on Saturday nites plays more mainstream disco with a taste for occasional avante garde and I on Fridays, (ladies' nite) wind up playing everything from Imports to crawling funk. Whatever the case, it will be chosen and blended to the tastes of the given audience.

Zax is open at present on Friday and Saturday nites. The cover for Friday is $1.00 for gents and $0.00 for ladies and Saturday is $1.00 for all. So when you think there's nothing to do or no place to go and enjoy a good discotheque atmosphere, keep Zax in mind. Compared to alternatives, the ride is short but you'll see that the place is long on pleasure.

That's all for now, take care and above all, be good to yourself because someday that may be all you've got.

Conference on racism

A conference on racism has been proposed for the afternoon and evening of November 17, its purpose would be to tie the broad issues of racism and imperialism to our local concerns. It is important to begin this work now since racial oppression — internationall, nationally, and locally — has been increasing daily. Workshops on deportations, South Africa, Puerto Rico, Craeman Gethers, and the history of New Africa House have been proposed. It has also been suggested that the evening plenary session focus on the local implementation of affirmative action.

The format and content of this conference will be decided by those who organize it. We want to meet the needs of a variety of people and organizations. The broadest possible spectrums of organizers and audience will ensure the greatest success. We all strive for unity in diversity. This conference can be a step in that direction.

If your organization would like to plan and participate in this conference, please come to rm. 114 in New Africa House (UMass) at 8:00 on Thursday, or call Steve at 253-3328.

UMass Credit Union, volunteers needed

The opportunities presented by the UMass Undergrad Credit Union, should be considered by Third World students. The organization allows students to learn the techniques of bank telling for a short period. From here people can branch into managerial skills. This would include accounting, loan operations, becoming a member of the board and other advancements for making decision in this organization. Finally, the only requirement is four hours of voluntary services per week.

The experience gained from the Credit Union could be rewarding when we leave UMass. In this respect, if your schedule is not tight, check out the UMass Credit Union.

Tickets for colored girls

The Malcolm X and Third World Women's Centers wish to invite the Five-College community on a trip to Boston to see "For Colored Girls Who Considered Suicide When the Rainbow Is Enuf". The date for the trip is tentatively set for Sunday, December 4. You may sign up for the trip at the Malclm X Center under Berkshire D.C. in Southwest. ## ★ Metric engineering and medicine are also metric. Johnston says he knows of no other university in the country which has gone metric even to a limited extent of departmental declaration. Even renowned scientific institutes like the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Rensselaer Poly-technic Institute have yet to make the switch.

The real problem, which has been ignored by the administration here and at every other institution of higher education, lies in the classrooms of non-science students such as English, music, and physical education, where, according to Johnston, the subject of SI usage, rather than the customary system, has not been approached.

"These students will all need a practical, working knowledge of the SI system within five years just to get by in daily life," he says.

Johnston says he believes there is no coordination of metric progress between different areas of education and between levels. "High schools and elementary schools look at college requirements and set their standards by them. Higher education should be leading in the metric system education effort and not waiting for government issued mandates to begin conversion," he says.

The outdated measurement style at UMass hurts not only the incoming student but the graduate as well, especially in terms of the future job market.

The government's tortoise pace has not prevented business and industry from metric conversion. The European Common Market has refused to do business with U.S. multinational corporations after April 1978 in anything but the SI system, so in the name of profit, business and industry have almost completed the switch.

The day is not far away when a metrically ignorant grad applies for a job and fails to pass a standard exam because he or she does not know the metric system, or is beaten out in a competitive situation because someone else does.

Johnston affirmed that relocating businesses have bypassed New England because they know graduates and would-be employees in the area do not have a thorough knowledge of the metric system. A specific example is Volkswagon Inc., which settled outside New England; metric ignorance being a major factor in their decision.

"By the time this year's freshman class has been graduated," says Johnston, "the United States will be 80 per cent metric."

The NMRC at UMass is the only resource center of its kind in the country, providing consultation and workshops to businesses, clubs and school systems during their metric changeover. The NMRC is responsible for much of the credit UMass has received. The metric coordinator for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Christine Sullivan, exlaimed to Johnston that she can't understand why UMass isn't waving their metric accomplishments in everyones face.

Since the NMRC's last grant ran out in June, neither Johnston nor any of his staff have been paid. Most have resorted to part-time jobs in order to keep the NMRC going. "If we were forced to close down, the whole northeastern conversion plan would crumble," he says.

UMass has given little financial support to the NMRC except office space in the School of Education. The Campus Center administration has agreed to provide the NMRC with office space and an undetermined amount of funding. This move is more in the name of profit than principle however Johnston says, because workshops provided by the NMRC will boost the flow of business to the Campus Center.

Mandatory conversion with strong administrative back-up has been shown to be the most effective method of foreign nations which have undergone successful implementation programs.

"The initial decision by the administration to set up the necessary mechanisms to allow for metrication is the most difficult part of the transition," says Johnston, "after that, metric conversion can be accomplished with an efficient cost-effective plan.

"We've got everything going for conversion at UMass," says Johnston, "everything but the support of the administration. "They just don't seem aware that metrics is not a far off trumpet call but is here now, today. This seems to be true of the entire general public as well."

According to a report by the Northeast Metric Consortium, education holds a wait-and-see attitude: wait for the federal government to mandate something and see what happens.

"Universities have got to get their act together," says Johnston. "They should start their own metric programs, compare notes and work with their elementary and secondary education systems which provide them with most of their students.

"Quite frankly, I'm getting a little frightened because universities are just not moving on this. The governor and the legislature have officially gone on the record in favor of conversion to the SI system and it looks like the date for the switch for the entire commonwealth will be 1980, 1981 at the latest."

Industry, which has looked to institutions of higher education for leadership, is now in the position of usurping such leadership by making its own conversion to metrixs without benefit of professors and college-trained recruits.

If the conversion to metrics seems at all questionable in these United States, it may be because the educational leaders of the country aren't taking it at all seriously.

Nursing program looking up

UMass division of nursing faced serious problems throughout 1975-77 and was placed on provisional approval by the Massachusetts State Board of Registration in Nursing, but after a meeting on Oct. 26 which voted to lift restrictions on admissions and to restore full approval power things are looking better for the division, according to Ruth Smith, director of Division of Nursing, School of Public Health.

The division has previously admitted too many students and faced such problems as insufficient faculty and a limited number of faculty employees, said Smith. Consequently, the division was only granted partial approval power.

The division closed admissions to prospective nursing students during 1975-77. As a result, there are presently no enrolled sophomores or freshmen.

The division is now ready to admit a limited amount of new students, said Smith, now that the division has met all criteria for progress in nursing education. Former as well as future graduates should be prepared to take state exams for registered nurses, said Smith.

Feminists present new detective story

By ELAINE OSBORN
Collegian Staff

Called "a loving satire of the girl detective stories of our youth" by one of the co-authors, an original musical comedy, "Bonnie Keane, Girl Sleuth", will be presented Nov. 11 and 12 at the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The production is sponsored by the Amherst Feminist Repertory Company, and involves members of the community as well as five-college students. Co-authors Sarah Alleman and Eileen Stewart, both of Amherst, have, in the musical, attempted to portray women's strength and character through these "juvenile heroines."

Alleman expressed her gratitude toward Nancy Drew, Kay Tracey, and the Dana Girls, among others, by saying "For many, I suspect most of us, these girl sleuths are remembered with affection.

"They were girls like ourselves who lived the exciting lives we were denied. We loved them, admired them, and hoped someday to emulate them. We were told, however, by the 'real' world, to be ignorant, timid, and passive."

"Bonnie Keane" is a "collage" of the girl sleuths of the detective stories. The setting of the production is Maplewood, USA during World War II, and "The boys are away for the Duration," (a musical number from the show). The women have the responsibility to "hold down the fort," not entirely to their chagrin;

> "Oh, we'll keep the country humming,
> 'Til our heroes are returning,
> And then retire demurely to our stations.
> But meanwhile, frankly speaking,
> We never like housekeeping.
> And the boys are away for the Duration."

Alleman said the adventurousness and ingenuity of the detective girls shows "women's lives can be dramatically interesting without men." She also said the young women in the detective stories are not seen as "victimized or self-sacrificing," but rather as "positive human beings."

The AFRC's goal is to further this latter notion of women. Specifically, the company is "committed to giving women with varying skills, experience, and interests, a forum for learning and artistic expression in a supportive, non-competitive atmosphere."

Stewart said her goal is to "encourage women where they have been discouraged." She said she sees a lot of women who "hang back more than they push forward."

AFRC grew out of an improvisational theatre group which first presented a musical revue, "Girl of Our Dreams", in 1975. The company has since produced two plays and a musical; "Bonnie Keane Girl Sleuth" being their third musical production.

The company "tries to work in terms of a collective," said Kathryn Girard, who plays the part of Bonnie Keane. She said her part is "not a lead, only the title role." Alleman said they don't consider a part "lesser" because it has fewer lines.

Auditions for future productions are open to all women. The AFRC also encourages submission of scripts by unpublished feminist playwrights, especially written for a fairly large number of women.

Stewart said the advantage of their theatre group, where the writers work with the actors, is that the production is "constantly working, evolving." She also said if, during production, the script or musical arrangements are not workable for someone, changes will be made so the actor is more comfortable with her part. Alleman said, "You don't know what's right or wrong 'till you see things happen."

Joan Bannish, a member of the chorus and the character of the Keane's "kindly" housekeeper, said, "The group is very professional, not slipshod; it's a serious thing but not without humor and laughter. "Some people have a lot of experience but you feel comfortable with them because it's such a close-knit group."

Margaret Walters, a veteran Broadway choral director, has given her time and expertise to work with the chorus for the production. Her influence, according to publicity coordinator Barbara Pridham, has helped to secure a mid-November engagement for "Bonnie Keane, Girl Sleuth" at Carnegie Recital Hall in New York.

Opening night will be presented "for women only". This has been the policy for AFRC production in the past, Alleman said. "It's an evening when women can be together enjoying something feminist; a women's space, something by, for, and about women," she said.

"The writer gets a good feeling for the product on women's night," Alleman said, because responses differ between a female audience and a mixed one, said Alleman.

The Nov. 12 performance will be open to everyone. Tickets may be obtained in advance for both Amherst and New York performances at Jones Library Amherst; the Common Womon Club, Northampton; and the Everywoman's Center, UMass.

House listens to three on E.R.A. extension

WASHINTON (UPI) - Instead of extending the deadline for ratifying the Equal Rights Amendment, Congress should "take a fresh start" with a newamendment that would be more popular, former Solicitor General Erwin Griswold said yesterday.

But Ruth Bader, a Columbia University law professor, countered that if Congress redrafted ERA it might just as well also "send the due process, equal protection and fredom of speech clauses back to the drawing boards."

William & Mary College law professor William Van Alstyne said Congress could extend the the reatifucation deadline beyond March 22, 1979, but only for three years and only by a two-thirds vote of each house.

The three testified before the House civil and constitutional rights subcommittee on a proposed joint resolution to extend the original seven-year ERA deadline another seven years in order to get 38 states to ratify it.

Currently, 35 state legislatures have passed it, although three have rescinded their approval.

Because the original time limit was not written into the text - it was contained in the resolution proposing the amendment - constitutional questions have arisen on whether Congress can extend th edeadline and whether it can do so by majority vote instead of the two-thirds reqired to propose the amendment in the forst place.

"TO change the time now is clearly a change in the announced rules governing a substantial matter in our constitutional structure," said Griswold, former ddean of the Harvard Law School. "It is a little like extending the time of a football game after 14 minutes in the final quarter, with the core tied and one team on the other's one-yard line."

He said even if Congress has authority to extend the deadline, "this would seem to me to be poor policy and would be a bad precedent and it would be widely regarded as a breach of faith with the states."

Gunfire explodes, ends truce in Mideast

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli and Palestinian gunners dueled across the Lebanese border yesterday in the worst breach of their Sept. 26 truce. Officials said one Israeli and six Lebanese civilians were killed.

Each side accused the other of starting the shelling, which pounded the Israeli coastal resort of Nahariya and at least a dozen Lebanese towns, villages and refugee camps along the border from the Mediterranean to the mountains in the southwest.

Lt. Gen. Mordecai Gur, the Israeli chief of staff, said his forces had "bombarded sources of the rocket fire" in Lebanon. Lebanese officials said the Israel shelling continued past dark, seven hours after it started.

In an attempt to keep the fighting from escalating, Foreign Minister Fuad Butros conferred separately with the U.S. and Soviet ambassadors, Richard Parker and Alexander Soldatov.

"My government believes the threat of an invasion of south Lebanon is very grave," Soldatov told reporters afterward.

A State Department spokesman in Washington said the United States has urged both sides "to show restraint" and was working to reinstate the cease-fire.

The United States arranged the September truce after Israel sent tanks into Lebanon in an attempt to help Lebanese Christians drive Palestinian guerrillas away from its border. The fighting lasted 11 days and the tanks withdrew.

Sporadic cross border shelling continued, the latest on Sunday when rockets killed two Israelis in Nahariya. Defense Minister Ezer Weizman warned at the time that Israel might retaliate with more than longrange artillery fire.

Yesterday's shelling sent thousands of Lebanese families fleeing north to Sidon, 35 oles north of the border, a spokesman for the governor's office there reported. Some had returned to damaged homes after the September truce.

The spokesman said two persons were killed and wounded 10 in the main square of Tyre, 15 miles from the border on the coast. He reported four other dead and 10 other wounded in two refugee camps south of Tyre and in the southwestern towns of Taibe and Nabatiyeh.

Israeli radio reported 30 Katyusha rockets struck Nahariya, eight miles inside Israel, in three waves. Military sources said a woman was killed and five other persons were wounded in the second strike.

Riot follows Arab protest of housing destruction

NAZARETH, Israel (AP) - An order to bulldoze an illegally built house touched off a riot yesterday that killed an Arab and injured about 30 police and Arabs in a village in northern Israel, police and witnesses said.

The Arabs in Majd el-Crum, 10 miles from the Mediterranean coast on the main road linking Haifa to Safad, took to the streets when interior Ministry workers appeared to tear down the house.

According to the police, hundreds of townspeople attacked the bulldozers, then blocked the highway and stoned passing cars.

Hundreds of police rushed to the town and ordered the demonstrators to disperse. When they refused, the police fired in the air, then at the ground, killing one Arab and wounding about 15. Fifteen police were hurt by rocks.

It was not the first incident of Arabs clashing with police over demolition orders against illegally built homes.

Experts say Arabs of the Galilee, their villages bulging from a population explosion, have built over 10,000 houses without building licenses, many on government-owned land.

The government issued a general pardon for most illegal buildings, but kept up demolitions of about 200 houses. Police often had to be called in to keep order while the bulldozers levelled the buildings.

In Majd el-Crum, about 250 police kept the peace after the rioting died down. Thirty persons were arrested, police spokesmen said. The bulldozers tore down the house while the police guarded.

Golda Meir says Palestinian homeland will endanger Israel

WASHINGTON (UPI) — After a private session with President Carter yesterdayformer Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir said it would be "too dangerous" for her nation to accept establishment of a Palestinian homeland.

Mrs. Meir said she did not know whether a Geneva Mideast peace conference would be convened by the target date of next month. "There are differences in the methods on how to go about it," she said.

Asked whether Israel could ever accept creation of a homeland for Palestinians, she shook her head no.

"I think not, because it isn't essential," she said. "It isn't necessary for anybody.

"The Israelis do not accept it. It isn't necessary. It is too dangerous for Israel. It's a threat to Israel's existence and of no necessity for the Palestine refugees."

Carter has endorsed the concept of a homeland for Palestinian refugees, an issue that has become central to peace efforts.

"I am just a public citizen," Mrs. Meir said but added, "I may have resigned from government, but I haven't resigned from my people.

"The argument between us and the United States government is, how to go to Geneva, not whether to go to Geneva or not, not whether to negotiate peace or not, but what road do you pave in order not to cause a greater crisis when you go to Geneva and nothing happens?"

She agreed America's position differs sharply with Israel's over resolving the situation.

Better than punk rock

By PETER KRACHT

Nov. 19 and 20 — Buses rolling into Columbus Ohio from all over the country. Buses carrying students from 60 campuses nationwide and youth from the neighborhoods of major U.S. cities. Young people filing into the auditorium at Ohio State University, and getting ready...

But not to see a preview of "Star Wars II", or to rock out on Peter Frampton. But getting ready to found an organization: a national young communist organization that can lead youth in fighting for the many changes needed today; an organization that can bring youth together to forge a real future, different than the one we're offered now. A future that will be in our hands.

But this kind of thing isn't supposed to be happening in the 1970's. We are supposed to be a silent generation, different from the students of the Sixties who challenged authority, rose up against the Vietnam War and made breaking the rules a way of life. Instead, we are told to buckle under, dig into the books, scramble like hell for the faintest chance of success, (whatever that is) and in our spare time drown ourselves in punk rock, booze and the rebirth of fraternities.

> "This kind of thing isn't supposed to be happening in the 1970's. We are supposed to be the silent generation..."

But in the backs of our minds there is a growing feeling that it doesn't work. After all, how silent can you be when the U.S. government is neck deep in southern Africa suppressing the fight against apartheid? Detente continues to collapse as new weapons systems get developed. Neutron bombs call for action, not silence. Unemployment continues to mount to the point where whole sections of the unemployed are no longer even counted. Unemployment even confronts college students these days as PhDs end up as taxi drivers. Students weren't silent in the fight for civil rights and against Jim Crow, and can't be silent as the Supreme Court prepares to call any attempt at alleviating discrimination "reverse discrimination." These are the signs of the times.

And as each semester passes we are growing a little less silent. A little more aware and a little more active. A little quicker to stand up and refuse to be whipped about by the arbitrary decisions of the powers that be. This new rebelliousness is small but growing, new but developing.

And we've seen indications of it. Like at Kent State this year where thousands have stood against the building of a gym on the site where four were murdered by the National Guard in 1970. Or in California last spring, where hundreds of students took over buildings, demanding an end to university investments in southern Africa. And the past couple of years, this new rebelliousness has shown itself as thousands of students fought against budget cuts and tuition hikes.

And each time something happens they call it just a "flash in the pan." But to those of us who are growing dissatisfied with today and the prospects of the future, each new rebellion is a spark, potentially igniting the feelings in all of us that something's got to change.

Well, on Nov. 19-20, over one thousand students and youth will have the chance to put those feelings into motion. This is a time to get to the root of the problems and map out plans to deal with them. A place for optimistic youth to rally, people who want to pull together and work for a world worth living in. Youth who want to play the role we've always played — one of bold fighters, challenging the authorities, refusing to accept the status quo as our fate.

And November 19-20 is the time to make this a reality, because we need an organization to do this. An organization that has a clear understanding of the root of the problems people face — the capitalist system, where everything (no matter how dear to us) is sacrificed for the great god of profit. An organization that leads students and youth in every fight for our needs, and that stands with the working people and millions of others against the side of the big corporations and the men who own them. An organization that points the way out — socialism, where the working class runs society in the interests of all. Where the bosses and bankers are no longer free to grow rich and fat while millions live with poverty, unemployment, and war. Where for the first time people will be free to use our knowledge and skills to build a new world without misery and oppression. An organization that teaches youth Marxism-Leninism: a science that helps us understand the world we live in, the causes of the problems we face, so we can start fighting to change things.

This is the kind of organization we need. Everyone won't join it right away. In fact, compared to the tens of thousands involved in revolutionary organizations during the 1960's, it may seem relatively small. But this doesn't represent a step backwards. On the contrary. Because although thousands more were involved fighting the system ten years ago, most had the feeling that if you just could end the war, you could change the whole world. And though the Vietnam war was ended, something else was born out of this struggle: the understanding that what we're up against is something much bigger than one man, or one problem, but a whole system that permeates every aspect of our lives. Many grew cynical — in awe of trying to take on something so big. But many also continued to fight, and brought with them this new understanding of the source of society's problems, and how to change things.

And on Nov. 19-20, this new young communist organization, based on this more advanced perspective (although relatively smaller), will be the one that can lead youth in standing with millions of others in this country and, this time, carrying this struggle through to the end.

Another way to deal with sexist ads

By A. DAVID GRAM

At a meeting last Wednesday night, Collegian staff members voted to discontinue the publication of any advertising deemed by staff members to be sexist.

This, it was argued, would spare the Collegian's readership (i.e. the university community) the indignity of being exposed to advertising which fosters traditional sexual stereotype and places women in a degrading and subservient role.

One small step was being taken, I was told, toward the elimination of sexism in our society. This is a commendable goal, but the method by which it is being pursued raises some serious questions.

First, there has been some concern that the Collegian's suppression of these advertisements constitutes censorship. This is not the case. Decisions are made every day, by newspaper people everywhere, that have a direct effect on what you and I read. The entire journalistic process is a series of decisions — from a reporter's decision on what to scribble into his or her notebook, to the editor's decision on what stories will be published, where in the paper they will go, and how much space will be devoted to them.

Censorship occurs only when some outside force, such as the government, business community, or university administration, tries to tell the newspaper what it can and cannot publish. When a newspaper staff decides on its own to refrain from publishing a given story or advertisement, this is not censorship. It is journalistic license. Journalists should take extreme care in exercising this license, however. It is a weighty responsibility.

Let us now examine the question of what effect this action (i.e. the suppression of sexist advertising) will have toward achieving its goal. If the aim, as stated, is to keep readers from being exposed to and-or manipulated by sexism in the media, that purpose will have been defeated as soon as the reader turns on Charlie's Angels or drives by a bill-board that shows a beautiful woman smoking Winstons.

There is a very strong tendency for us to point to the fact that we have no control over television or billboard advertising and to therefore disclaim any responsibility for them. We can withdraw into this protective shell of a university community, this ivory tower of academia, and tell whomever asks that we have purged our societal microcosm of sexism by ceasing to publish a few Schlitz beer ads in the Collegian.

This is isolationist journalism at its worst. By suppressing this advertising, we suppress the entire issue. If our goal is to bring about a change in the societal mainstream, we cannot achieve it by merely withdrawing ourselves from that mainstream.

I would like to issue a challenge to the Collegian to step out of its hiding place in the basement of the Campus Center and to enter the arena of society at large.

If full page advertisements depicting a beautiful and provocatively dressed woman holding a mug of Schlitz beer are sexist, and indeed they are, the Collegian should publish them and address the issue of sexism before its readers.

Directly opposite a full page ad of this type, the Collegian should respond with a full page ad of its own, which would read something like this:

"SEX"

is being used to draw your attention to the advertisement on the opposite page. The next time you reach for a six-pack of Schlitz beer, remember that the Schlitz Brewing Company exploits women and tries to manipulate its consumer public through sexist advertising.

"Remember, too, that heavy beer consumption can lead to alcoholism, with all the physical, psychological, and emotional problems it entails."

The following footnote could be added in explanation:

"The above statement reflects the majority opinion of the Collegian Advertising Review Board."

If the Collegian were to speak to the issue of sexism in advertising in this manner, it would be doing its readers a much greater service than it would by suppressing the advertising and the issue altogether.

"Free Church" protest off base

jim paulin

Outfront is back.

The way it came back though, makes me almost wish it hadn't. It irresponsibly does not always print bylines (that is, print who wrote an article), and when it does, the byline is sometimes false, a pseudonym.

The "Mark Lewis" who was credited with writing the front page story in the 10-27 edition of Outfront is in reality Lou Wilson, who is using Outfront in his reactionary and atavistic crusade to abolish compulsory education.

UMass needs "An independent news supplement to the Collegian." I helped fight for the right of Outfront to use the Collegian as a circulation vehicle and denounced the Collegian's pretension of "objectivity." However, the last issue left me feeling angry and betrayed — I did not think that I was supporting a newspaper that would be characterized by anonymity and trashy, inaccurate reporting, and never ever did I expect it to be dominated by a non-student like Lou Wilson, who is the high priest of "Free Church Incorporated," late of Shutesbury. What "Free Church Inc." means is Lou Wilson's nuclear family.

In Rev. Wilson's own words, "At stake is the Wilson family's custody of their own children, the legality of compulsory education, abuse of religious and civil liberties ... Outfront (read "Me, Lou Wilson") wants to fan this issue to flames." I myself want to pull the fire alarm on this issue just as I would if I saw a burning cross.

The Wilsons boycotted the public school system and advocated truancy because they object to "racist, sexist and competitive learning."

I realize how miserable the K-12 public education is. I found public school extremely oppressive and repressive, and so begun my caree as a rabble rouser. When I was 13 my parents, considering the fact that I was getting suspended with great regularity, realized I was never going to make it in the Athol schools, and enrolled me in the Devereux Foundation in Pennsylvania, which is a private reform school without bars. A repair rather than preparatory school. There were no physical obstructions to escape and many students, feeling the pain of psychological terror inflicted both from without and within, liberated themselves; most returned, some didn't. It cost the state, under Public Law 750, a fortune — the tuition was in the neighborhood of 10 grand.

But if you rescind compulsory education, the next thing to go would be the child labor laws. Many kids would not mingle with their peers, but would remain under their parents' thumb, and-or boot. Many kids would stay inside and watch TV all day. Regardless of how fucked public school may be, it is a socializer, it gets children out into the world, and shows them that there is life beyond their parents.

Lou's "Let the parents decide" campaign could probably also garner support from people who are angry that schools aren't racist enough, who don't want their kids in public schools. There are people in this society who realize that the less people know the less they want, that ignorant people have lower expectations and are less dissension prone, and would be happy to ally themselves — Wilson.

Wilson is like the man in Robert Frost's "Mending Wall" who says "good fences make good neighbors," and wants the future to be composed of children who, again like the Mending Wall man, "will not go beyond his father's sayings." Wilson is the kind of person who throws rocks at school buses.

On the back page of Outfront it says that Outfront was labeled a "communist publication" at a Collegian staff meeting which is a complete lie because at the meeting when it supposedly occurred, Outfront editor Britt Warren and Wilson were not there — they based their accusation on hearsay.

Then, alchemists that they are, they change Collegian graphics department staffer Phil Milstein into Phil Goldstein, and campus police officer Tucker into State Trooper Ford.

Outfront has great potential, but it will never be realized as long as Wilson and his family continue to occupy its office. Free Church out of Outfront!

Time for U.S. to set the example

By GREG BRYANT

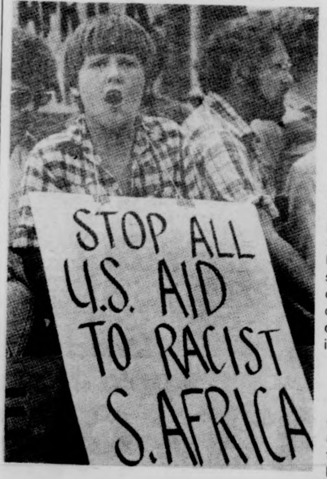
A couple of weeks ago, in a move that outraged many around the world, the apartheid government of South Africa banned black protest groups, closed the country's principal black newspaper and arrested its editor. The total number detained by the government came to more than 50 people. They were accused of conducting a campaign of hate against the whites. South Africa's Justice Minister echoed the rhetoric of the white's flimsy legitimacy when he labelled those arrested as a "smokescreen to cover subersive activities," a favorite argument used to justify suppression of blacks.



STOP ALL U.S. AID TO RACIST S.AFRICA

The white apartheid government feels itself slipping and is ardently trying to hold onto its increasingly tenous position of power. Their credibility was not helped when Steve Biko, the country's foremost black leader died while in police custody about seven weeks ago, It was thought that he died of head injuries, suffering from at least a dozen other bruises including extensive rib damage (his death is currently under official investigation).

The trial of Winnie Mandela, a black woman accused of violating the restrictions of her banning order, has focused world wide attention on the many repressive tactics that the whites employ against the blacks. Recent boycotts by black schoolchildren and other forms of protest has similarly driven the South African regime into an even more defensive stance.

The American response to these crackdowns was hardly one of emphatic condemnation. Quite the contrary, Jimmy Carter merely stated that it had "implications" for relations and was an "unprecedented" event. Although comparatively speaking it was a harsher reaction than any previous administration had taken, Carter has again proven that his human rights doctrine is indeed rather selective.

A week later he advocated a United Nations sanction against all arms sale to South Africa, again an unprecedented move, but again he did not go far enough. In the United Nations Security Council last week for instance, the United States joined with Britain and France in a veto to defeat a resolution that would have imposed stringent economic sanctions on South Africa. They opted instead for a mandatory arms ban against the South Africans. The Pretoria government retorted saying it has a strong enough arms industry to surmount an international embargo and to "put up a fight that will astonish" opponents seeking to end white rule.

Washington has thus taken the safest route in this matter. It has leveled criticism in a manner that will not adversely affect the whites' power in South Africa. Economically the United States is too heavily involved ($1.5 billion worth) in the country to advocate any economic sanctions against it. Yet it is increasingly clear that the American corporate presence there has not and will not help the blacks' plight, for profits are assured only if the blacks are kept in their current subservient status. The recent crackdowns only serve to improve the atmosphere for investment, which must be very pleasing to the corporations.

The South Africa regime is still running scared, though. It seems to sense that its days are numbered. Carter's timid responses to the latest suppressions have done little except to build the confidence of the Afrikaners. He has merely made it easier for the United States again to avoid any vigorous confrontations with our continued economic presense in a country that subverts the rights of its non-white members.

The administration should thus have taken a more passionate stance against the South African government immediately after the recent crackdowns and expressed an anger truly worthy of Carter's often stated concern for human rights. Secondly, it is my belief that the onlywayto force South Africa in this areá is through means that would hurt it the most: economic sanctions. Foreign investment is South Africa's basis of power — to eliminate or modify this source would severely damage its very basis of rule and suppression over "its" people.

The United States can provide an example for the rest of the world if it really wants to. Let's see if this country can use its power in a truly constructive manner by getting the hell out of South Africa.

North Village children endangered

To the Editor:

We, as parents of North Village Apartments, believe that the time has come to express openly our anger and outrage at the unsafe conditions that exist in our complex. On October 30, 1977, Nagi Kawasaki, the twenty-month-old daughter of Kenji and Mariko Kawasaki, wandered from her home and drowned in the swamp that borders the western edge of North Village, a few yards from the end of the apartments. In response to the tragedy, the Office of Family Housing has put up a snow fence to block off the area. Although we are grateful for some attention to this long-standing problem, we feel that temporary measures are inadequate.

This is an emergency situation that requires an immediate and permanent solution. We demand that a durable, child-proof fence be constructed the entire length of the western edge of North Village to seal off the swampy area. In addition, we demand that each triangle of family apartments be provided with a fence and gate for each of the three corners of the triangular backyards.

The extraordinarily high density of children in these triangles makes it essential that our children be protected from the other hazards of the complex — the busy road, the large and full parking lots, and areas where men are working with dangerous equipment and open holes.

We have been informed that no fund exists at Family Housing to defray these costs, which we deem crucial to the lives of our children. Within a large university, surely there is some organization with the capacity to bear these expenses immediately. It is a disgrace to the entire university community that the children of North Village are constantly exposed to danger. University-run apartments house not only the increasing number of non-traditional American students with families, but also foreign students and visiting faculty. The unsafe conditions, therefore, reflect unfavorably on the university not only within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; but they also impair the reputation of the University of Massachusetts on a national and international level.

We, the undersigned parents of the E Triangle, feel that as tenants of North Village and productive members of the University community we can no longer tolerate these dangerous conditions. Within our triangle of twelve apartments there are nineteen children, seven of whom are under four years of age. This unusually high concentration of children demonstrates the high risks that exist throughout North Village. We will appreciate help from any quarter of the University.

Why does Martus oppose tow service?

To the Editor:

In last Friday's Collegian, Jay Martus' editorial appeared to be another attempt to block student towing. This raises in my mind the question, why is he against the student service? His reasons for not implementing the service appear groundless.

His allegations that the student towing bill is being presented so rapidly that the Senate has no time to review it is not true. For one thing, last year at this time a similar attempt was made by the stop Amherst Towing people to have a student towing service take over. It never made it to a vote because last year's Senate with Jay Martus as co-president kept finding technical reasons not to put it up for a vote.

Jay's complaint that the Student Senate should not be responsible for student towing, but instead the university administration should, is an equally invalid criticism. As of now the administration is responsible for towing, and who do we have but Amherst towing? And if this is his position, then many other organizations should similarly be dropped and left to the administration, for example, the student transit service.

What really didn't come across was that the Student Senate exists wholly for the benefit of the student body. There are close to 7000 signatures representing student support for the bill. If the bill is not blocked again for a technical reason, I don't see how the senate would not vote it in, considering the amount of support it has.

Carter presses Congress to adopt his energy bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter warned the public last night it is guzzling energy at a rate that endangers the economy and the nation's security, but said he will veto any energy bills that do not meet his standards of conservation, fairness and economy.

In a televised address to the nation, Carter tried to whip up public support for the energy package tied up in Congress, painting a grim picture of the alternatives to a comprehensive national energy policy.

"This is not a contest of strength between the President and the Congress, nor between the House and the Senate," Carter said in noting that the two Houses are now trying to resolve vastly differing versions of his original energy proposals.

"What is being measured is the strength and will of our nation — whether we can acknowledge a threat and meet a serious challenge together."

Peppering his speech with references to the alleged desire of oil and gas producers for "huge windfall profits," Carter noted that Congress' failure to complete action on an energy package had forced him to postpone his projected world tour until "sometime after Christmas."

Nonetheless, he reserved the right to veto whatever legislation comes out of Congress.

"I will sign the energy bills only if they meet these tests," he said, and listed three requirements for energy legislation:

— That they be "fair to both the American consumers and to the energy producers, and that it not diirupt our national economy."

— That they be "designed to meet our important goals for energy conservation, promote a shift to more plentiful and permanent energy supplies, and encourage increased" energy production.

— That they protect "our federal budget from any unreasonable financial burden."

"The excessive importing of foreign oil is a tremendous and rapidly increasing drain on our national economy," the president said. "It hurts every American family ...

'If this trend continues, excessive reliance on foreign oil could make the very security of our nation increasingly dependent on certain energy supplies." He said every $5 billion increase in oil imports "costs us about 200,000 American jobs."

Noting that oil prices to some extent are set by foreign suppliers and are outside American control, he added: "Our biggest problem, however, is that we simply use too much — and waste too much — energy."

It was Carter's first nationwide address devoted exclusively to energy problems since he introduced his energy policy proposals to Congress April 20, and he took the occasion to tell Americans they had done a poor job of conservation in the interim.

"This summer we used more oil and gasoline than ever before in our history," he said. "More of our oil is coming from foreign countries. Just since April our oil imports have cost us $23 billion — about $350 worth of foreign oil for the typical American family."

Tuesday night's speech represented Carter's effort to take a major personal hand in lobbying for passage of the Houseapproved energy bills that closely reflect his own taxbased conservation proposals. The Senate scrapped many of his key provisions and also voted to remove federal price controls controls from natural gas despite his veto threats.

Nonetheless, while pressing for congressional action, the president seemed to take special care to adopt a conciliatory tone toward the legislators.

"The choices facing the members of Congress are not easy," he said.

"For them to pass an effective and fair plan, they will need your support and understanding — your support to resist pressures from a few for special favors at the expense of the rest of us and your understanding that there can be no effective plan without some sacrifice from all of us.

"We should reward individuals and companies who discover and produce new oil and gas," he said, "but we must not given them huge windfall profits on their existing wells at the expense of the American people."

As Carter delivered his speech before cameras and microphones in the Oval Office, a contingent of congressional leaders watched it by invitation in the White House Roosevelt Room across the hall.

"We must face an unpleasant fact about energy prices," he said. "They are going up, whether we pass an energy program or not, as fuel become scarcer and more expensive to produce."

But he said he means to fight one type of proposed price hike — the deregulation sought by natural gas producers and the Senate, which approved deregulation in its version of the energy bill.

"Unfortunately," he said, "there are still some who seek personal gain over the national interest."

'This energy plan is a good insurance policy for the future, in which relatively small premiums we pay today will protect us in the years ahead," Carter said in urging support for his proposals.

Kidnapping spreads worldwide

ROME [AP] — The rich in Europe are increasingly being forced to live with bodyguards and take other safety measures as the idea behind Italy's "Kidnapping, Inc." spreads to other countries.

The number of Italian kidnappings for ransom in 1977 reached a record 63 yesterday when three armed men seized Pietro Fiocci, a munitions factory owner and town official in Lecco. They pushed him into a waiting car as he left work in the northern Italina town and drove away.

Monday an armed gang grabbed Duke Massimiliano Grazioli as he toured his estate near Rome. The abductors demanded a $12 million ransom for the duke, who police said failed to follow the cardinal rule of kidnap prevention — vary your daily routine.

More significant than the number of Italian kidnappings, now one more than the one-year record set in 1975, is the fact that the crime has spread elsewhere.

A few of the kidnappers in other countries had political motives, but most of them demanded, and got, high ransoms of the order that has netted Italian abductors millions of dollars a year. Italians were suspected of involvement in some kidnappings in other countries.

Switzerland, long seen as a safe place, had its first recorded kidnapping this year: that of Graziella Ortiz, 5-year-old grandniece of Bolivian tin king Antenor Patino. She was freed on a $3 million ransom. Police said they suspect Italian professionals were to blame.

In France, Luchino Revelli-Beamont, chief executive of Italy's Fiat auto company in Paris, was freed in July after 89 days in captivity and payment of $2 million. A gang of Argentines was arrested after his release. French police are now trying to discourage kidnappings by preventing ransom payments.

The Netherlands had its first kidnapping in the recent spate when real estate magnate Maurits Caransa was seized Oct. 28. He negotiated his own release last Wednesday with a $4.16 million ransom and said he used no bodyguard — though he suspected he was being followed — to avoid diverting a potential kidnap to others in his family. Police said his kidnappers spoke English "with a Mediterranean accent."

Police in Portugal blamed a gang of Italians and Latin Americans for the kidnapping of a Nicaraguan and a Canadian last summer, the first such cases in recent memory. They were freed with a $200,000 ransom.

In Spain, rich Basque industrialists have long used bodyguards against the Basque Land and Liberty terrorist group, which has carried out kidnappings for both political reasons and money. A radical leftist group called Grapo joined in this year with the abduction of two Spanish officials, later released without bloodshed.

The latest kidnapping reported in Spain was last Thursday, when a jeweler in Salamanca was seized by four men. Police said there seemed to be no political motivation.

The main motive behind the kidnapping of West German industrialist Hanns-Martin Schleyer was political, with a band of Red Army Faction terrorists demanding the release of 11 prisoners. But the kidnappers also demanded $478,000 in ransom. Schleyer was killed Oct. 18 after 43 days.

The first victim of what came to be known as Italy's Kidnapping Inc. was a Sicilian baron, Francesco Agnello, abducted from his home in 1955 for a 60 million-lire ransom, worth nearly $100,000 at the time.

The new-found industry was generally limited to Sicily and Sardinia in those early years, but it moved to Italy's mainland in the 1970s.

Since the oil-wealthy family of J. Paul Getty III paid a $2.7 million ransom in 1973, the figures have been frequently near the $1 million mark. Getty was freed but had an ear cut off.

Authorities estimate over $60 million was paid in the more than 200 kidnappings for ransom in Italy until this year, while unofficial estimates of ransomes paid so far this year total nearly $16 million.

The victims are usually released unharmed after a ransom is paid, but there have been at least seven confirmed deaths at the hands of kidnappers since 1970, the latest a Milan man found in a lake Oct. 8.

Five college interterm trip is scheduled for Japan

The Five-College Center for Asian Studies is organizing a three-week trip to Japan, Dec. 29 — Jan. 19, open to students and the general public.

The group is scheduled to arrive in Tokyo by Japan Air Lines in time to welcome the New Year, Japan's biggest and most festive holiday. At no time of the year is Japan more Japanese — with everyone dressed in their native finery.

The itinerary also includes a week in Kyoto, the ancient capital, and side trips to the temples of Nara and Kamakura, the Grand Shrine at Ise, the Tokugawa mausoleum at Nikko, the pottery and craft museums and shops at Kurashiki, and the great castle at Himeji.

Accommodations will be in temples, youth of New York and Tokyo.

Deadline for applications is Nov. 15. Applicants should send their name, address and phone number, along with a $100 deposit, payable to Miyazaki Travel, to Prof. Tyler-Asian Studies Program-Amherst College-Amherst, Ma. 01002. The balance of the money will be due Dec. 1, along with the participant's passport. For more information, call the center mornings at 542-2242.

Woman's workshops offered at Health Services Center

Women's health workshops for dormitory and campus groups, offered through University Health Services, give women an opportunity to take time away from studies and learn about their bodies.

Women's health is more than anatomy. There are emotional aspects involved in sharing experiences of personal relevance with friends.

Women's health covers a broad range of topics including vaginal ecology, menstruation, contraception, and pelvic and breast exams. The workshops also stress ways women can become activated participants in their health care.

Ellen Miller-Mack, a Health Center nurse practitioner, emphasizes that the workshops also provide an exciting opportunity to explore preventive activities and how women can better care for themselves.

Each workshop is tailored to meet group needs. Educational aids brought to the workshops include: Betsi, used to demonstrate breast self-exam; Gynny, a pelvic model, a slide-tape show on vaginal ecology, and a variety of other handouts. The models are good for stimulating questions and encouraging active participation, but the specific content is really the group's decision.

To sponsor a women's health workshop for your dormitory or campus organization, call the Division of Health Education at 549-2671, ext. 181.

Smith College sells Firestone Tire stock

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. [UPI] — Smith College has decided to sell its Firestone Tire Co. stock because of questions surrounding the firm's dealings in South Africa.

A spokesman for Smith says the school sold $688,000 worth of Firestone stock because school officials weren't satisfied with the company's explanation of why it built a new plant near racially segregated housing in South Africa.

"We did not sell the stock because Firestone was not being socially responsible, but because they didn't get us the information we needed to make a decision," said spokesman Ann Shanahan.

"The location of a new Firestone plant next to a segregated housing complex in South Africa was of particular concern to the college," she said. The school's investment committee sold the stock after student demonstrations against Firestone last spring.

Mrs. Shanahan said three other companies whose stock constitutes $17.2 million of Smith's stock portfolio were not dropped because they gave satisfactory explanations of their South African dealings. Those companies were International Business Machines, Caterpillar Tractor and General Motors.

Neighboring Amherst College decided last month to keep its $20 million worth of stock in companies with South African holdings, saying racist policies could best be changed by pressuring the companies to work for an end to the apartheid policies in South Africa.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9 - Born today, you are practical, resourceful and able to deal with a variety of people and situations. At times you feel in over your head, but generally you are confident of your ability to handle whatever comes up. You don't 'hog' responsibility, however, and usually insist that all those involved in projects with you take their turn at the helm to prepare them for a time when you may be unable to be in charge.

Most of those who know you respect and admire you. Those who don't are in the minority, and are usually avoided by the majority. Beware, therefore, that you don't start thinking too highly of yourself. You are, usually, wise enough to catch yourself when this happens. Fortunate in having so many virtues, you should not find success difficult to attain.

You enjoy your associations with people, finding in your fellow human beings all the excitement you could want. You amuse yourself with a study of other people's motives and consequent behavior, but never at their expense, for you are very careful to keep such quiet studies to yourself. You are open, eager, always enthusiastic to undertake new projects. Seldom saying no to requests from others.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) - Be conservative on present-day issues. Declare your purpose before setting out to work.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) - Recognition should come today if you share your knowledge with another. Promises are kept at evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) - You can accomplish more than you had planned today if you stick to your schedule and refuse to be hindered.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) - A sudden change in another's plans causes considerable alteration of your own. Don't dispute the facts.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) - You should get along well with friends of friends. It's important that you enter the scene realizing this.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Curb impulses to speculate, especially with other people's money. Direct attention elsewhere in a hurry.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Early morning moodiness may keep you from gaining the most from a day that has more to offer than you know.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Close friends who understand and sympathize with you are to be welcomed today. Money matters to be discussed at evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - Both mind and body need avenues of expression now. Don't exercise one at the expense of the other.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) - Success in profession should not be as long in coming as you feared. Be prepared to make another decision to further career.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) - Happiness does not necessarily mean security. You should be able to know joy even in the midst of certain basic wants.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) - Your restlessness and anticipatory nature makes it easy to pull the wool over your eyes today. Have a care.

Ex-UMass hoop star plays 'musical guards'

DETROIT [UPI] — Al Skinner is the latest entrant in the Detroit Pistons' game of 'musical guards'.

Four guards capable of starting and only two starting positions is what annoyed Kevin Porter to the point of public discontent. Even Chris Ford, who started most of the time, was upset about playing time.

But Kevin Porter was the most vocal complainer, showing open contempt for Coach Herb Brown of the Pistons after being taken out of games last season, and even though his temper tantrums have subsided he still wanted to be traded.

Monday he was, along with forward Howard Porter, no relation, and an amount of money suspected to be equal to the forward's salary. They went to the New Jersey Nets for Skinner and two second round draft choices. Detroit will get the picks one at a time over the next two drafts.

Whether Skinner, an ex-UMass star, can handle being an interchangeable part with Ford, Ralph Simpson and Eric Money will be seen in another month or two, after he's adapted to the change.

Brown seems to have adopted a "harmony — or else" policy this season. Money disregarded a defensive instruction in a recent game, was pulled out and never returned. The coach followed that loss to Atlanta with a public notice he was not going to play any "mind games" with his players.

Skinner may be able to match up at small forward against some players and could be the big defensive guard the club has searched for. The Nets got help they were looking for, too.

Howard Porter, 29, was Detroit's No. 3 scorer with a 13.2 average last season while the playmaking Kevin, 27, was fourth in the NBA with a 7.3 assist average despite his sporadic playing time last season. Skinner, 25, averaged 12.6 points a year ago.

"I think it's better for the organization and I'm ready to go to New Jersey," Kevin Porter said. "They're talking about playing me 44 or 45 minutes a game. They're willing to add some years to my contract, and, hopefully, it will lengthen my career."

New Jersey is getting the playmaking guard it has sought for some time in Kevin Porter, who came to Detroit from Washington for Dave Bing and a first-round draft choice in 1975. He led the NBA in assists with the Bullets.

Howard Porter was unhappy playing behind Marvin Barnes at forward for Detroit.

Hisle also sought

Zisk jumps Chicago for Texas tea

ARLINGTON, Texas [UPI] — Outfielder Richie Zisk, whose 30 home runs and 101 RBIs last season with the Chicago White Sox made him one of the most sought after free agents, yesterday signed a contract with the Texas Rangers for "a lot of money" and "a lot of years."

A Rangers spokesman said actual money terms and length of Zisk's new contract would be discussed at an evening news conference.

"But just say for the moment that it is a lot of money, but within line with the salary structure of the club," the spokesman said, "and for a lot of years."

Rangers owner Brad Corbett said Monday he had offered free agent outfielder Larry Hisle of the Minnesota Twins about $3 million and a 10-year contract to sign with Texas.

Zisk, 28, and Hisle were considered the two premier power hitters available in last Friday's free agent draft. Speculation was that offers to Zisk and Hisle would be in the same monetary neighborhood.

The Rangers can sign as many as five free agents this year. The team's first choice in Friday's draft was former Minnesota Twins outfielder Lyman Bostock, but Texas had indicated Hisle was their primary consideration.

But with the signing of Zisk — a right-handed, power-hitting outfielder like Hisle — it was speculated Texas would drop out of the running for Hisle.

The right-hand hitting Zisk batted .290 for the White Sox last season. He also had 17 doubles and six triples to help keep the White Sox in contention for the division title through much of the year.

Zisk was obtained by the White Sox in a trade with Pittsburgh last December for pitchers Rich Gossage and Terry Forster. Gossage also went through the free agent draft Friday.

The 6-1, 208-pound outfielder played last season without a contract since it was his option year and received the standard 20 per cent pay cut which teams may impose on players playing out their options.

But White Sox owner Bill Veeck restored the cut, pushing his salary up to about the $90,000 level.

Veeck had repeatedly said he was trying to sign Zisk, but said Zisk was demanding $800,000 "front money" and a three-year contract. Zisk's agent, Jerry Kapstein, denied that statement, saying Zisk had asked for considerably less.

Speculation was that Zisk was seeking a contract paying at least $250,000 to $300,000 a year with the White Sox.

Zisk opened strongly at the plate in 1977, but a series of injuries reduced his effectiveness in the second half of the season. He played right and left field and occasionally served as designated hitter for the Sox.

The Rangers said they signed him because of his power consistency at the plate. In the past five years, he averaged .299 with 20 home runs and 84 RBIs.

The UMass women's soccer club raised its record to 10-2-1 last weekend as it tied Springfield, 2-2, and won the Yankee Conference tournament. The UMass junior varsity football team dropped a heartbreaker Sunday at UConn, 20-9.

Ahead 9-0 at halftime, the UMass offense, which had been doing well, collapsed and gave the Huskies the necessary points to win.

UMass opened up the scoring in the first quarter with a 25-yard field goal by Jim Mullin, which was set up by the recovery of a fumbled punt.

In the same quarter, linebacker John Allen intercepted a pass and returned it to the UConn 25-yard line. On the ensuing play, fullback Steve Milkiewicz sprinted in for the score.

The second period saw the tempo of the game change. The offense sputtered and missed three opportunities to score from the one.

The second half showed the comeback of a tough UConn squad. A bad UMass punt snap caused excellent field position for the Huskies, and they took it in from there for their first score. It soon became 14-9, due to a touchdown runback of an interception.

After that it was a seesaw battle in terms of who would get the points to put the game away. With the Minutemen driving in the final minute, UConn intercepted another pass and again brought it in for the score and the icing on the cake.

Again this week the UMass defense was excellent, as the entire unit stood out in a fine effort. Quarterback Jack Kraham kept the offense going until he dislocated his elbow in the first half. Milkiewicz and Brian McCutheon ran well in the much improved ground performance.

The junior Minutemen take on the New Hampshire sub-varsity at 1:30 at Alumni stadium Sunday in hopes of improving upon their 2-2 record.

Spikers capture final tri-match

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

Led by its two departing seniors, Heidi Dickson and Kathy Shinnick, the UMass volleyball team finished the season in impressive fashion, winning a tri-match over Westfield State and Keene State in four straight games last night in Westfield.

UMass finished the season with seven victories in its last nine games and an overall record of 11-13. The victory total was the best ever for UMass volleyball in its three years of existence.

In the first game vs. Keene, it was Kathy Shinnick who rescued the Minutewomen after they had squandered an early 6-1 lead and Keene had closed the gap to 10-7. Shinnick took over the serving responsibilities and UMass iced the game by a score of 15-9, with Shinnick serving the last five points.

Keene managed to get a little closer in the second game and even led at one point (8-7) but this time Joyce Gresl was the hero as she served for five points in the game, including the last three, and UMass prevailed, 15-9.

Westfield became the squad's next victim and again it was Shinnick who led the charge with seven service points. The final tally was 15-3. In the final game, coach Dianne Thompson used her strong bench generously and the women opened up an 11-2 lead and coasted to a 15-9 victory, led by the combined serving efforts of Dickson and Donna Sasso. Each served for five points in the finale.

Thompson was very impressed by the team's strong showing. She said, "We totally dominated both teams. We were very aggressive, always attacking."

She had absolutely no complaints with the team's season performance. As she put it, "Even though we didn't reach our goal of a .500 season, I feel that it was a very successful season."

UM holds 3rd spot

The UMass football team continues to hold down third place in the National Division II rankings.

In the latest poll released yesterday, the Minutemen, by virtue of a 28-6 win over Division I Holy Cross, held onto its third rating.

South Carolina State earned its second straight number one ranking after defeating Maryland (Eastern Shore), 42-7.

North Dakota State remained second after it trounced Morningside (Iowa) 65-6.

Nevada, (Reno) moved up to fifth from fourth, New Hampshire from sixth to fifth, and Boise State from eighth to sixth.

Tennessee Tech, which had been tied for third with UMass last week, dropped to seventh after a 28-21 loss to Eastern Kentucky. UCal, Davis slipped from seventh to eighth and Northern Michigan climbed from 10th to ninth.

The final Division II poll of the 1977 season will be made after this weekend's games. Playoff berths will also be announced sometime next week. Eight teams will qualify for the national tournament.

1. South Carolina State (8-0-1)
2. North Dakota State (7-1-1)
3. Massachusetts (7-1)
4. Nevada, Reno (8-1)
5. New Hampshire (8-1)
6. Boise (Ida.) State (7-2)

Foster - NL MVP

George Foster exhibits his smooth swing that enabled the Cincinnati slugger to capture the 1977 NL MVP award. (UPI)

NEW YORK [UPI] — George Foster, the quiet man with the big, black bat in the middle of the Cincinnati lineup, yesterday was named the National League's Most Valuable Player for 1977, the sixth time a Reds player was awarded the honor in the last eight years.

Foster, the first National Leaguer to hit more than 50 homers since his idol Willie Mays 12 years ago, collected 15 of a possible 24 first place ballots in voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He also had nine second place votes for a total of 291 points.

Greg Luzinski of the Philadelphia Phillies, who received the remaining nine first place votes, plus 12 second place ballots, had a total of 255 points to place second. Pittsburgh's Dave Parker was third with 156 points, Los Angeles' Reggie Smith was fourth with 112 points and Philadelphia's Cy Young Award winner Steve Carlton with fifth with 100 points.

Foster, a deeply religious man who will turn 29 in three weeks, captured one of baseball's most prestigious awards with some impressive credentials, including a league-leading 52 home runs, 149 runs batted in and 124 runs scored. He also had a .320 batting average, fourth best in the league.

Only three other men in National League history broke the 50-homer barrier. Hack Wilson set the record with 56 in 1930, Ralph Kiner had 54 in 1949 and Mays had 52 in 1965. Wilson set his mark a year before the MVP voting began and Kiner lost out to Jackie Robinson of the Brooklyn Dodgers. Mays received the MVP award in 1965.

Foster became the 16th player in the 47 years since the BBWAA instituted the MVP to come from a non-pennant winning team. Luzinski, who helped Philadelphia to the Eastern Division Championship, batted .309 with 39 homers and 130 runs batted in.

No winter of discontent

A year ago at this time, most UMass sports fans were already thinking ahead to the winter season.

And why not?

— Although the football team was gearing itself up for a battle with New Hampshire which decided the Yankee Conference winner for 1976, the Minutemen were struggling through what was to wind up a disappointing 5-5 season.

— The soccer team was putting the wraps on a frustrating 5-8-1 campaign. Along the way, the Minutemen were shut out five times.

— The field hockey team was coming off a somewhat unsatisfying regular season. The Minutewomen, ranked fourth in the Northeast playoffs, bowed out of the championship fight in the first round. Much more was expected from the squad, since the year before it had missed going to the Nationals by the slimmest of margins.

The only UMass fall sports teams which experienced any measure of success in the post-season play last year were the men's and women's cross country squads.

The male harriers won the Yan Cons (ho-hum), finished second in the New Englands, and then came in ninth in the IC4A's (or Easterns, for those of you don't know CC lingo).

The female harriers, meanwhile, took second in the New Englands, third in the Easterns, and finished 14th in the country.

This season, though, things have radically changed on campus. And for the better, if you like UMass sports success. Although the final verdict is far from being issued, it looks as if several of those teams which found 1976 so unfulfilling will be singing a different tune come the end of this month.

Take, for instance, the football team. Now in undisputed possession of third place in the latest national Division II rankings, the possibility of post-season play looms large.

This weekend, of course, will tell the story. The build-up has been taking place for weeks, and this year's 'Game of the Decade' is all set for Durham. If the Minutemen win... well, you all know what will happen.

And if they lose ...

But at least UMass will be master of its own fate. A win, and the national playoffs beckon. A loss, and an anticlimatic game against Boston College will wrap up the season.

The soccer team will find out its post-season fate sometime early Thursday morning. The 9-4 Minutemen, currently ranked fourth in New England, will learn if it will be chosen for the regional playoffs. Only Brown, Vermont, and Rhode Island are considered better than UMass in the area. And since just four teams will make up the post-season field, the Minutemen's chances look rosy.

The field hockey team glided through an 8-2-4 regular season, a vast improvement upon their 1976 showing. The second seed in this weekend's Northeast Regional playoffs, the Minutewomen look as if they have a good chance to qualify for the National tournament, to be held later this month in Denver, Col.

While the football and soccer teams are still unsettled about their post-season possibilities, at least they have a realistic shot at making some waves in national competition.

And, of course, the men's cross country team still have the IC4A's awaiting it, and a chance to go on to Spokane, Wash., for the national championships.

So postpone winter a little longer, folks. This fall still has some big news left.

Whalen elected speaker

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Commuter Senator Patrick Whalen last night defeated Senator Nick Krikoris 49-32 in the election for Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker.

Whalen discarded his prepared text during his campaign speech to the Senate. "There is no way a handful of administrators should control a school with 25,000 students," said Whalen. He added "the most important thing I can do is educate peoples as to how things work." Whalen, a business major in his junior year, said students had to establish "strength from independence." He urged the increase of student run coops. He also wanted to look into the possibility of study days before finals.

Krikoris, in his speech to the Senate, said his two years of senatorial experience were a "vital" part of his ability to handle the job of Speaker.

He said that past leadership has not done enough to alleviate the problem of confusion during Senate meetings. Krikoris called for a "more informed Senate, more involved in debate to increase representation of decisions."

"The time has come for a new kind of leadership," said Krikoris. The candidate said he hoped to make the body a place "where all are proud to serve."

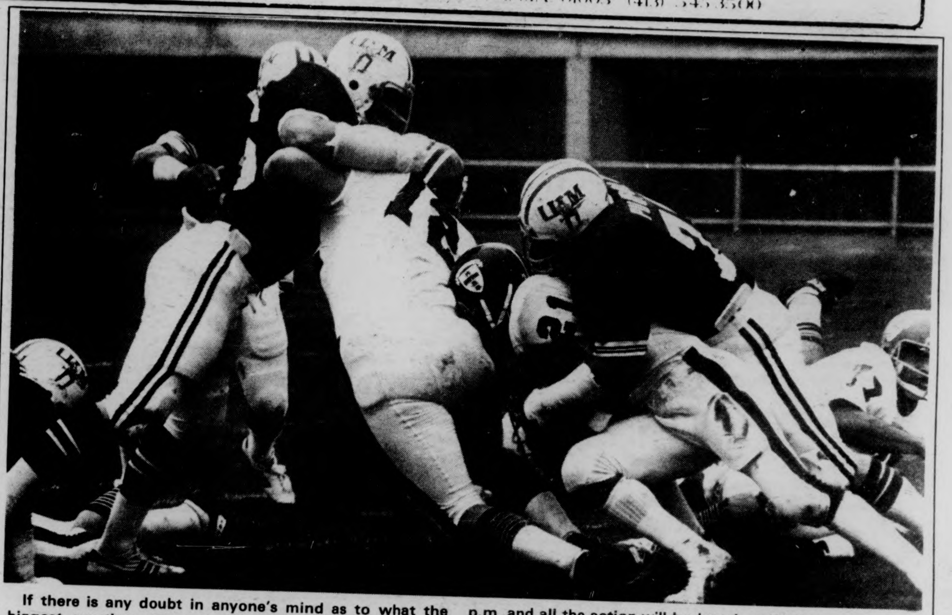
Whalen said in his speech that "we must move away from the tendency of isolation. We must move away from criticism behind each others backs. We must continue to try to work for the students benefit."

During a Collegian interview after the Senate meeting the new speaker compared himself to his predecessor, Brian DeLima. "Brian is very constructive, a hard worker. Some question his tactics but few question his desire to improve education here. I might not be so forceful. I do not have a basic organizational capability to help bring about order."

Whalen added that while DeLima had "extended knowledge of procedure" the new Speaker can only obtain this with time.

Whalen, a graduate of Acton High School said the "most important aspect to have prior to becoming Speaker is an understanding of the issues." He said he has spent recent weeks on "Senate issues — rather than studying how to be Speaker."

"The need to increase participation is vital," said Whalen. He said he feels that a student union can only become a reality by involving students from "all aspects of University life." Whalen said he is concerned that "unionization has been dealt with in rhetoric for so long that students don't know what it is."



If there is any doubt in anyone's mind as to what the biggest sporting event of this weekend and the entire semester will be, turn to page 16 and 14 for information regarding the UMass-UNH Yankee Conference title game to be played in Durham Saturday afternoon. Game time is 1:00 p.m. and all the action will be heard on WMUA starting at 12:50. On the question of winning, UMass players Dave Bemis (center) and Phil Puopolo (left) let their feelings be known as they demonstrate what they hope they will be doing to UNH running backs. # Senate funds student-run towing; service should begin in summer

By DAN HUSE
Collegian Staff

The student run towing service was approved and funded by the student senate last night. The towing service, proposed and advocated by the "Stop Amherst Towing" group, and the Campus-wide Issues Task Force of the Student Organizing Project, will be put in to effect in July.

The senate also elected Patrick Whalen to take the office of senate speaker, recently opened by the resignation of Brian DeLima. Whelan was chosen over his opponent, Nick Krikoris, by a vote of 49 to 32. (See related story)

The student towing proposal has been held up in the senate for several weeks due to lack of available funds. The proposal calls for an outlay of $35,000, to be returned to the senate from the revenues of the service.

Last night the senate loaned the tow service $8,300 to begin work on the lot to be used for vehicle storage. The remaining $26,650 necessary to purchase tow trucks and accessories will be allocated from next year's budget.

The finance committee, in their report on the towing proposal, recommended that the senate not approve the towing service. According to committee chairman William Bluestein, the committee's unfavorable report, which passed six to three, was based on several reasons not related to funding.

Bluestein said the majority of the committee felt students should not enforce administration parking policies over which they have no say. There are serious problems with the system, he said, but the way to solve them is not to set up a student run towing service. What is needed, Bluestein said, is for students to have some input into parking and towing policy.

Speaking for the towing service, Bill Staub of the SOP Campuswide Issues Task Force said that 7,900 student signatures have been gathered in support of the proposal. He claimed students in charge of the towing operation would be more sensitive than Amherst towing to those whose cars were being towed.

Speaking for the ad hoc Legislative Task Force, SGA co-president Jon Hite requested that the senate provide $570 to pay two month's rent for an office space near the State House in Boston to be used by students engaged in lobbying efforts.

Negotiations open on substance of first faculty contract

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Negotiations yesterday opened between the faculty union and the UMass administration on the substance of the first faculty collective bargaining agreement. Details of the session could not be obtained.

Larry S. Roberts, president of the Amherst union group, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said yesterday a "large part of the package" of union proposals were presented to the administration. The MSP is affiliated with the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

Roberts said the union proposal includes personnel policy, governance, working conditions, salaries and wages, and other miscellaneous areas.

UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who also serves as UMass executive vice president in charge of formulating and implementing policies with the faculty union, could not be reached for comment.

Personnel policy deals with criteria for evaluating faculty for tenure and other related areas, Roberts said, and governance deals with the function of the faculty senate among other items.

Roberts declined to comment on the specifics of the union proposal. The administration and the faculty union agreed earlier this year there would be no media releases without mutual agreement.

The session yesterday was the first to deal with contract matters. "Housekeeping talks" dealing with how contract negotiations would be conducted were held during the summer. Contract negotiations were also delayed following administration refusal to recognize the faculty union shortly after it was voted in last February.

The dispute centered on whether department chairpersons and other categories should be included in the union bargaining unit. The administration has said the chairpersons should not be part of the unit while the union has said they should.

The matter is presently pending before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission. The administration and faculty union have agreed to petition the labor commission to re-define the bargaining unit according to the results of a poll to be taken among department chairpersons on whether they want to be included in the unit.

Dr. Frank Rife of the sports studies department told of payoffs and other problems he faced as a member of the 1968 U.S. Olympic team in a speech sponsored by the PE Majors Club last night. (Staff photo by Bob Higgins)

Israel responds by air to Lebanese attack

TEL AVIV, Israel [AP] — Israeli warplanes streaked across the southern Lebanese border early yesterday, pounding Palestinian strongholds in reprisals for guerrilla rocket attacks that killed three Israelis this week. Lebanese officials said the Israeli foray killed 63 persons and wounded 82.

It was the first Israeli air raid announced in nearly two years, and the first time the hard-line government of Menahem Begin has openly flexed its military muscle since taking office June 20.

Bomb craters 10 yards wide could be seen in villages and camps hit by the Israeli jets. Refugees said as many as 12 Israeli jets made repeated sorties to drop their bombs during the early morning raid.

A spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization said the raid was "a direct consequence of the irresponsible and criminal encouragement of Israel by the United States."

Israel's deputy defense minister, at a funeral for one of the Israeli victims, said the guerrillas "will pay the full price for their actions," that "Jewish blood is not for the taking," and vowed "never to give the murderers any rest."

Abu Jihad, a Palestinian guerrilla commander supervising rescue operations in the nearly flattened town of Azzieh, six miles north of the border, said, "not a single guerrilla has been killed and most of the casualties are women and children."

But a Palestinian spokesman admitted later that three members of a guerrilla anti-aircraft battery "were killed while trying to repulse the raiding jets."

Half a dozen Palestinian women wailed hysterically, pulling their hear and tearing their clothes outside the small infirmary serving the nearby Burj el Shimali refugee camp.

Official favors return of check cashing area

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Campus Center Director William Harris said yesterday he "certainly supports the return of check cashing to the Campus Center," although he cannot see it happening before next fall.

Students from the Student Organizing Project (SOP), sponsoring a proposal to restore check cashing in the Campus Center, told the Collegian last week Harris was against setting up a new facility.

Harris in a Collegian interview yesterday, refused the claim, saying a check cashing facility "would enhance all cash operations in the Campus Center, such as the University Store and the food operations."

Harris said, however, he could not see the facility becoming a reality until the fall of 1978. SOP spokesman Bill Staub, when reached for comment yesterday, said he hoped the facility would be in operation by next semester.

"We're going to try to work out all the details with all parties involved during the next few weeks and then we will meet with Mr. Holmes (Director of Security) to outline extra security measures needed. Hopefully, these will be made over intersession," Staub said.

The plan being pushed by Staub and SOP is a proposal written by student Stephen Sandler this summer. The proposal calls for the use of Campus Center Room 151, the cash handling facility at the bottom of the Campus Center escalator, for a student run cash check cashing facility.

The plan calls for four campus agencies to be involved in the setting up and running of the operation; the Student Senate, the UMass Student Credit Union, the Bursar's Office, and the Campus Center Complex.

Harris said he cannot see the details of an arrangement being worked out by next semester. Harris called the Sandler proposal "a working document that enables all parties to come together to decide the best way to implement check cashing in the Campus Center."

Harris does not see the Sandler proposal as an end and in fact has some fundamental differences with it. The proposal calls for the Student Senate to hire a staff consisting of a Supervisor and two Collection Offices. Tellers would be work-study students and all bad checks and other losses would be covered by the Senate, although the plan anticipates no losses.

Harris said that any check cashing facility would be run by the Campus Center because ultimately "I've got to assume full responsibility for it."

Harris said that he would demand a full time staff of two tellers to "provide continuity and efficiency" to the operation.

Harris called allocation of space for the facility by the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) "inappropriate" at this time. The Sandler proposal passed the BOG space allocations committee earlier this week and is due before the entire BOG today. BOG space allocation committee chairperson Bruce Belcher said Monday he thought it would pass the BOG "unanimously".

At present, consensus seems to be that check cashing's return seems to rest on Harris' shoulders. The Sandler proposal calls for the Campus Center to contribute all equipment and modifications needed for operation. Harris is not prepared to be involved until he is sure the facility is a "reimbursable and self-liquidating" operation.

Also in the Sandler plan is the transfer of money from the Bursar's office to start operation. Bursar Robert Mishol said this transfer would have to come from some one above the Bursar's office. He said it would probably be Vice-Chancellor James McBee.

McBee, who is also Harris' superior, said earlier this week he would not support any new check cashing facility in the Campus Center until "the Director of the Campus Center indicates a desire to have one."

Anti-nuke demonstrator ordered to jail

EXETER, N.H. [UPI] — A Superior Court judge sentenced a Seabrook anti-nuclear demonstrator to four months in jail yesterday, following his conviction on criminal trespass charges stemming from the May protest at the site of the proposed nuclear plant.

Carter Wentworth, 26, of Kensington, is the first of 62 persons facing appeals trials in Rockingham County Superior Court for their role in the occupation of the plant site last spring. More than 1,000 persons were arrested in that demonstration.

Superior Court Judge Wayne Mullavey sentenced Wentworth to six months, with two months suspended. The sentence has been stayed on appeal.

The sentence was stronger than the state had recommended. Peter McFarlane, an assistant county prosecutor, has recommended six months with all but 15 days suspended, plus a $100 fine.

Mullavey said he considered the case one of the few instances where a heavy sentence could be a deterrent to future violations.

Defense attorney Eric Blumenson said, "I think it's unbelievable that a first-time offender drew such a heavy sentence on a trespassing charge. I'd like to find another instance when a first-time offender drew such a heavy penalty.

"I can only conclude that this court is the property of Public Service Co."

Blumenson also objected to Mullavey's disallowance of the state "competing harms law" as a defense. The law allows an individual to violate one law to prevent a greater harm to life or property.

Members of Clamshell Alliance, which sponsored the May occupation, vowed that Wentworth's sentence would not prevent future occupations of the Seabrook site.

"These are scare tactics," said Richard Berg of Ithica, N.Y., who is scheduled to stand trial later this week.

A second trial, for Roger Cole, 22, of Hampton, was recessed until Monday when former State Police Commander Paul Doyon will testify. He has been honeymooning in the Virgin Islands.

Students' reading habits follow national trends

By HERB BRODY
Collegian Staff

The mind, the outdoors, fantasy, and energy are the things UMass students read about most. At least, books on those topics are the biggest sellers at the UMass University Store, the largest local source of popular reading material.

According to University Store book manager Charles Mihle, UMass book buyers pretty much follow national trends. Passages, Gail Sheehy's book which aims to explain, and thus make less frightening, "predictable adult crises," and J.R.R. Tolkien's Silmarillion top both local, as well as national, best-seller lists. Tolkien-philes scooped up 20 copies of The Silmarillion, a hardcover, in its first three days on the shelves; Passages, at its peak, was selling at the rate of 25-30 copies a week. Your Erroneous Zones, a book which has received extensive publicity promotion throughout the country from its author, Wayne W. Dyer, is probably the current number one best seller at the University Store, Mihle said.

Star Wars, the book — like its movie namesake — has enjoyed fantastic success. At the pinnacle of its popularity, George Lucas's science fiction fantasy was selling at six copies a day — high, even for a paperback. Another, older, sci-fi tale of faraway places — Frank Herbert's Dunes has sold well here for years, as a sort of cult book.

Even Cowgirls Get the Blues, by Tom Robbins, is probably the most popular piece of fiction (non-fantasy) now at the University Store, Mihle said. Sales were good even before they were stimulated by the inception of an English course that assigned the book as a text.

Growing awareness of the outdoors over the past 2-3 years has stimulated the sales of various nature books and wilderness guides. There has been an unusually large demand here recently for the Audubon Society's Field Guide to North American Birds, Mihle said.

Books on solar heating, wind power, and other "alternative" energy sources sell better at UMass than at the "typical college," Mihle said, who is expecting especially strong interest this winter in books on woodburning stoves.

Psychology is as popular a reading subject as it is a major, Mihle said. Except for fiction and history, no subject area tops psychology in number of books sold.

Some books have been selling unspectacularly, but consistently, for years. Our Bodies, Our Selves, a sort of enlightened maintenance manual for the female body, is one example. Others that have sold steadily: Leon Uris' novels (Trinity, QB VII, Exodus), Tolkien's Hobbit (plus, the accompanying trilogy to a lesser degree), and Robert Pirsig's "inquiry into values," Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance, Mihle pointed out.

Textbook stores can be run in different ways

By ROBIN COSTELLO
PAMELA LINDMARK
and JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

This is the last in a three part series examining finances and operation of the textbook annex.

Basically, there are three methods of efficiently managing a university textbook store: institutionally (run by the university), as a student co-op, or a strategic combination of the two.

Each of these three alternatives presents its own advantages and difficulties, yet each aims at the most efficient means of providing students with their proper texts.

The idea of a student run textbook co-op has been suggested as a viable alternative to the present system of distributing texts at UMass.

While at first glance this idea appears to be an ideal solution, closer examination of the system reveals many serious problems in its institution, operation and management.

To begin, the establishment of any business on the scale of a university textbook store requires an initial outlay of many thousands of dollars in capital. Tremendous amounts of time and effort are essential to handle such a complex operation.

Students generally attend a university for about four years and during that time are mainly concerned with academia. They are not usually able to make the necessary investments in such a project. A student run operation would mean a complete turnover in management and employees at least every four years.

Publishing houses are often large companies which prefer to deal with professionals. They may be wary of dealing with students and therefore tend to be overly concerned with credit ratings. In addition, students would have to lease space for their operation thereby greatly increasing their expenses.

"The major flaw in dealing with the idea of a co-op is students tend to see this as an ideal solution," said Ray Verrey, manager of the textbook co-op at the University of Connecticut. "Here at UConn, we started from scratch about two and a half years ago. For our initial capital we charged each student a $35 deposit which we refund when they leave school."

The UConn co-op is managed by full-time professionals with 30-40 student employees. A Board of Students was established to represent the students and to supervise the administration of the co-op.

Currently the co-op is struggling. The initial costs of the store have been so great, the co-op has yet to offer any discount of the price of the textbooks or show a net profit.

Verrey predicts it will be about five more years before the store can begin to be run as a professional operation.

The University of Maine has employed the third alternative a combination of the advantages of an institutionally run textbook store with the desirable characteristics of a student co-op. Its innovative merger of the two has enabled them to offer students a seven to ten per cent discount on the price of textbooks. The store said it expects this discount to increase even further in the future.

Thomas Cole, manager of the store, explained that textbook sales are a break-even situation there. The sales of the rest of the store such as school supplies, tradebooks, etc. subsidise the textbook discounts. Cole said net profits of the store are minimal, however they are channeled back into the operation and serve to increase the textbook discount.

UMaine, like UConn, also has a student advisory board to make all policy decisions, handle security, discuss new product lines, and adjust gross margins. The board is also kept up to date on the financial situation of the store.

UMaine has been able to offer a discount on its textbooks for the past two years, even though it has been operating under the current system for five years. This is because only two years ago it finished paying off a large inherited debt which Cole says they never should have inherited in the first place. He declined to elaborate further on the nature of the debt.

The major obstacle preventing UMass from setting up the system like that at UMaine is the Campus Center debt. This debt requires the UMass University Store to contribute all its profits to the payment of the C.C. debt. This does not allow the University Store to channel its profits back into the system to reduce the cost of textbooks.

North Village Apartments is a modest, university run complex sandwiched between Presidential Apartments and Pufton Village. There are 240 flat-roofed units, most of them occupied by married students. Many of these students are from foreign countries. Kenji Kawasaki is one such student.

In late August Kawasaki, his wife Maiiko, and their infant daughter moved into Apt. J-23, on the West side of the village. Kawasaki was beginning a two-year leave of absence from a large petroleum firm in Chiba, Japan to do research in the UMass Polymer Science department. Three months passed. The Kawasaki family was well-liked.

About 75 yards west of J-block, on the outer edge of North Village, a drainage pipe empties into a grass-ringed culvert. The water is less than two feet deep. On the surface, snagged in a cluster of tall grass, is a tennis ball. On the sloping banks to the right of this depression is a childs' play shovel. And at the bottom of water is a bright orange toy. It looks like a toy snake.

Nobody is really sure. How did an infant girl get out of her parent's apartment, cover the distance to the culvert, without being seen? No one knows.

"We, the undersigned parents of the E triangle, feel that as tenants of North Village and productive members of the university community we can no longer tolerate these dangerous conditions. # Report favors changes for Mass. Ave., bus route

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Closing off part of Massachusetts Avenue near Southwest and relocating bus stops are among solutions suggested to a traffic problem at the intersection of Mass. Ave and Sunset in a report by the UMass Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

The report will be presented to the UMass Public Safety Committee in a meeting today.

Guy Fragala, from the dept. of Environmental Health and Safety, said the results of the study are "preliminary" and will present "the significant observations" the study noted.

The study noted drivers do not stop for pedestrians at the intersection, most pedestrians use one crosswalk more than the other two, most times buses stop before crosswalks blocking the vision of following traffic, and most traffic on Mass. Ave. continues straight on Mass. Ave rather than using Sunset Ave.

As an option to closing off Mass. Ave from Lincoln Ave to Commonwealth Ave., the study recommended allowing one crosswalk in the closed section.

Bus stops would be relocated west of the tunnel running under Mass. Ave. connecting Southwest with the rest of campus under the proposed solution. Walkways from the bus stop to the tunnel "can be conveniently installed" according to the report.

Interim solutions were also proposed until permanent solutions can be found. These included having buses stop after crosswalks, installation of warning signs and lights, reducing the number of crosswalks at the intersection from three to one, and enforcing driver observance of crosswalks.

Fragala, however, said he didn't "think they'll be effective."

Former FBI official shot

SUGAR HILL, N.H. [UPI] — William C. Sullivan, the FBI wire tap boss forced out of his assistant director's job because he questioned J. Edgar Hoover, was shot and killed yesterday in a deer hunting accident near his retirement home.

Officials said the son of a state police officer allegedly shot the former No. 3 man at the FBI in the neck or shoulder about a quarter of an hour before sunrise after mistaking him for a deer.

They said it was not known what charges, if any, would be filed against Robert Daniels, in his 20s, of nearby Lisbon, N.H.

Mason Butterfield, chief of law enforcement for the state Fish and Game Department, said he believed at least one FBI or former FBI officer was hunting in the White Mountains with Sullivan at the time. His department handles all hunting accidents in New Hampshire.

Butterfield said Daniels tried to give Sullivan first aid but "just couldn't do a thing for him... and the guy died."

Sullivan, who later described Hoover as a "master blackmailer," was forced to retire from a 30 year FBI career Oct. 6, 1971, after questioning Hoover's judgment.

Guy Lombardo the 75-year old bandleader whose smooth danceable music helped millions of Americans greet the New Year, was buried on Long Island yesterday.

More than 600 mourners paid their respects at a funeral mass at Holy Redeemer Church in Freeport, the Long Island community where Lombardo made his home for the last 40 years and where he pursued his hobby — speedboats.

Charles Kowal was excited and puzzled by his discovery of a strange object 2 billion miles out in space and other astronomers are reacting the same way.

Kowal, who is making a systematic survey of the solar system, first noticed the object orbiting the sun between Saturn and Uranus last week while checking photographs he had taken through the 48-inch telescope at Mount Palomer two weeks earlier.

"I was very excited," he said, "but at the same time very puzzled."

The Cal Tech astronomer said the object was too small — only 100 to 400 miles in diameter, about one tenth the size of the moon — to be a planet. He said it might be an asteroid, except all the known asteroids are found between Mars and Jupiter.

So he decided to call it a "mini-planet" while he and other scientists worked to figure out where the object came from, what it is made of and whether there's anything else out there like it.

A Belgian crossword fanatic yesterday unveiled what he called the biggest, toughest puzzle in the history of the game: 25,000 squares with 7,748 definitions.

Henri Blaise a 38-year-old expert from Liege in southern Belgium, said his French-language puzzle took him eight years to complete. The Guinness Book of Records lists the "largest crossword ever published" as one created in 1975 by Hank Koval, an American television producer, with 5,553 definitions and clues.

A gutsy 26-year-old former Paris actress and model was swept off her sloop in a storm but saved herself and is well on her way to becoming the first woman to circumnavigate the world solo via blustery Cape Horn.

Brigitte Oudry sailed into Sydney harbor this week, nearly halfway toward her goal. She set off in January from the French Mediterranean port of Sete, near Marseilles, leaving behind her husband and a 4-year-old daughter.

A funeral will be today for Thomas C. Barber 81, the famed police commander who for more than 30 years mourned the death of an unidentified girl killed in the worst fire in circus history.

Barber, who investigated the 1944 Hartford circus fire that killed 168 persons and injured 682 others died Tuesday at St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center.

The short, stocky policeman, who retired in 1962, gained national recognition for his investigation of the blaze. But he is probably better known for his tender showing of emotion for one of the victims.

Barber and another detective now dead, Edward T. Lowe, spent several frustrating years trying to identify a young girl believed to be about 7 years old who died in the Hartford circus fire.

They never did find out the identity of the girl, who became known as "Little Miss 1565" because of her morgue number.

But three times a year, Barber offered prayer and put flowers on the grave of the unknown girl.

Seasoned auto test drivers, used to dodging craters and scaling hills, are running into a different challenge at Chrysler's Chelsea Proving Grounds — deer and deer hunters.

Nelson Rooke president of United Auto Workers Local 1284, said yesterday that about 25 of the 250 drivers hit deer during the last year on the 4,000-acre rolling, wooded testing ground which lies in a lightly populated farm region about 55 miles west of Detroit.

Rooke, a test driver himself, said his worst experience was "once when one deer brushed the side of the car. It came running along parallel to me. The whole thing happened so fast that I didn't really get scared until it was all over."

There have been no major injuries to drivers, but one driver got glass in his eyes when his windshield shattered, Rooke said.

Shirley Jones and Marty Ingels a commercial producer, will be married Sunday in a private ceremony, the couple announced yesterday. Shaun Cassidy son of Miss Jones and the late Jack Cassidy will give the bride away.

Susan Ford daughter of former Pres. Gerald Ford will make her television debut in January as a regular on a daily, hour-long syndicated variety program hosted by Jim Nabors it was announced yesterday.

Feminist poet speaks at Hampshire College

By SUSAN O'NEIL
Collegian Staff

Marge Piercy, poet, author and feminist, brought her angry poetry to Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College last night.

In the main lounge, where no smoking was allowed because she was allergic to it, Piercy dressed totally in black, read several of her poems, such as "The Friend," "A September Afternoon at Four O'clock" and "Living in the Open."

Piercy's poetry, which is largely feminist, expresses anger at men, sex roles and destroyers of the land.

"The Token Woman" attacks the role of the woman with the "plastic smile" who "comes filled with goose down, able to double as a sleep and punching bag."

"The Rape" expresses the rage of a raped woman, who sees rape "like being run over by a truck and being asked afterward if you enjoyed it."

Piercy asked, after reading two poems, that the audience not applaud until the end of the reading because "it expends energy which is negative. I'd rather that you turned energy inward on yourself where it does good," she said.

Reading "To Be of Use," Piercy related her liking of the person who goes out and "plows the field" better than "parlor generals who have deserted the field."

Piercy explained herself in one of her poems through the eyes of a man sitting next to her on a plane. He looked her over, "seeing the face and body as fairly attractive" but not knowing how to react to the "mass of dark hair."

Originally from Detroit, Piercy began writing poetry at the age of 15, when she said she wrote "probably mostly about myself because that was all I knew about." Moving at that age into a larger family home with her own room prompted her to start writing about her newfound privacy.

"I look forward to the day when people won't understand the things I write about," she said. Much of this writing is about social and feiminine problems.

She writes, too, about the destruction of the land on Cape Cod, where she lives in a communal household. "River Road" talks about the construction of summer homes for "the psychiatrist and his wife and children" which is "empty nine months out of the year except for the few rats and occasional spider" that visit.

She also read "Concerning the Mathematician" which, she said, is a poem about "living with someone whose work you don't understand."

The general response of the audience was favorable. One woman went up to Piercy immediately following the reading and said she had read one of Piercy's books and it had "changed her life."

A reception followed in Merrill House where wine, beer, cheese and crackers were served.

Nuclear waste truck crashes in N.C.

RUTLAND, Vt. [UPI] — A tractor trailer carrying low-level radioactive wastes from the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant collided yesterday with a pickup truck on Interstate 95 in Rocky Mount, N.C., but no damage resulted, Vermont Yankee spokesmen said.

The 6 a.m. collision forced the trailor onto the median strip of the highway. The cask containing the radioactive material remained secure on the trailer and both remained upright, according to spokesman Lawrence Keyes.

State police bust 13 for gambling

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — State Police took into custody seven more persons to bring to an unlucky 13 the number of suspects arraigned yesterday in what authorities said was a $25 million gambling ring in Greater Boston.

All those arraigned pleaded innocent to a variety of gambling charges and were released in $1,000 bail in Middlesex and Norfolk County Superior Courts.

Stores may open 4 holiday Sundays

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis today signs into law legislation amending the state's antiquated Sunday blue laws to allow certain large stores to open on four Sundays during the Christmas shopping season.

Dukakis scheduled the bill signing ceremony for 1:30 p.m. in his office.

The legislation allows supermarkets and chain department stores to open on the four Sundays between Thanksgiving and Christmas. However, liquor stores would remain closed.

Carter energy plan wins victory

WASHINGTON [AP] — In a victory for President Carter's energy plan, a congressional conference committee yesterday killed a major Senate-passed exemption which would have allowed many industries to continue burning oil.

Carter's program is designed to force utilities and factories to switch from scarce oil and natural gas to coal.

Meanwhile, a second conference committee opened its consideration of energy tax issues by discussing proposed tax credits of up to $400 for home insulation. The conferees debated whether homeowners who pay no income tax should also be eligible for such payments from the government.

The House passed Carter's plan to require that coal be burned in most existing, as well as new, utilities and industrial plants. But the Senate inbill contained an exemption allowing all but the biggest industries to continue using oil as a boiler fuel.

Snow creeps into northwest America

NEW YORK [UPI] — A surprise early blizzard yesterday paralyzed cities, blocked highways and marooned motorists in mammoth drifts and swirls of blinding snow in the northern Midwest and Plains.

The storm came whipping out of the Rockies across parts of Nebraska, the Dakotas, Iowa and Minnesota. One sheriff's deputy said, "It caught everybody with their drawers down — us included."

The storm shut down Sioux City, Iowa, for all practical purposes, forced public and parochial schools to close in Omaha, Neb., and piled up 6-foot drifts prompting a snow emergency declaration in Sioux Falls, S.D.

Worker's Union sues J.P. Stevens

NEW YORK [UPI] — The Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union sued J.P. Stevens & Co. Inc. yesterday for allegedly engaging in a scheme to restrain trade and commerce by opposing the union's effort to organize and represent its workers.

The antitrust suit filed in U.S. District Court in New York alleged that Stevens conspired in anti-union activities with other textile firms, chambers of commerce, local and state governmental offices and agencies, national and local trade and industry associations and others.

Black man elected to Boston board

BOSTON [UPI] — Boston voters tossed out three vehement opponents of court-ordered school busing Tuesday and elected a black man to the school board for the first time since the turn of the century.

"Obviously Boston is somewhat over the busing issue, and the proof of it is the election of John O'Bryant," said George Regan, press aide to Mayor Kevin White.

The city's image as a center of liberalism was badly tarnished during the past three years, due to frequent violence and demonstrations stemming from busing of students under federal court orders to achieve desegregation of classrooms.

Unexplained killers may be Legionnaires'

ATLANTA [UPI] — Legionnaires' disease may take a toll of 2,000 to 6,000 American lives annually and the organism that causes it could be only one of many microbial killers yet to be unmasked by medical science, a Senate health subcommittee was told yesterday.

"Our best guess at this time is that between one-half per cent and one and one-half per cent of the unexplained pneumonias may be caused by this organism," said Dr. William Foege.

Socialist urges end to alienation in society

By DUANE A. STEVENS
Collegian Staff

UMass professor of economics Vaclov Holesovsky called alienation "a major problem in society" that can best be dealt with by a Democratic Socialist Ideology. Holesovsky, in a speech entitled "A Socialist Scenario for the Future of Mankind," told a crowd of 15 persons in the Campus Center there are several principles and policies which help to eliminate alienation in society.

The lecture was sponsored by the Young Peoples' Socialist League.

Holesovsky's analysis was grounded in certain general principles from the school of thought known as Democratic Socialism.

According to Holesovsky, Democratic Socialists recognize "the importance of a formal democratic political framework for pursuing the goals of socialism." Existing labor unions are recognized as crucial organizations for advancing the cause of socialism. The Democratic Socialist ideology also espouses the existence of authoritarian, despotic regimes which impede the forces of socialism. Especially so in the case of "the Soviet authoritarian society which endangers world peace."

The element which is central to the Democratic Socialists' vision of future societies is the overcoming of alienation. Holesovsky said in general, "a state should be created where people feel at home with each other, with their social institutions and with all other forms of societal organization," he said.

Specifically, alienation which stems from social divisions within the society (i.e. classes) should be dealt with. The Democratic Socialist alternative would be a totally classless society. In addition, alienation which is inherent in social institutions is seen as an obstacle to the construction of a socialist society. Regarding this aspect of the problem, Holesovsky said "the capitalist economic system is an example of an institution which has become master of society." In a more global sense, alienation which has developed from the division of humanity into nation states must be overcome. This process of eliminating alienation between culturally distinct peoples Holesovsky termed as "the creation of an integrated humanity."

The concluded portion of the lecture was devoted to a partial analysis of policy measures which should be promoted by the Democratic Socialists. For example, the welfare system in the United States should be altered to become more attuned to real human needs. The labor unionist struggle for the advancement of workers' rights must be supported in order that the objectives of the Democratic Socialist school achieve success.

Do it yourself at the Craft Shop

Want to get into lapadiary but don't know what it means? Like to make a belt but afraid of getting hung up on a loop? The Craft Shop in room 206 of the Student Union Building can solve these and other hassles for do-it-yourselfers.

"The whole purpose of this place is to make it yourself," Lucas Feininger a craft shop employee said. "Any UMass student can come in and make something."

The 'something' students can make ranges from pottery, ceramics, woodworking, pewter to silk screening designing and lapadiary (stonecutting).

Penny Worman, Craft Shop supervisor since 1970, estimates only 25 per cent of the student body uses the shop. But that 25 per cent has made approximately 20,000 belts, she added.

Worman said people think they have to know something to come in here but they don't, we will help them right from the start. "Most of the people who came in here don't know anything about making things.

Help at the craft shop comes two ways. "Most of the information someone needs can be gotten right over the counter," says Worman.

"And you can come in anytime for general instruction."

All instruction is free, as is use of the tools. The only things students pay for is the cost of the material. "Prices are cheaper than anyplace else, we don't make any money, we break even," Worman said. The Craft Shop is an RSO group funded by the Student Senate.

Leather crafts take up most of the room in the shop, with about 90 per cent of the people who come in making things for gifts especially now before Christmas, Worman said.

Worman pointed out the shop's other uses, "we do a big business in repairing things like eye-glasses and ski-bindings."

For those who think it takes days to make everything, Worman estimated the average belt takes between an hour-and-a-half and two hours to make, with more time involved for more intricate designs.

Worman says people ripping off a small tool from the shop is a problem. "We have minimum tools and everybody shares. If we have 10 of something and someone takes one, thats one-tenth of our supplies. It's not a bad problem, but it makes me feel bad because it's free for everybody to use," she said.

Besides leather tools, the shop also has a stone cutting and polishing machine for mounting stones in jewelry, as well as four pottery wheels. Two of the wheels were made in the shop.

The Craft Shop is open Monday thru Thursday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Friday from 10 to 6 p.m. and Saturdays from 12 to 4 p.m.

Five Colleges receives trust fund

An annual $50,000 can be expected from the million dollar trust fund recently given to Five Colleges, Inc. from the estate of the late Grace M. Neill of Woodstock, Conn.

Jefferson Murphy, Five College Coordinator said final details were still being worked out for new ways of investing the sum. "The income will be used for Five College visiting faculty appointments and we anticipate funding several positions in the Fall of 1978," he said.

Final decisions will be made by the directors of the Five College Corporation but Murphy said, "the five colleges already have a successful joint faculty appointment program so we would like to use the money to continue to attract distinguished visiting scholars to the area."

The fund, considered the largest single donation ever made to the corporation will be called the James E. Neill fund in honor of Miss Neill's father. She was a 1912 graduate of Smith College.

Although the Recognized Student Organization office claims that this year's management of the Greenough Snack Bar has run up a $2,500 debt, managers of the snack bar insist they have made a profit of $1,000, according to Mark Zinan, president of the Central Area Council.

Zinan said yesterday that there was a $2,500 debt from last year's management of the snack bar, but that has since been paid by the Undergraduate Student Senate. As long as the snack bar is making money, Zinan said the area council will not get involved in its management.

Zinan made his remarks yesterday to clear up any misconceptions that may have resulted from Monday night's council meeting, which was reported on page two of Tuesday's Collegian.

Presence on Caucus misguided

By EDWARD COHEN

The case of Craig Sherwood is one which poses a number of problems for the movement of human rights in this country. Craig Sherwood, a white student, is presently a member of the Third World Caucus of the Student Senate. His presence there is an error since he does not represent in any way the constituency which the caucus is designed to represent. Attempts to ask him to leave have been met with cries of reverse racism, and he has managed to further complicate the issue by pointing to his Jewish identity and the fact that he is oppressed.

This is not the first time that this type of incident has occurred. During the Bakke Debate held several weeks ago, a Mr. Green referred to his Jewish identity in his defense of Bakke's position that he was denied a place in the University of Cal. Davis Medical School because of an affirmative action program at that same California school. Mr. Sherwood is attempting to define himself as a "Third World" student, and therefore, like Bakke, is challenging the institution of Affirmative Action in this country. I feel that Mr. Sherwood is a hypocrite, because only a hypocrite would attempt to point to his own oppression and then oppress others. By this and other actions, it is seen that he does not have the slightest interest in trying to deal with oppression, such as racism, sexism, and exploitation.

In America, Third World people, or non-white people, are victims of unemployment, poverty, improper health care, poor schools, etc. which is very much higher proportionately than that of white America, not to mention murder by lynching, both legal and illegal. Also, in America, being Jewish means being thought of as belonging to a white ethnic group which enjoys all the privileges of other white ethnic groups. Jewish people are victims of anti-Semitism, which is a European concept of prejudice against Jews; but in America, anti-Semitism does not have anywhere near the social, cultural, political, or economic ramifications that racism does.

It is thought that because of anti-Semitism, Jewish people would be more willing, to assist in ripping down the walls of racism, sexism, and exploitation which oppress non-white people, but there are too many individuals like Craig Sherwood who use their Jewish identity as an excuse to assist in maintaining or building those walls even higher. This fact reinforces the idea that he is an oppressor. The Third World Caucus of the Student Senate wants Sherwood to resign because they know that his resignation would be important for their constituency. So if Mr. Sherwood really wants to fight oppression, he should resign from the Third World Caucus, and ask what could be done to aid in the fight against racism, sexism and exploitation. His continued presence on the Caucus is a racist act that serves to ally him with those oppressive forces found in American society and throughout the world.

We're all thinking the same thing

By CLIFFORD MONAC
and NORA CHOROVER

Why am I here? Every student must have thought about this question. As students, we believe that higher education is important for two reasons. First, it serves as a means for our moving ahead towards achieving specific future goals. We expect the university to provide a step in the right direction and to help us in attaining a comfortable and fulfilling life. Second, the social life which the university environment offers is one which will not be available to us more than once. There is a sense of shared freedoms and experiences which come as a result of our being "on our own."

Although we feel a sense of shared experiences with others, we each hold our individual goals separate and unique. Because we come to school primarily to receive a wage (in the form of a grade) we do not share a common bond in valuing education for the sake of education. There is rarely a thirst for knowledge on our part. Instead, there is the desire to attain a good grade and to get out. This way of thinking discourages our relating to other students about what we are learning and goes against the concept of an intellectual community.

The nature of our education is such that we are continually put in a position of competition with one another. In the natural sciences for example, tests are made oppressively hard and students are then scaled in relation to other scores. We feel competitive in terms of our attainment of goals and see others' success as our failure. Given this academic atmosphere we are forced into a feeling of loneliness, and it becomes difficult for us to picture ourselves working together rather than apart. This notion of our being separate entities at odds with one another leads us to support a student government which is in agreement with this situation. What arises as a result is a form of government which does not truly represent the student body. Individuals are elected into office and the process of decision making is then left in their hands. They alone must contend with the ineffective structure of the S.G.A. Budget cuts, for example, have eliminated programs against the will of the Student Government Association. The only means by which the S.G.A. was able to express the students' objectives was by staging a rally which in the long run proved ineffective in altering the administration's proposed policy.

Presently our government does not require time input on our part, and we feel able to give our academic and social situations their needed priority. Many of us believe that, even if given enough time, there is very little effect that we ourselves could possibly have in terms of instituting important changes. Given this feeling of powerlessness, we are comfortable with the existence of a structure which limits any kind of fundamental change. Since our present government does not provide a means for rapid alterations, we feel secure in that no decisions will be made which will result in an infringement of our freedoms.

As we live our day to day lives we often feel that there are things we would like to have changed. Although we may often share many of the same grievances, at present we have no means by which we can communicate these grievances among one another. Should any real problem arise, affecting all of us, it would be difficult for us to come together in an effort to solve it. Many people would account for this difficulty by stating that we at the university are apathetic. Used in this way, the term apathy implies an attitude of just "not caring." In reality, this does not exist. We are continually grappling with problems, yet because we exist as isolated individuals we do not have the opportunity to get together and see the similarities in the problems we each encounter. The competitive atmosphere places these similarities in the limelight and forces us into situations which make it difficult for us to come together collectively for our individual gain.

We are correct in believing that alone we can achieve little in the way of important change. Change occurs when individuals get together and direct their efforts towards a specific goal. If we begin to examine those areas where we each feel the greatest amount of frustration, we will see that we all have a lot in common. These areas provide a starting point for our coming together and beginning to realize how collectivisation can be beneficial. What is needed is a permanent structure by which communication and decision making can occur from the bottom up.

This editorial has not thus far addressed the issue of unionization. Although we, the authors, are very much in favor of unionization, we have deliberately skirted the issue in order to avoid further fragmentation of the student body. We believe that attempts to unionize students at UMass have had the effect of breaking people into two groups; those for and those against. Our purpose in writing this commentary was to try and look more closely at the way students think and our hopes are that this may spur on the idea that students need to get together. We believe that unionization is the best way to make unity a reality.

Should we celebrate?

jerry rogers

Tomorrow will be the eleventh Friday of the semester, the end of the tenth complete week of classes. It is most noteworthy, however, because it marks the start of a three day weekend. The value of these kinds of weekends is well documented.

This eleventh Friday, also the eleventh day of November, will coincide with the celebration of Veterans' Day in Massachusetts and some other rebellious states. The value of this holiday is not as well documented as the value of a three day weekend. Many of us do not think of the holiday as a day worth celebrating for any particular reason, despite our cheers for another day off. The federal government, after all, thinks of it only as a Monday off (the feds switched their recognition of the day to a Monday in October).

Why has the holiday been given such short shrift?

Most likely it is because the holiday is war related

Why has the holiday been given such short shrift?

Most likely it is because the holiday is war related. While the theme of the Fourth of July is independence and not war, Veterans' Day stirs up memories of the worst facet of war — the deaths and maimings of human beings.

Certainly war leaves much to be desired. There is no reason why people should rejoice over death, degradation, and the inequitable effects of war on the working classes (the ability of the upper classes to remove themselves from war is well documented). The stopping of fascism and the maintenance of freedom is the oft proclaimed reason for most wars, yet the validity of the claim is just as often very hard to prove.

The sacrifices of millions of working class citizens can not be written off so easily though. For it is they, not the capitalist war mongers, for whom the holiday is most noteworthy. They are the people who have to live with the sadness and bitterness that has resulted from seemingly senseless war. I offer no counterarguments to the claim that war is senseless. It seems unfortunate, however, that the only way we can deal with memories of war are framed by either the acceptance or rejection of imperialism.

Those who wish to mark a day such as Veterans' Day as a special day are often thought supportive of the kind of imperialism characterized by the United States' involvement in Vietnam and Korea.

This type of thinking made me feel guilty on the Fourth of July during the bicentennial, when I felt stirred by the nation's celebrations (despite my disgust with all the accompanying media hype and public relations).

I could not accept those feelings as entirely valid because I'm sure my stirrings were not rooted in imperialism.

Whether or not war related holidays can ever be validly celebrated is a subject I can not summarily comment on. I think it important, however, to remember the sacrifices made by many people who approached World Wars with benificent intentions (many later comdemned the U.S. involvement in Viet Nam), and I hope that no similar holidays will be marked on our future calendars.

Let's see. So far this semester I've lost a jacket, three socks (my only matching pair), a visor, and a notebook. But, a car? I know I parked it here. Oh no, they did it to me again.

There goes another bet. I wagered that by parking next to the Student Auto Workshop in the lower Campus Center Garage a tow would be impossible. I thought there just wasn't enough clearance for a tow truck to sneak in. I guess I get against insurmountable odds; the resourcefulness of Amherst Towing.

Yes, Amherst Towing is ruthlessly efficient, like a well-oiled Winchester. They swoop down and rustle the grazing steeds. They brand it with a $16 dollar reclaimer fee and the Parking Office tatoos on a $10 ticket. "Ah, they got me."

I venture down to Amherst Towing's distant corral to redeem my car. A bee hive blonde secretary buzzes, "Sorry, no checks or credit cards. We've been burned by students too many times." I console her, "Gee, that's too bad. Amherst Towing has furnished students with nothing but pleasure. Well, what the hell should I pay you with, Spanish Bullion?"

Amherst Towing refuses to co-operate with students or the university. Earlier this year the Collegian asked Amherst Towing what they thought of the growing concern about their tactics and a need for a student-run towing service. Amherst Towing replied in their usual diplomatic tone, "we're not giving you any information."

What are our options? One, we could camouflage our cars to look like parking lot attendants. Second, someone could invent a "fold - up - and - put - in - your - pocket" automobile. Or third, we could park in the Student Senate Office until they adopt a student-run organization to provide a more compassionate towing service.

Revenge, justice, fate. Maybe Amherst Towing will soon know the feeling of a "stubbed tow."

'On the other hand' utterly tasteless

To the Editor:

Picked up a copy of On the Other Hand, read it, and am left wondering how the faculty and students of the French and Italian departments feel about their field of study being symbolized by an obscene gesture, not to mention all the native speakers and children of native speakers. I have difficulty imagining where in the world the heads of the illustrator(?) and editor were at for them to produce and permit to be published, such sheer crap.

How about that drawing of a hand being sprayed with "Cruex" for the Short Studies-P.E.P. people? Or the saluting arm for Germans everywhere and a feeble political cartoon of a gypsy-type for Slavic Languages. A distorted crescent-headed creature flashing a victory sign for Asian Studies, I quite fail to understand. Two of my favorites: a drawing of a pencil outline of a hand a' la kindergarten with the caption, "To be placed in front of the Fine Arts Center: $25,000" and one of the book, The Total Woman being read for the Art and Home Economics departments, respectively. Does this mean to say that art is just a big rip-off and that to be a "real" woman, one must take Home Ec.? Or are we meant to be amused?

The whole damn booklet is sprinkled with trite, irrelevant, utterly tasteless, biased and stereotypic to a moronic degree drawings; I refuse to call them illustrations. I am thoroughly disgusted — at such simplistic, ignorant and irresponsible publishing on this campus or anywhere else and, to top it off, in the guise of a public service.

Apology for illustrations, omissions

To the Editor:

I, and the staff, apoligize for some of the illustrations printed within the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide. It was certainly never our intent to insult or demean any individuals or groups who may have so taken offense. It is quite understandable that, given their ambiguous context, certain drawings have implied more than was intended. We regret our insensitivity.

Upon return from the publisher, the Guide was discovered to have several deletions. The index (page 4), credits, a design caption, correct material placement, and an important differenciation among evaluations had all disappeared. The evaluative essays for professors Ashton, Noland, Dolbceare, Nober, Depuy, Key, Chevan, Syed, Goldberg, Sulzner, Seymour, Kuppurman, Bert which had been sent to the printer with a mark "the opinion of one student" are not so distinguished in the final product. The following people deserve credit for their contribution to the project: director, Richard Baga; writers, Joseph Connolly, Karen Hakala, Laurie Wood, Steven Freeman, Marilyn Mankowsky, Art work, A. Id, Mitchell Singer with Roberta Steward; Photography, James Gagne, Marilyn Mankowsky, and co-worker, Karl Allen.

Clearly, both the subjective, individually written evaluation and the Collegian based evaluation may not be as representative as summaries dependent upon faculty cooperation. The following statement was deleted at the bottom of page 5, "when employed as the sole written comment (5) Collegian quotes are pritted in their entirety without pretension to summarization.

One mistake has come to our attention in our evaluation of Spanish Course 302A. There is a mixup of data in this particular case. We apologize to Mrs. Manserrate.

Academic Affairs encourages all suggestions, with regard to the next Guide issue, to be sent to the committee, Room 422, Student Union. It would be especially helpful if we could ascertain opinion concerning 1)whether evaluations should include sample size (as opposed to those interested checking back with the instructor under question); 2)which evaluative questions might be improved on the Collegian and University surveys.

Thanks to 'donor days' supporters

To the Editor:

We are most grateful to all who helped to make the Blood Donor Days, November 1, November 2, and November 3, at the University of Massachusetts so successful. For the three days, 722 pints of blood were collected; there were also an additional 76 donors deferred for health reasons. Of the 722 donors, 147 were first-time donors!!!

We wish to thank the student members of APO and Gamma Sig who helped with the recruiting, the publicity, and who came when they could to help in the Donor Room.

We wish to commend the Faculty Wives for their tremendous efforts in "putting the whole thing together." Helen Sternheim was General Chairman, assisted by Eunice Progulske, last year's chairman. Grace Rhodes was chairman of the Canteen, again, as she has been for many, many years. She was able to find help among the Senior Citizens of Amherst. Faith Conlon took charge of the donor appointments, Doris Plagenhoef recruited volunteer nurses and Louise Rivers found volunteer typists. Much of the food was donated by Saga Foods.

Finally, junior and senior student nurses gave their time to help to take temperatures and pulses.

We feel that the University of Massachusetts community at Amherst can be justifiably proud of this great cooperative effort— there is a great and immediate need.

Thank you, all.

Dorothy C. Perhine

Play on names plagues RSB

To the Editor:

Recently some students from a calculus class came up to the Revolutionary Student Brigade table in the campus center. They wanted to know if the Brigade had anything to do with their calculus professor having a pie thrown in his face during class.

The RSB did not, but the confusion comes from a letter in the Collegian last week that encouraged students to "pie a pig" in the name of the "Revolutionary Three Stooges Brigade".

We feel this was an unfortunate play on names. First it maligns the Revolutionary Student Brigade and secondly, it maligns the Three Stooges. The Stooges were funny, this was not. This pie throwing business sounds more like a publicity stunt for Table Talk pies than a political statement. I guess the Yips couldn't figure out that pies are much better in your stomach than on someone else's face.

Sugarloaf Mt. Club hosts NEAAU meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The Sugarloaf Mountain Athletic Club will be sponsoring the New England Amateur Athletic Association (NEAAU) cross country championship Sunday at 12:30 p.m. on the athletic fields above NOPE.

The race, being held in Western Mass. for the first time in five years according to meet director Ed Sandifer, is open to any interested runners, including women.

Entry fee is $1 before Sunday, and $1.50 for post entries.

The course will be a three-mile loop through the woods behind Sylvan Area and through the orchards. The runners will do the loop twice, for a total of six miles.

A special trophy will be presented to the first woman finisher. Individual and team awards will also be given for the men.

Sandifer said he expected about 80 runners to compete, including teams from the Greater Boston Track Club, last year's champs; the North Medford Club, the largest in the state; and possibly the Boston Athletic Association, which sponsors the Boston Marathon.

Top runners will be Bob Hodge, Vin Fleming and Fred Doyle of the GBTC, and Larry Olsen of the NMTC.

The host team boasts ex-UMass harrier Tom Derderian; Sandifer and Bob Fisher, both math grade students; Tony Wilcox, an exercise science grad student who finished 15th in the 1976 Boston Marathon; Bob Rosen; and "whoever else shows up."

The GBTC is favored to repeat, but Sandifer said SMAC could take second.

★ UM will stop Burnham

defensive coordinator Bob Pickett is not in the least worried about UNH quarterback Allen using prime receiver Lee Pope to pick on newcomers Sullivan, Harrington, and McInnes.

"This is a good example of players, who for some reason, knew at the beginning of the season they would be substituting but because of injury, at a moments notice, have come in and done the job — not doing it adequately but superbly," said Pickett.

Harrington, a senior, has labored on the bench for three years but is now starting in place of the injured John Beerworth and since the Harvard game is quietly but most convincingly doing his job as weak safety.

"Ever since the Harvard game, Joe is a leader in that backfield. He knows what he's doing and is very proud of his performance. Kevin Sullivan, a sophomore, has stepped in, taken on a lot of tough receivers, and has not allowed one touchdown pass against him," said Pickett.

"We may not have the greatest talent man per man for a total unit, but I can't think of any defensive unit that's better," he said.

Already, such players as linemen Bemis and Willis; linebackers McCarty and John McDonald; and secondary men Croasdale and Sullivan have been named to the Yankee Conference weekly selections for defensive Player of the Week on various occasions.

Pickett said he can't compare this year's unit to the defensive unit of two years ago which was in the same situation, facing UNH for the YanCon crown.

"You really can't compare our team this year to the team two years ago because of the different schedules and player personnel. But I will say this year's defense has done everything we, as coaches, have asked and more. They are an extremely cooperative bunch and very serious about practice."

We are very confident that UNH will be stopped by the players we have," said Pickett.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10 - Born today, you are ambitious and determined, with an ability to maneuver other people into the decisions and actions you need for success. This doesn't mean that you take advantage of people, or have no interest in them. For every service rendered you are willing and eager to render a service back. In fact, you often repay debts with more than you owe. It is the large not the small issues that concern you.

A cautious spender, but not miserly, you will always spend what is necessary in order to achieve your aims where good health, entertainment, education, and daily shelter are concerned. Where you draw the line is at spending what is entirely unproductive. You refuse to give to any charity without first conducting your own thorough investigation. You do not believe in paying for what you do not receive, i.e. children's allowances.

You would make an excellent parent, instilling in the young thrift, honesty, determination and ambition, along with a knowlege of one's limitations and a love of knowledge. You pride yourself on your open-mindedness and open-heartedness; and your children can depend upon this to bring you always over to their side in terms of love, if not in deed.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 11

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - Take a practical stand when asked for your views today. Children may need special guidance late in the day.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Guard against one who seems determined to beat you at your own game. Practice up on finer points.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - You should find a happier state of affairs at home today. Be content with improvement; don't ask for more now.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - Intellect without affection leaves loved ones cold. Let family and friends know how you feel about them.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - Plan your financial security now. To wait longer may be to lose out on an opportunity for gain in the near future.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) You'll meet wit ing degrees of today. Don't be ala another moves ah you; it's only temp

UMass's QB

Rags to riches

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Rags to riches.

It's America's favorite story. Everyone loves the tale of the Horatio Alger types. The guy who comes out of nowhere to fame and success.

Mike Fallon fits the part.

The UMass quarterback has risen from relative obscurity to a place in the Minuteman record books this season.

And just six years ago, little did anyone know that Fallon would even be playing collegiate football.

"I never played football in high school," said Fallon, a 1971 Catholic Memorial graduate. "I broke my arm in my sophomore year, and I didn't try out my last three years."

Upon graduation, Fallon plunged directly into the working world. In his spare time, he played quarterback in the Boston Park League for two years. It was there that his collegiate career was launched.

"A friend who saw me play there recommended me to some people down at Ferrum Junior College," Fallon said. "I went down there with no scholarship to play football."

And he did just that. Fallon led the Virginia school to the national junior college championship in 1974, his sophomore year.

After his two-year stint at Ferrum, the 6'1", 199-lb. signal -caller was recruited by several Southern schools, but his heart belonged in his home state.

"I really wanted to go to UMass," Fallon revealed. "I sent them some films, I guess they liked what they saw, and I came here."

But in his first fall on campus (1975), the Roxbury native was not a member of the varsity. Joining a team which had veterans Fred Kelliher and Brian McNally as its two top quarterbacks, Fallon sat the season out.

"I was red-shirted," he said. "But I did play on the 'look team' (a team which scrimmages the varsity in practice)."

After his year of adjustment to the UMass system, Fallon was elevated to second-string last season. But not until McNally suffered an injury in the eighth game of the campaign did Fallon have a full opportunity to exhibit his talent.

After McNally groggily went to the sidelines against Holy Cross with a slight concussion, Fallon was rushed into service. He brought his team back from a 7-0 first quarter deficit to a 21-14 win by rushing for 112 yards in 19 carries. For his performance, he was awarded the Most Valuable Player trophy for the game.

Assured of a starting job in 1977, Fallon went through pre-season practice with optimism. But his dreams of glory seemed to vanish in the first game of the season when he limped off the field at Army with an injured knee.

"They told me it looked really bad," he said. "They wanted to put it in a cast, but if I knew if they did that, I wouldn't be able to play. And since it's my senior year I didn't want that."

Fallon skipped the next game, but came back against Harvard to engineer a 17-0 UMass victory. For his efforts, he was awarded the ABC offensive player of the week laurels.

From then on, it's been smooth sailing for the 24-year-old senior. Fallon leads Yankee Conference quarterbacks in touchdown passes with 10, and has completed 52 per cent of his passes for 744 yards. He has had just five tosses intercepted, while connecting on an average of seven per game.

Along the way, he set a new UMass record for TD tosses in a game (five vs. Youngstown State). And after that exhibition, he won the 'Golden Helmet' trophy, emblematic of the top ECAC Division II player of the week.

He also won his second straight MVP trophy from last Saturday's 28-6 Holy Cross victory.

And now, with "definitely the biggest game of my life" facing him Saturday, Fallon would like nothing better than to make up for past UMass losses and take home the Beanpot.

"It doesn't matter that the game's against UNH," he claimed, "as long as it's for the Yankee Conference championship."

And if the Minutemen do win, then the perfect ending will have been written for the Mike Fallon story.

Swimmers to raise funds

NOPE pool will be alive with action tonight, when the members of the men's and women's swim teams participate in the first annual UMass "Crawl-a-Thon."

From 4-6 p.m., an estimated 45 swimmers and divers along with some "surprise celebrity swimmers" will be attempting to swim for two hours or a maximum of 200 laps, according to women's coach John Nunelly.

The purpose of the "Crawl-a-Thon" is to raise money for equipment and an intensive training program over intersession for the two teams, Nunelly said.

Nunelly and the men's coach, Bei Melamed, hope to raise around $1,000 from the event.

Money will be raised through pledges obtained by the swimmers from businesses, friends, parents, teachers, and relatives. The male and female swimmer who raises the most money will get a free dinner at a local restaurant.

Everyone is invited to come cheer on the swimmers.

2nd seed stickers open tourney

Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team, seeded second in the New England Regional tournament, will play unseeded UMaine-Orono today at 10:30 a.m. in the first round of the tourney at Harvard.

The tourney's top two squads of the field of 16, eight of which are seeded, will journey to Colorado for the Nationals later this month. The final round will be played at Harvard Saturday.

The Minutewomen hope to escape last year's fate of losing in the opening round of the single elimination tournament.

Two years ago, the maroon and white lost the opportunity to face-off at the Nationals by the slim margin of penetration time. In case of a tie, the greater time within the striking circle determines the victor. In UMass's case only the clock stopped the Minutewomen from continuing post-season play.

The UMass stickers were winless in their last three games after the tournament rankings were announced.

"We've had a big letdown," commented coach Judith Davidson.

With three contests remaining, the Minutewomen entered the UConn game with an impressive 8-2-1 record. But UMass was shutout, 2-0, by the Huskies, who are ranked fourth in New England.

The Minutewomen's last two games resulted in ties. Laura O'Neal's goal evened the Springfield contest, 1-1, last Friday. The makeup clash with Bridgewater State College, the last regular season game, was a scoreless deadlock.

This lack of scoring concerns Davidson. The UMass mentor may add an additional player to the offensive line in today's game to battle this situation. Davidson said she is willing to risk the chance of foes scoring more often, but only in the hopes that the Minutewomen's scoring will increase.

Co-captains Cheryl Meliones and Lynsie Wickman led the scoring department with eight and four goals respectively this year. Laura O'Neal contributed three tallies, while Julie McHugh had two goals. Sue Kibling and Ginger Bulman both added one.

UMass's defense has been outstanding all year. The Minutewomen have allowed only seven goals in 14 games. UMass goalie Kathy Gipps has an incredible 0.5 goals against average. Gipps improved upon her 1.5 goals against average of last year.

Defensive positions were filled by Sue Kreider at right link, Judy Kennedy at left link, Jody Wickman at left back, Kelley Salls at right back, Gayle Hutchinson at sweeper and Gipps in goal. The defense's only lapse came against first ranked New Hampshire, when it allowed three goals.

Although UMass is seeded second, the road to the Nationals will not be easy. The Minutewomen's contest against third-ranked Colgate ended in a scoreless tie.

Yale, seeded eighth, tied the UMass stickers, 1-1, earlier in the season. Julie McHugh scored the lone goal.

The maroon and white have the privilege of playing on Harvard's best field, which may aid their performance.

Booters bypassed; no tournament berth

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

"It's over. Dartmouth was selected over us," said a dejected Larry Aronson over the telephone late last night. The senior co-captain of the UMass soccer team had just learned that the Minutemen were overlooked by the selection committee for the Division One New England Tournament.

The news spells bitter disappointment for the booters, who have turned in a brilliant 9-4 season thus far and will have to play an anti-climactic game against Providence College here on Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

UMass was ranked fourth in the latest Division I poll, while Dartmouth was ranked sixth.

"They (Dartmouth) tied Brown University (ranked first in NE) and had a stronger schedule," explained disappointed UMass coach Russ Kidd. "We kind of figured that they might get in."

This will be the first time that UMass faces the Providence soccer team in its history. "They're an up and coming team," said UMass coach Russ Kidd. "They've given some tough teams a real hard team as of late."

According to Kidd, the Friars are coming off of two tough losses to both UConn and URI by scores of 1-0 and 2-1 respectively. URI is ranked third in New England while UConn is a perennial N.E. powerhouse.

"I saw them at the beginning of the year and they really didn't look that potent," said Kidd. "I don't have that much information on them, but apparently they've been coming on strong in the last few games."

With no tournament berth, Saturday's game will mark the last game for five UMass seniors. Aronson, Ed Niemiec, Mark Hodgdon, Andrew Moore, and William Sorenson will be suiting up for the final time in front of a UMass soccer audience.

"UMass soccer has come a long way and it would be nice to play the final game in front of a nice crowd," said Aronson. "It's difficult to imagine that it's all over on Saturday since we weren't selected for the tournament."

Saturday's game will also be the first action that co-captain Ed Niemiec has seen in a while. Originally thought to be out for the season, Niemiec has seen his thigh injury take a turn for the better and has started to practice.

Smoken' Joe to fight Shavers in comeback

NEW YORK [UPI] – Former World Heavyweight Champion Joe Frazier is all but set for a $1 million nationally televised comeback fight against fourth-ranked slugger Earnie Shavers in February, according to promoter Bob Arum of Top Rank, Inc.

"We'll know all the details later today or within the next couple of days," Arum said yesterday. "We're still talking to the networks."

Frazier, his singing career somewhat stalled, is anxious to return to the ring for the first time since his fifth round non-title kayo by George Foreman 17 months ago. He has reportedly been working hard in his Philadelphia gym and is around 221 pounds, about 10 more than his prime fighting weight.

"He feels he can take Shavers," said Butch Lewis, Arum's partner. "And he thinks it would lead to a fourth fight with Muhammad Ali. Joe wants Ali bad."

Frazier will be going against the advice of nearly everyone around him if he returns to fighting. His family wants him to stay retired, his manager Eddie Futch wants him to and so does Lewis, even though he'll promote the bout for his friend.

"As a friend, I don't want him to fight," said Lewis, "but he told me 'Butch, we're friends but I'm gonna fight' and I said I'd handle it for him."

Frazier, who will be 34 in January, is not in dire need of money, according to friends, although he has lost money on his venture into singing with his group "The Knockouts." What he seems to miss is the action.

Perhaps Frazier should hear what Futch has to say before coming back against Shavers, who nearly kayoed Ali in the 15th round of their Sept. 29 bout before dropping a unanimous decision.

Futch, who stopped Frazier from continuing in the 14th round when he was blinded by his own blood in the "Thrilla in Manila" against Ali three years ago, told the story at the weigh-in for the Ken Norton-Jimmy Young fight last week in Las Vegas. Futch's voice was soft but firm.

"Joe called me on the phone a few months ago and said he'd been working out and asked if I would come out and take a look at him," Futch said.

"I started to tell him I didn't think it was such a good idea that he be coming back but he said 'just come out and watch me work.'

"Well, a few days later I went over to his gym and watched him go a few rounds in the ring and on the bag and frankly I've got to admit I was impressed.

"He was in much better shape than I expected and he was moving and working well. He'd gotten heavier but now his weight was pretty good. He wants to come back. He doesn't need the money. He just misses it. He misses the training, the work. He misses the whole thing."

Futch shrugged when someone asked whether he thought Joe would come back.

"I don't know," he answered. "I told him I didn't see any future in it. I don't think he should. But I love him, he's my friend. If he wants me, I'll be with him.

That's about the attitude of everyone around Frazier.

THE GAME

Kevin Cummings won't drop many balls like this one, crowds of defenders notwithstanding. The senior tight end, along with junior wide receiver Dennis Dent (9), will be expected to carry the brunt of the load in Saturday's clash with the New Hampshire Wildcats. Dent, a speedster, has been coach Dick MacPherson's long threat this season, while Cummings has been a clutch receiver and very steady — steadily breaking records. (Staff photo by Bob Higgins)

UM-UNH battle for Yankee title

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Actually, it's no bigger than the battle of Gettysburg, the Manhattan Project, and the Bunker Hill monument put together.

It is dwarfed when compared to man's first step on the moon and Columbus' discovery of America.

"It" may very well be the biggest game a UMass football team has played since the Peil Pennington Era. It is the UNH game this Saturday at Durham. Game time is 1 p.m.

The key to the game may not be New Hampshire's All-Everything halfback, Bill Burnham. At least UNH head coach Bill Bowes thinks this way.

"UMass is exceptionally strong against the run. There hasn't been a team this season that's been able to establish a rushing attack against them," said Bowes.

Although the Wildcats' offensive line is in a comparable weight class to the Minutemen's defensive front, UMass's quickness has affected Bowes' game plan.

"We don't expect to dominate the line of scrimmage," he said. "Jeff (Jeff Allen, the New Hampshire quarterback) must throw effectively for us to win."

UMass coach Dick MacPherson plans to run "business as usual" as far as his offense is concerned.

"If we run, we can pass better," quoted MacPherson from the Little Red Book of Chairman Lombardi. "We obviously have the passing game to go to if we have to."

On defense, the Wildcats plan nothing to astound the visiting Minutemen.

"We'll line up and see what happens," stated Bowes.

MacPherson offered a similar strategy.

"There's no question about it — they have a fine passing and running attack," noted MacPherson. "We've got to be able to stop any of those things, and I feel we have the people to do it."

UMass will not go out of its way to put pressure on the experienced Allen.

"He's a senior quarterback that handles the blitzes by checking-off. He knows where his receivers are," warned the UMass coach.

Bowes also mentioned the blitz.

"UMass teases you a bit," said the New Hampshire mentor. "They let you complete a few passes, then they blitz. Before you know it, they have you second and 20, third and 15, and you're in trouble."

Bowes may be teasing UMass a bit in failing to mention his top receiver, Lee Pope. The Roxbury native has been UNH's top receiver for the last two years, and is leading the club in receptions once again this season. He is expected to be Allen's prime target.

"UMass' defensive secondary is the lesser of two evils, according to Bowes, and MacPherson has had to make a few changes to make it such an undesirable, "better" alternative.

"We tried some man-to-man against Army," said MacPherson, "but since then we've implemented more of a zone pass defense."

Bowes says that the game will be won by the team that makes the fewest mistakes, and MacPherson concurs ... to a point.

"Some bad breaks on the special teams could hurt," said the UMass coach, "but after that, if a team really gets behind, I think the other club could really run all over the club that's losing, and make them look bad. Both teams are good enough to do that," said MacPherson.

Whether this Saturday's contest will be a closer one or a runaway is irrelevant.

UM defense confident, capable and complete

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Just what is the UMass defense's opinion of the highly touted UNH offense? Are they impressed with running back Bill Burnham's 1,341 yards and quarterback Jeff Allen's better than 50 per cent pass completion percentage?

Phil Puopolo — senior middle guard, "Who's Burnham? Never heard of him."

John Willis — senior defensive end — "I think Burnham is going to see a lot of darkness on Saturday afternoon. He might even be meeting a lot of UMass people like Phil Puopolo, Dave Bemis, Steve Telander, and Peter McCarty. The meeting might not be too friendly."

Dave Croasdale — senior defensive safety — "I probably won't be seeing Burnham too often because the people up front are going to make sure I don't see him."

This past Tuesday night, on the practice field in the driving rain, the mud, and the cold, cornerback Kevin Sullivan dumped a player attempting to get around defensive end. The whole defensive unit gave him a round of applause, saying, "That's where Burnham and Allen will be watching the game from."

UMass' defense is the number one team in Division II against the run, holding its opponents to 63 yards per game on the ground, and has given up an average of 9 points per game.

Unlike the New England Patriots of last year, UMass' defense does not hold hands in the huddle to signal togetherness and unity. But the feeling is very much evident among the players.

"I think every person on the team and especially the defense cares about what happens to each and every person out there. In other words, the defensive linemen care about the linebackers, the linebackers care about the secondary and the secondary cares about the linemen. Whatever affects one, affects us all," said Steve Telander, linebacker.

The least experienced part of the senior dominated defense, but still effective, nonetheless is the secondary composed of cornerbacks Kevin Sullivan and Dave Croasdale, and safeties Joe Harrington and Steve McInnes.

Croasdale is the only veteran but

UNH must fly or die

For two weeks now, while walking my appointed rounds across campus, friends and acquaintances have stopped to ask me the same question. Who's going to win — UMass or UNH?

Everytime, I have replied in the same non-commital type fashion. On paper, I say, it looks like a real even matchup. It's really hard to pick one from the other.

That's on paper.

But what about the men who, for countless hours, this fall, sat in their offices watching films on both teams looking to find some type of weakness? What about the coaching peers of Dick MacPherson and Bill Bowes who, in every case but one, obviously have had trouble finding a weakness?

What are their weaknesses? Where can each team try to attack? Here's a sample of opinions from people who can better appreciate the intricacies and preparation behind Saturday's game. Four coaches who for the most part have come up empty handed against the two Yankee Conference elites.

One man who will be watching the scoreboard Saturday with special interest is URI coach, Bob Griffin. Should UMass lose and his team defeat Connecticut, the YanCon would end in a three way tie.

"There's not a lot to choose from; both are outstanding teams," said Griffin, whose team stunned UNH, 21-20, two weeks ago. "Mass has better overall team strength and balance. But UNH has Burnham and Allen. They could make the difference."

"I see it as a real close game, and in close games kicking can make the difference," continued Griffin. "In that respect I would have to give the edge to UMass. They have the field goal kicker (Dave Croasdale). But no matter how it comes out, we still have to beat Connecticut to have any shot at the title."

Up the road apiece, UConn coach Walt Nadzak also is expecting a close contest. "It should be one of the great games in New England," said Nadzak, whose team provided UMass a scare before bowling in the second half.

"Mass has a much more physical team," Nadzak added. "When we came out of that game, we knew we had been in a football game. I think they are stronger defensively. But UNH can throw the ball better. If Allen has a good day, I'd have to give the edge to UNH. There's not much of a difference, though. The team that plays with the most emotion and intensity is going to win the football game."

Maine's mentor, Jack Bicknell, concurs that this should be a close ballgame.

"New Hampshire's not physical enough to run at Mass," he said. "They've got to throw the football. If they throw nothing but Burnham at them I doubt they will win. I think the key is Allen and whether NH throws on early downs. They did that against us and were effective.

"Allen is a good one, and though I understand Fallon's had some good games, I would have to give NH the edge at quarterback.

"It's a good matchup, but I lean to UMass," Bicknell said.

Holy Cross coach Neil Wheelwright also saw both teams this fall, and he too came away with two losses to add to his coaching record.

"I think both squads are exceptionally talented," Wheelwright said. "But there's been two months in between times that I saw them, so its tough to compare them (Holy Cross lost to UNH, 27-14, on Sept. 10). I think UMass is sound in every phase of the game. But like I said, we saw New Hampshire two months ago, and they've improved since then. It should be a great football game."

That's what the rival coaches think. What seems to be their conclusion?

They all seem to feel that if UNH is going to win its third straight YanCon title, the Wildcats will have to move the football via the air. Ironically, Bill Burnham, New England's all-time leading rusher, seems to take a back seat in importance to Jeff Allen, UNH's classy quarterback.

The concensus is that if UMass has a weakness, it is in its secondary.

Albert Richard Parsons said, "O men of America, let the voice of the people be heard..." Just then the trap was sprung.*

The Haymarket Square Affair

Tomorrow marks the ninetieth anniversary of the hanging of the Haymarket conspirators, who were convicted of having conspired to throw a dynamite bomb into a group of policeman on the night of May 4, 1886. The policeman had been called to disperse what had been organized as a non-violent protest rally by 3,000 workers who had come to protest the shootings of workers two days earlier at the McCormick harvester plant where striking workers there had been demonstrating in favor of the eight-hour work day. Among the workers at that rally were many anarchists, socialists, and other members of the radical labor movement which was particularly strong in Chicago in the mid-1880's. The four who were hanged for the Haymarket bombing had nothing to do with the throwing or the making of the bomb. They were railroaded to the gallows by Melville E. Stone and other leading citizens because they were labor agitators and outspoken enemies of the capitalist system. Three of them were German-born anarchists. The fourth, Albert Richard Parsons, came from old New England stock and had worked for a number of newspapers before moving to Chicago and becoming very active in the printer's union and socialist politics. He became an anarchist after he became convinced that the American system did not give the American workmen a square deal. In one of his newspapers he once urged "Workingmen of America, learn the manufacture and use of dynamite. It will be your most powerful weapon..." For this he was hanged. The man who really threw the bomb was never identified. The incident and its subsequent trial and convictions created a great deal of controversy throughout the country and it succeeded in polarizing much of the American populace in its attitudes towards the labor movement in the nation. It has also had important long-range consequences for the American labor movement. In recognition of this event and its importance in the history of the struggles of American laborers, we dedicate this issue to the American working class and its struggles, past, present, and future.

WHAT IS A SCAB? attributed to Jack London

After God had finished the rattlesnake, the toad and the vampire, he had some awful substance left with which to make a SCAB. A SCAB is a two-legged animal with a corkscrew soul, a water-logged brain and a combination backbone made of jelly and glue. Where others have hearts, he carries a tumor of rotten principles.

When a SCAB comes down the street, men turn their backs and angels weep in Heaven, and the Devil shuts the gates of Hell to keep him out. Judas Iscariot was a gentleman compared with a SCAB. For betraying his master, he had the character to hang himself – a SCAB hasn't.

Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. Judas Iscariot sold his Saviour for thirty pieces of silver. Benedict Arnold sold his country for a promise of a commission in the British Army. The modern strikebreaker sells his birthright, his country, his wife, his children and his fellow men for an unfulfilled promise from his employer, trust, or corporation.

Esau was a traitor to himself, Judas Iscariot was a traitor to his God, Benedict Arnold was a traitor to his country. A strikebreaker is a traitor to himself, a traitor to his God, a traitor to his country, a traitor to his family, and a traitor to his class.

There is nothing lower than a SCAB.

What's a boss

WHAT IS A BOSS?

When the body was first created, there was contention among the component parts as to who was going to be the boss.

The brain said: "Since I am the nerve center that controls everything and does all of the thinking, I should be the boss."

The feet said: "Since I carry all the friggin' weight, I should be the boss."

The hands said: "Since I must do all the manual labor and earn all the money to keep the rest of you going, I should be the boss."

The eyes said: "Since I must look out for all of you and let you know when danger lurks, I should be the boss."

And so it went with the heart, the lungs, and various other component parts of the body, till there was no one left but the anus. All the others laughed when he made his bid for bosshood, for who ever heard of an anus being boss of anything? This rebuff upset the anus so much that in a pique of anger he closed himself off completely and refused to function any further.

Soon the brain was feverish; the eyes crossed and ached; the feet were too weak to carry the load; the hands hung limply at the sides; and the heart, the lungs, and all the rest of the component parts struggled to keep going. They all capitulated to the anus, and he finally became the boss.

While they did all the work, the anus just basked and let out a lot of hot air, along with the other material that it is the anus's function to let out.

The moral of this little episode is that it takes no special talent to be a boss – so why have one if everyone knows how to work together in harmony? Think about it!

THELMA HOUSTON
The Devil In Me
(Tamla-Motown)

Alot of folks say that it's bad luck and bad form to monkey around with success. As far as a few cuts on this LP go, this seems to be the rule of thumb. To start with, "I'm Here Again", while not a remake, sounds amazingly similar to her last giant Disc soul, then pop, then all at once hit, "Don't Leave Me This Way". I also will speculate a little and say that the same type of success is in store for this side too. Another cut that could really enjoy some success while the people enjoy it is "Triflin'". This side bears some resemblance to her single with Jerry Butler, "You've Got Me". This side is my personal pick on the LP as Ms. Houston's voice is definitely the highlight while there's a minimum of orchestration.

The rest of the LP is stylish and easy to listen to with some nice cuts like "The Devil In Me" and the very mellow "Your Love" co-written and produced by Michael Masser and Pam Sawyer. "Your Love" is a nice mixture of the talents which created the soundtrack from the movie "The Greatest" and "Love Hangover" respectively.

Overall production is the work of Michael and Brenda Sutton for Holland, Dozier and Holland. They also do a lot of the writing and their talents come to the front very nicely as the sides are smooth and very fitting for Ms. Houston's voice. All put together, the talents of the aforementioned people make for a very nice LP that overall actually outdoes her last and takes Thelma one step ahead in the myriad of female vocalists.

THE STEVE GIBBONS BAND
Caught in the Act
(MCA)

The Steve Gibbons Band is vaguely connected with the British contigent of the New Wave in that most of the band members (with the exeption of bassist Trevor Burton, ex-Move) are relative newcomers to the spotlight and that the band has earned most of its renown playing the London club circuit. But that's as far as the connection goes, because musically the SGB is carrying on an old tradition by playing powerful, unadulterated rock and roll. This, their third album, was recorded; live at some of their club concerts, the perfect atmosphere for the group's direct, no-nonsense music. Bands that play clubs have to contend with short sets and impatient audiences, so there's no time to waste. There's also no filler on this album, just twelve quick, energetic crowd-pleasers. Included are cover versions of songs by Bob Dylan ("Watching the River Flow", nicely funked up to become one of SGB's best numbers), Lennon and McCartney ("Day Tripper", a bit grittier than the original), and Chuck Berry ("Tu'ane", which deservedly became a British hit single over the summer). The best of the original songs is the youth anthem, "One of the Boys", and the version here compares favorably to the cover version which became the title song of Roger Daltrey's latest solo album. Gibbon's lead vocals are upfront and confident, and the double lead guitars always get their point across.

The album cover comes with reprints of rave reviews of recent SGB concerts. One of them declares the group as "one of the country's best up-and-coming bands," and if this album is an indication of everything that the SGB does, I believe it. This album can do for the SGB what Full House did for Geils; and all that the band has to do now is to carry on the excitement of this live set to their next couple of studio albums and they'll be home free. Caught in the Act, however, can stand on its own merit as an example that pure rock and roll, 1977 style, doesn't always need the thud-pounding of the New Wave to be effective.

LAKE
(Columbia)

This is without a doubt one of the best debut albums these ol' ears have been privileged to hear in a quite awhile. It has been receiving substantial and well-deserved FM airplay. Unfortunately, checking over the cover credits doesn't reveal much, simply because there aren't many. About all that may be gathered from the aforementioned procedure is that Lake is a European quintette whose membership consists of Martin Tiefensee, James Hopkins-Harrison, Alex Conti, Dieter Ahrendt and Geoffrey Peacey. There's nothing even resembling the slightest clue as to who plays what instrument(s). Recording and production work were apparently done in Germany. So, I honestly know very little about Lake, except for the fact that they're an extraordinary new addition to the contemporary music scene (and Lord knows how it could use one).

But, rather than the shoddy album cover, it's the actual music contained in the LP's grooves which offers conclusive proof that this new band is destined for fame. Comparisons to other successfully progressive rock bands abound; various parts of this disc remind one of Yes, 10cc, Gary Wright, Kansas, and Genesis. Lake can rock & roll (the album's initial two offerings, "On the Run" and "Sorry to Say"), Lake can mellow down easy (the Kansas-like "Do I Love You"), Lake can get funky (the rhythmic "Key To The Rhyme," another tune with Kansasian influence), and Lake can sound spacey (the Gary Wright-like "Chasing Colors"). The single from this album is one of the best I've heard this year. Entitled "Time Bomb," it sounds amazingly like a Yes-10cc combo propelled along by constant piano, haunting harmony, and ticking time bomb "going to explode."

Another side of Lake is brought to the surface via the ethereal "Jesus Came Down." The dynamic chorus is the selection's outstanding point: "Jesus came down/and the word got around/He wasn't pleased with the fighting and war/Thousands of years/full of blood, pain and tears/Yes, He found that the world hadn't changed."

Rounding out the album is a ten-minute grand finale, "Between The Lines." Each member of Lake had a hand in this composition which functions as a showcase of the band's true prowess, particularly during fluid instrumental passages which bring forth crackling keyboard, searing guitar, booming bass, and crashing drumwork. "Between The Lines" definitely closes up the album on a high note.

As far as I feel, to say that Lake is superb would be quite the understatement. With some concert exposure hopefully imminent, Lake should shoot up the charts. Along with such up and coming groups as Starcastle and the Little River Band, they're the hope for the future of rock. Right now, their debut earns a "Lake is dam(n) good" A&.

MARK FARNER
(Atlantic)

A decent debut solo album from ex-Grand Funker Mark Farner as he delivers a pleasantly enjoyable effort comprised of ten original rock and pop tunes. A goodly number of these tunes are songs of yearning — yearning for the simple country life ("Easy Breezes"), the return to the days of peace and tranquility ("Social Disaster"), and the good ol' lady love ("Lorraine"). A couple of selections unfortunately fall into the realm of toe-tappin' muzak ("Dear Miss Lucy" and "You and Me Baby"), perfectly suited as teenybopper Top Forty material. However, these ditties are certainly better than the AM pap which Grand Funk had been releasing over the past four or five years.

Farner employs no big-name studio musicians. Indeed, the most instantly recognizable name is that of famed guitarist Dick Wagner - as producer. Farner holds his own satisfactorily as he earns a "this guy could, believe it or not, be the next Barry Manilow" B✧.

STEVE HILLAGE
Motivation Radio
(Atlantic)

Motivation Radio is Steve Hillage's third solo effort. His amazing futuristic guitar technique was previously found on import albums by Uriel, Clearlight Symphony, Khan, and most notably Gong. For those of you who have already discovered Hillage, Motivation Radio will be no let down. It should even garner a good amount of FM airplay, thus increasing Steve's legion of faithful followers. The album is produced by Malcolm Cecil and strangely enough, (for Hillage), contains no song longer than six minutes. Despite the lack of epic compositions such as "Aftaglid," (from Fish Rising ) and "Lunar Musick Suite", (from L ) Motivation Radio displays the same deranged genius that we know and love.

Side one opens with "Hello Dawn," a short straight forward number which should get some airplay. On "Motivation" Steve preaches to us before cutting loose on his synthesised guitar. The third song, "Light In The Sky" is reminiscent of Gong's craziness. "Radio," the longest song on the album, begins acoustically and moves through all kinds of unexplored territory. After one listens to this side, there is no doubt to the listener that it is the same old Hillage.

Side two is no let-down. "Wait One Moment" displays the many different facets of Hillage's colorful guitar. "Saucer Surfing," which is based on the Chariot, (the number seven Tarot card), begins with a great riff and deteriorates into complete madness. "Searching for the Spark" is a showcase for the synthesisers as well as the guitar. "Octave Doctors" takes up where "The Octave Doctors and the Crystal Machines" from Gong's Radio Gnome left off. The last song on the album is an incredible remake of "Not Fade Away" in which Hillage introduces his own little idiosyncrasies to the classic.

Perhaps this album will win Hillage an "above ground" following. It should, but then again I thought I would, and it didn't. It doesn't really matter, because those who get into Hillage wouldn't be without this album.

BRAND X
Livestock
(Passport)

Brand X is working within a rather limited form - that of the jazz-rock fusion - but their collective intelligence makes them one of the best bands of the genre. Individually, they've got virtuosity to spare - the drums-percussion team of Phil Collins and Morris Pert forms a foundation strong enough to support a small city; bassist Percy Jones and guitarist John Goodsall can slide up and down their respective fretboards with remarkable dexterity; and keyboardist Robin Lumley is equally skilled at taking the solo spotlight and enriching the background. Collectively, the key to the quality of their music is the compositional strength of Brand X's pieces. They seem to realize what has eluded many fusion bands - that flashy soloing is not enough to make for interesting music.

Livestock, recorded in concert, is the third Brand X album. Their previous one Moroccan Roll, contained some constructive experimentation with studio techniques. In contrast, on the new album, they use the more immediate atmosphere of a live concert to take their music in a different direction. The sound is more direct and agressive, allowing more room for improvisation. Only two pieces here have been recorded before, and the new versions of "Euthanasia Waltz" and "Malaga Virgen" are more of an elaboration than a repetition. In both cases, the original songs are used as departure points for further variation. Of the new pieces, "Nightmare Patrol" is the best, starting with a simple theme which gains momentum throughout its development.

Unfortunately, Brand X may become the latest victim of record industry greed. Arista, which now distributes the Passport label isn't doing either the band or their fans a favor by giving the dreaded $7.98 list price to this album. The price should keep all but the band's most avid followers from buying the record, and thus prevent Brand X from achieving the [illegible] [illegible]gh they've deserved [illegible] veteran record buyer is probably used to being taken advantage of by the industry, and my words won't do much to remedy the situation. All that I can do is judge Livestock by its musical value, of which it has plenty.

Studio Outtakes
(Tobe Milo)

Thanks to A.D., the guard on the third floor, and Tobe Milo Productions, Studio Outtakes comes to the American market. Though shrouded in mystery and shades of international intrigue, the record is pure delight. Running the better part of 17 minutes, this 7-inch disc features a 3 min. and 26 sec. Beatles-Hendrix version of 'Daytripper', never, everbefore released. Also, thrill to those zany moptops (sans Jimi...) trying to sing Bob Crewe's 'Voulez-Vous Couchez Avec Moi' in French, with irrepressible John stealing the show. Paul displays his flair for wit on a 'one only' version of 'Hey Jude', while the group collaborates on 'I Am The Walrus', stripped of horns and strings. Rounding out the EPA (Extended Play Album) are 'Fool On The Hill', 'Oh My Love', and previously unreleased 'Mommy's Little Girl'.

There are only 1000 of these albums in existence today and each one is serial marked for control and identification. If you are ever presented with the opportunity of possessing one of these, do what you have to, but do it. This record will go down in history as the finest example of investigative bootlegging ever.

DOLLY PARTON
Here You Come Again
(RCA)

Back at last with an ever-inspiring front is Dolly Parton with a new chestful of favorites. Dolly, Christianity's answer to pornography, is one of those rare singers that deesn't need talent to succeed but has it anyway.

Here You Come Again is not, as those of you yet unfamiliar with Ms. Parton, about multiple orgasms or anything of the like. It is a good, clean album of wholesome and decent music sung and performed by a good Christian woman; melodious, virtuous music from a good clean Christian woman. Songs like "It's All Wrong, But It's All Right" and "Cowgirl & The Dandy." The title cut is already a hit and it won't be long before Sebastian's "Loving You" will be gracing our airwaves. Lucky us.

STELLA PARTON
Country Sweet
(Elektra)

If Dolly Parton is the keeper of the family chest, then sister Stella has been blessed by the great Lord above with the nicest pair o' legs this side of Las Vegas. Hot on the heels of an evangelical national concert tour with the Stella Parton Singers, Country Sweet captures the vibrancy and urgency of the "New South's" message: keep things the same. Containing many titillating photos and her smash hit, "I'm Not That Good At Goodbye," Country Sweet is a must for anyone who thinks they know anything at all about music.

There is alot of money on this honey and if it sells, who knows, maybe G. T. Armstrong will feature her in a centerfold in Plain Truth magazine. I'm hopin' and prayin' and you should be too.

MARY McCASLIN
Old Friends
(Philo)

It's very reassuring to know that people like Mary McCaslin are still around making good, calming music in this age of punk rockers screaming at us to lose our sensibilities and to throw our dreams away. And it's very rewarding to know that Mary McCaslin, as an artist and interpreter of many kinds of songs with a truly western 'flair, is growing at a pace which only she has set for herself.

Mary's previous two albums for Philo (a small label out of North Ferrisburg, Vt.) were rich with a love and an evocative sentimentality of the American West, past present, and future. Mary's natural singing style reflects her strong western mountain accent, which, along with her simple arrangements, lends a genuine taste of the West to her music. McCaslin's natural approach puts her far ahead of the whole barnful of puerile rock stars that call themselves country.

Old Friends doesn't have the strong thematic threads that wove through Way Out West and Prairie In The Sky. In place of a strong western theme, McCaslin assumes the role of interpreter, as she includes two Lennon-McCartney tunes, a Holland-Dozier-Holland tune and a handful of cobwebbed popular tunes about the Old West. And in notable departure from any of her previous song-themes, original or borrowed, Mary includes an interesting and catching version of "Pinball Wizard."

Side one opens with "Things We Said Today," that dreamy and timeless Beatles love song. Her version (released as a single) is highlighted by her G-minor tuned guitar harmonizing perfectly with her blended vocal overdubs. A song about the old Indian myth of the death spirit, "Wendigo" also rates highly for its haunting air. The vocal is augmented by Mary's co-performer and partner-in-life, Jim Ringer.

Highlighting side two is a remake of the 1965 Supreme's hit, "My World Is Empty Without You Babe." Mary's overdubbed Supremes do a calmer, more yearning version which comes up shining. Also shining is her rendition of Lennon and McCartney's "Blackbird." The song is perfect for Mary's singing style, and the banjo and fiddle arrangements are quite imaginative, making this song a high point of the album. Cole Porter's old show tune, "Don't Fence Me In," is the sleeper of this album. A simple popular song of the '40's takes on a new meaning in this day of nuclear power, strip-mining, and mega-tourism. Her vocal clarity is exceptional on this cut, and her emotion is even clearer. The last song on side two is McCaslin's only composition for the album, which is a marked difference from the past. Mary puts the listener face to face with memories with this masterpiece entitled "Old Friends." The song carries the sentimental and emotional weight of "Circle of Friends":

"Remember old friends we've made along the way
the gifts they've given stay with us every day..."

While not as rich throughout its entirety as her last two works, Old Friends is still a worthwhile listening venture. A clear vocal recording quality has been achieved that pinpoints Mary McCaslin's strongest features. Chief among these is her articulation, which is certainly a key to her success as a singer. On Old Friends,as in the past, she treats every word she sings as if it were a hello kiss.

THE NEW COMMANDER CODY BAND
Rock 'N Roll Again
(Artista)

Commander Cody fans should like the Commander's "cleaning house" effort here, for Rock 'N Roll Again is the (now, NEW) CCB's most refreshing album in a few years on their new Artista label.

Past CCB albums, while providing good, corny rock'n roll, suffered from the fact that several of their discs sound basically the same.

New guitarist Darius Javaher and three other newcomers give the band refreshed energy while the instrumental solos are kept brief and zesty, true to old form.

The Commander is a limited singer, especilally now that Billy C. Farlow is gone, but his on-cue delivery mixes well with Javaher's guitar work and the fine sax riffs of another new guy, Cisco G.

The title cut along with "Seven Eleven" and "Widow," which are the LP's best offerings, all exemplify Javaher's ability to play lead licks which boogie and space out.

Drummer Fred Myer and bassist Rob Greer keep a steady rhythmn while the potent two-women chorus of Nicolette Larson and Charra Penny handles harmonies.

For CCB fans, Rock 'N Roll Again is worth picking up.

GIL SCOTT-HERON AND BRIAN JACKSON
Bridges
(Artista)

Though many persons still have never heard of Gil Scott-Heron, the latter has been making jazz-ryhthmn 'n blues music with cohort Brian Jackson since 1969.

Author of a single, "The Bottle," Scott-Heron has much to say. His literate knack for persistance in pointing out societal wrongs is as vehement as Joan Baez, who is neither quite as direct or as uncanny at being articulate as is Scott-Heron.

Gil's typical songs are angry, very real protest songs where he alternately sings and speaks, while his backup men play low-key, effective melodies. "H2O Gate Blues" and "Home Is Where The Hatred Is" fit this description, but lest some sniff that he's socio-politically redundant, Scott Heron and his group can mellow out and perform such vibrantly nice tunes as "New York City" and "John Coltrane and Lady Day (Billie Holiday)."

Brian Jackson, who co-authors some of the group's material, plays key boards and sings harmony on Scott-Heron- Jackson's latest release, Bridges.

Expectedly, Bridges is not as splendid as Scott-Heron's earlier '77 LP ,It's Your World, a terrific "live" double album and probably Gil's best effort to date. But while Bridges does have one or two "throwaway" tracks, most of the album is solid.

"Hello Sunday! Hello Road!," side one's opener, is a disco hopping tune made only semi-tolerable by a few high pitched Jackson keyboard wiggles.

Even less impressive, at first, is "Racetrack In France," as I could not picture Gil enjoying France. This one sounds more convincing, however, after a few listenings when one's ears do become enchanted by "the good vibrations a long way from home."

"Vigldgolia (Deaf, Dumb, and Blind)," with its fairly loose, well-merged sax (played by Bilal Sunni-Ali) and percussion, is side one's and maybe the album's best cut.

"Under The Hammer" begins side two on a good level both energetically and lyrically . With good contributions from all eleven-musicians, its funk beat steers clear of disco.

"We Almost Lost Detroit," dedicated by Gil to the Clamshell Alliance, and the eery "Delta Man"are listenable as is the serene"95 South."

Marlo Henderson's guitar style is unique and pleasant despite not being as blues-based as that of Scott-Heron alumnus David Spinozza.

Bridges is not as strongly consuming as It's Your World, nor is it as tight as The Revolution Will Not Be Televised, an anthology of early Scott-Heron songs. Still, Bridges has a warm sound with some intimate liner notes to boot; it is far from being a turkey.

-John Bergman

JETHRO TULL
Repeat-Best Of Jethro Tull, Vol. II
(Chrysalis)

Several persons have contended that the soft in my heart for Jethro Tull is exceeded only by the one in my head. However, amidst the fleeting trends of reggae, disco, glitter, and punk, not to mention the spiteful malevolence of hostile critics, Tull has survived for nearly a decade. Repeat is firm proof of Ian Anderson and company's holding steadfast in their musical brilliance.

Spanning the years from 1969-1976, Repeat brings back such classic Tull tunes as "A New Day Yesterday," "To Cry You A Song" and "Cross-Eyed Mary." There are also popular edits from two of Tull's finest LPs, Thick As A Brick and A Passion Play. Newer material presented includes title tracks from War Child, Minstrel In The Gallery and the critically -maligned , yet technically brilliant Too Old To Rock'n' Roll: Too Young To Die. Rounding everything out here is a previously unreleased ballad from the WarChild era. This selection blends Ian's masterful sax-work along with John Evan's accordian, creating a rhythmic tale relating the coming and going of old and new heroes as they rapidly make their way down "Glory Row."

A pat on the back goes out to riff-roaring Martin Barre. While he may not be reckoned an outstanding lead guitarist, his dual-tracked leads and fills fit in perfectly in every song. Just listen closely to his work on "New Day Yesterday" and "Minstrel." And by the way, kiddies, if you really want to have some fun, try listening to "Bouree" (Ian's tribute to J.S. Bach) at 45 rpm. It's rather a unique experience, as the tune is jazzed up considerably.

So, to wind up (Tullites, please pardon the pun), let me hereby conclude by giving Repeat a "I only try to 'Tull' it like it is"A.

CLASS CULTURE FOR CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS...

AN AFRICAN TREASURY

edited by Langston Hughes
Jove publ. 192 pages, $1.75

Many folks say that the "back-to-the-roots" mania has gone too far. I was one of them until I read this collection of African writings, now I feel that it hadn't gone far enough. It hadn't gone far enough as people of Langston Hughes' ilk hadn't yet been the vehicle for the modern Back-to-Africa movement.

In An African Treasury, Hughes has collected the writings of Africans today showing what they feel African Pride is all about, not an Americanized, romanticized sense of pride a la Roots and the cultish symbolism of Kunta Kinte. This type of "Rootsmania" isn't what I feel Marcus Garvey had in mind. African Pride in its true sense cannot be duplicated by the romantics of writers in touch with what they think is especially attractive about our African Heritage. This is where Hughes comes in and validates the modern desire to get back to the roots. He calls upon the people of Africa themselves to convey the African spirit to their American brothers in struggle.

Hughes actually solicited manuscripts of all types from African writers on everything from politics to romance. Some of the works are of some more accomplished writers, but just as interesting and just as indicative of African life as it is today and recalled from yesterday, are the works of those who merely submitted their works in hopes that Hughes would find use for it.

The love (both for one's companion and one's country) in the love poems and odes to woman and country is truly African, not a western adapation or interpretation of what an African feels. The politics in the various manuscripts are African borne of African strife, not from mere observations of that strife.

Hughes could have taken the easy and somewhat pompous route and used his own talents to convey the African way of life and the thoughts of the African who leads that life. But no, he goes through literally thousands of manuscripts to come up with a work that is truly representative of the people themselves, how they live, and what they feel.

To Hughes I say thank you for An African Treasury, with these works; you've provided me with a chance to really feel the "vibes" of my African brothers as they eminate from the source, not as interpreted by someone who merely had a feeling for what the continent is like. This approach is very refreshing and reassuring in that it lends some reality and credibility to the back to the roots movement after it's been distorted by the fanatics and romantics of "Rootsmania."

HISTORY OF A CANAL

Panama, your geography granted you a gift that no other land was given:
two oceans pushed forward to meet you:
the cordillera tapered naturally:
instead of one ocean it gave you the waters of the two sovereigns of the foam, the Atlantic kisses you with lips that habitually kiss the grapes, while the Pacific Ocean shakes
in your honor its cyclonic stature.
And so, small Panama, little sister,
I am now not taken by my first doubts,
I'll whisper them in your ear for I believe that one must speak of bitterness in privacy.
And what happened? little sitser, they cut your figure as if it were cheese and then ate and left you like a gnawed olive pit.
I later found out the canal was shaped like a moon river:
through that river the world was to arrive spilling fortune on your sand, but men from other parts brought to you their yoke and they spilled nothing but whiskey since they mortgaged your waistline:
and everything follows as it was planned
by devils and their lies:
with their money they built the Canal,
they dug the earth with your blood and now dollars are sent to New York leaving you the graves.

WESLEY EVEREST WAS A WOBBLY

(For my father, a sawmill worker, who was disabled on a year-long picket line and scab-disemployed after he and co-workers attempted to go union.)

I heard them all a laughin'
"This is better than the union hall;
doesn't he look fine
with his eyes a bustin'?"

Rumors of the previous day forewarned—lumber baron Hubbard and his secret C.P.A.
were plannin' a lynching bee for every red and foreign Wobbly

These swindler bosses in less than a minute got the Centralia legion to act as cover for their game:
"Let the men in uniform do it."

"Notables" and Red Cross girls led the parade on Armistice Day.
After they marched by,
a gent on a horse, ten hands high,
yelled, "Bunch up boys; it's open season!"

Soon we had to abandon our hall.
Our ranks, thinned out and tired, traded the thick of blood and powder for a wooded stand from where we fired.

That breed of no-good hound though they had license to torture more seein' how our guns lay empty on the ground.
But till lock and key stop our kickin' or till our cleats fall off, it's war!

They howled, "You're cornered Wesley!"
With one bullet, I had no option—
I dropped the baron's kin.
On the spot they readied to do me in.

Then before a hangman's hand got a rope over my tossin' head,
a woman shouted a lifesavin' reprimand:
"Get back! Lay off this loggin' man!"

She addressed those murderin' vermin:
"No mercy for you cowards and curs!
There's not a chance in hell you'll last and there ain't no heaven!"
With that she closed her sermon.

When I came-to on the jailhouse floor
I heard, "We won't desert ya,
we fight for our class and the I.W.W.
We're committed to the core!"

Don't recall the limousine ride.
Didn't hear, "Hang that yella red!"
Didn't see carlights aimed below my head, nor Hubbard, rabid for revenge.

I only heard them all a laughin'
"This is better than the union hall;
doesn't he look fine
with his eyes a bustin'?"

Now a Wobbly's never dead and gone.
They work the graveyard shift, collecting overdue pay from the rich who are good at feigning thrift.
We reimburse the workingstiff.

When we're hungry, our heads may be bloodied by the bourgies' badged and private thugs;
but unbowed, we'll defeat those lugs, do a long term strike or take out a loan from the local arsenal.

With all the folk turned Wobbly and all the down and out,
we're sure to rout the thievin' posse and bring those profit-hunters down!

JERRY BUTLER

It All Comes Out In My Song (Motown)

The Iceman returneth with another collection of love songs from the Motown record factory. While Motown, in recent years, has lost it's edge in the soul music trade through contract disputes and the rising innovativeness of the new generation of black production companies (Philadelphia, Westbound, etc.), it still has Jerry Butler, which says a lot.

Jerry Butler is one of the greats in soul music; his career is long and proud, spanning three decades and providing him with a wall full of gold. Why then, despite his great voice and solid reputation, is Jerry Butler considered by most circles to be a "marginal" artist "on the wane" not being able to meet contemporary market expectations?

It seems that the Iceman was frozeth over by the Media Corps. after his 1972 benefit appearence for Angela Davis in Madison Square Garden and things have not been the same since. Producing great music is in no way a guarantee for success and more often than not, especially to black artists, political statements cause whole careers to freeze on the vine. Supplanted by Al Green and Billy Paul and other merry makers of mood music, Jerry Butler still has Motown and the edge in talent.

It All Comes Out In My Song is yet another solid release by one of the bravest singers around. Branded "The Sound of Chicago" and oriented for lights down low, it's sure not to receive the accolade and acclaim it's due. Who says culture and politics don't mix? It all comes out in his song...

FUTURE OF A CANAL

Water passes through you like a knife and separates love into two halves with the chill of dollars struck up to the hilt in your honeycombs:
I tell you the sorrows that I feel;
if others do not see these calamities you'll think that I am lost or that I drank too many bottles in your bars:
but these constructions, these lakes, these blue waters of two oceans should not be the sword that divides the miserable from the happy, the door to this foam should be the grand union of two nuptial oceans:
a small path constructed for men and not exploiters, for love not for money,
not for hate but for sustenance and it must be said that to you belongs this canal and all other canals built on your territory:
these are your sacred springs.
The flow of the ocean that surrounds you is yours, it is a vein for your blood, and the vampires that devour it should pack their valises and get out, for only your sailing flag should move in the afternoon wind:
the Panamanian wind asks
like a child that has lost its mother, where is the flag of my country?
It is waiting. And Panama knows it.
And we Americans know it from Patagonia to the Rio Grande:
only one flag in the Canal should move its fragrant petal, it cannot be a pirate flag
but yet another rose from our blood, for Panama's national colors will preside over the passage of ships.

BOOK REVIEW:

LUCY PARSONS: AMERICAN REVOLUTIONARY

by Carolyn Ashbaugh
1976 Chicago
Charles H. Kerr Publishing Company
Includes Chapter Notes, Selected Reading

List and Index

Institutionalized censorship is no new thing. In yet another work to uncover "herstory" and history a biography was published last year by Charles H. Kerr and Company which has in the past put in print work that no other publisher would touch--The Autobiography of Mother Jones, Walls and Bars by Eugene Debs and due out this year, another biography--Eugene V. Debs, Spokesman For Labor And Socialism.

Lucy Parsons: American Revolutionary is a detailed exposition of a Black-Chicana (Spanish speaking Native American) woman who entered the throes of labor history by migrating with her husband, Haymarket martyr, Albert Parsons, from Texas to Chicago. This story freed from the history catacombs of Capitalist America gives us another example of a woman who dedicated her life toward achieving a worker controlled society.

It took Carolyn Asbaugh four years to research the life of Lucy Parsons. This book written and scrutinized by a conscientious feminist, careful to write from a class-conscious perspective, reveals a woman working from an ideology distinct from that of Mother Jones or Emma Goldman. This has significance for today in identifying certain tendencies that persist in the working class and women's movements. Lucy Parsons is of interest also in that she participated in the Black struggle from a stance similar to that of many urban organizations committed to national minority and worker struggles.

Lucy Parsons was labeled to be an "Anarchist". The "Anarchist" scare preceded the "Wobbly" scare and the "Communist-Red" witch hunts and coincided with the Klan campaign against Blacks. In fact the Parsons left Waco, Texas in 1873 because of Klan lynchings. Albert and Lucy Parsons had been involved in registering Blacks to vote, in publishing the socialist Spectator, in defending a judge that was in line for lynching because he had taken a stand on behalf of the disenfranchised. At fault with the book, is that this area of detail is usually exposed in the Chapter Notes rather than in the text. However Asbaugh writes: "Lucy and Albert Parsons were two of the displaced persons from Reconstruction, they were political refugees from the Ku Klux Klan and the renascent Democratic Party in the South." They joined political refugees from Europe who had gathered in Chicago, who had brought with them the initial rudiments of Marxism that explained clearly and scientifically the historic and economic factors that separated worker-made product from profit and workers from power.

Confrontations between workers demanding just for the time and labor and the police, electorally oriented campaigns to better working conditions, increased wages and eight hour demands gave rise to a militancy that produced armed workers who marched and trained on Chicago streets. We learn from Ashbaugh of an amazing event-- "The Chicago movement was at its peak in 1879. In March, the socialists held a tremendous Paris commune rally in the Exposition Building, despite the opposition of the Stock Exchange and the Board of Trade. Thirty thousand people got inside, while thousands more were turned away... The socialist military companies, about 385 men, were there in uniform."

Lucy Parsons was not a passive wife in this period. She was writing for the Socialist, speaking for the Working Women's Union and was pregnant with her first child. Lucy Parsons, along with Mother Jones, were among the first women to join the Knights of Labor as union members. Later she split from the Knights based on her class and trade union-derived ideology describing them as "the croakers about harmony between labor and capital." In addition Lucy Parsons generated funds for her household, for publications and for the labor movement by her dressmaking business conducted from her home.

Lucy Parsons, "another example of a woman who dedicated her life toward achieving a worker-controlled society."

In October 1883, the Revolutionary Socialists drafted the Pittsburgh Manifesto and at the same time formed the International Working Peoples' Association. Lucy Parsons incorporated the manifesto's six points into her life's works: 1.) Destruction of the existing class rule, by all means, i.e., by energetic, relentless, revolutionary and international action. 2.) Establishment of a free society based upon cooperative organization of production. 3.) Free exchange of equivalent products by and between the productive organizations without commerce and profitmongery. 4.) Organization of education on a secular, scientific and equal basis for both sexes. 5.) Equal rights for all without distinction to sex or race. 6.) Regulation of all public affairs by free contracts between autonomous (independent) communes and associations, resting on a federalistic basis. In 1977 we have not achieved points 4 and 5 which should give us cause for thought and consideration of the historical and present tactics ostensibly purporting to achieve this.

This manifesto was in direct response to events and severe conditions--"Between 1865 and 1880, 41,000 miles of railroad track had been laid, bringing rural artisans into direct competition with factory goods. Hundreds of thousands of rural Americans had lost their farms in the crash of 1873 and moved to the cities looking for work. Eight million European immigrants came to the United States between 1870 and 1890, 5.25 million of them between 1880 and 1890. Another depression in 1883 ended the economic upswing which had started in 1879." Ashbaugh adds, "In 1886...in Illinois, the average daily wage of men was nearly $2, for women it was $1.11, and for children it was 70 cents." From these conditions, Lucy Parsons began addresses to workers with the slogan, "The land for the landless; the tools to the toiler and the product to the producers, for without this right to the free use of these things, the pursuit of happiness, the enjoyment of liberty and life itself are hollow mockeries. Hence the employment of any and all means are justifiaibe in obtaining them, even to a forceable violent revolution." Asbaugh writes, "She favored arming workers, 'Thus being in a position to argue his or her case, the final compact might possibly be achieved by very little violence.'"

The author documents the violence of the ruling class in this period. In January 1889, a worker, arrested from a picket line was beat in the head to death; Pinkertons fired into a crowd near a McCormick Reaper factory killing several people, and Charles and Ed Brown plus eleven others were shot or lynched in Carrolton, Mississippi.

"When the ruling class advocated arsenic, Lucy advocated arson. When the ruling class said destroy the human being, Lucy said destroy their property." In response to the Mississippi murders, Lucy Parsons wrote to blacks in the Alarm to work with "those who are striving for economic freedom" and she called on others to utilize acts "to show murderers and tyrants the danger line, beyond which they may not venture with impunity,...."

In 1886 the eight hour movement was met by a Citizen's Association campaign with backing from police, thugs and Pinkertons to "rid the city of 'anarchism'". A workers' march and assembly in Haymarket Square was met by police orders to disperse--a bomb exploded. The Parsons at home heard the explosion. Albert Parsons caught a train out of Chicago. Seven people were killed. "A telegraph pole in the middle of the scene of the riot was filled with bullet holes, all coming from the side of the police. The pole was removed within 24 hours 'to improve service' and it was never again located." This is just a hint of the conspiracy to capture or kill off the worker leadership in Chicago. On May 4th August Spies, Michael Schwab, Adolph Fischer, Gerhard Lizius, Oscar Neebe, Chris Spies, Lizzie Holms and Mrs. Schwab had been arrested. When police grabbed Lucy Parson's friend, Lizzie Holms, she intervened. He yelled back, "You black bitch! I'm going to knock you down too!"

What followed were indictments, the Haymarket trial, a national campaign to free the convicted, including Albert Parsons, but law and order vindication prevailed. On November 11th, 1887, Adolph Fischer, August Spies, George Engel and Albert Parsons were hung. Oscar Neebe received a 15 year sentence, Samuel Fielden received a life sentence and Louis Lingg either committed suicide or was murdered prior to the convictions. Ashbaugh notes, "Three weeks after death row speeches by the labor leaders, the Statue of Liberty was unveiled".... From this time on, Lucy Parsons carried forth "the work of two--her own and her dead husband's."

Lucy Parsons was instrumental in keeping the working class movement from being usurped by the Democratic Party in the 1880 elections. She charged from platform to platform, "that President Cleveland had been elected by the shotgun, that the South had been carried for the Democrats 'by the most shocking outrages and crimes. I have seen the Ku Klux Klan in the South myself....They were everyone Democrats. The negroes of the South are no longer in physical slavery, but the Democrats of the South intend to keep them in economic slavery.'"

We can see today's abortion and sterilization to a very aged issue when Ashbaugh writes how President Roosevelt feared that Anglo-Saxon women were not bearing enough children. Conversely Lucy Parsons wrote in 1906 after a visit to ghetto slums, "'If President Roosevelt were to happen into this part of the town, his denistry would shine forth resplendidly; he would see no signs of race suicide hereabout."

After publication of Emma Goldman's Mother Earth and a Goldman led Anarchist conference, Lucy Parsons analyzed the "disassociation of Anarchism from strictly class struggle movements...Anarchism, as taught in recent years, is too far away from the mental level of the masses..."

Ashbaugh documents that in the first twenty years of the 20th century, the I.W.W.--International Workers of the World--the Wobblies--had organized the west--lumberjacks, paper workers in the South, migrant workers who traveled as hobos on boxcars, and for one and all their ticket was the red I.W.W. card. The Wobblies led the textile strikes in Lawrence, Massachusetts in 1912 and Paterson, New Jersey in 1913.

During a Seattle trial of 99 socialists, Lucy Parsons yelled at a judge who referred to the Haymarket martyrs as "murderers", "My husband was no murderer!" She was in Seattle to organize for the syndicalists. In 1912 William Z. Foster of the Spokane Free Speech Fight split from the I.W.W. and traveled over 6,000 miles in one winter as a hobo organizing Syndicalist Leagues. In the same year Lucy Parsons delivered a speech titled, "Syndicalism: Its Aims and Objectives". In Tacoma on November 11th, 1913 she took up a collection on behalf of four Mexicans jailed in Texas, caught before they had rejoined revolutionary forces fighting in Mexico.

In 1914 Lucy Parsons was organizing the unemployed during the severe "recession". She agitated among iron miners on strike in Minnesota in 1916. The next year war was declared, J. Edgar Hoover was in the Justice Department and Congress passed The Espionage and Sedition Acts. On August 1, 1917 in Butte, Montana Frank Little, among the I.W.W. leadership, was lynched. The afternoon before he had sided with the copper workers and had made an anti-war speech. Bill Haywood and 100 Wobblies were tried in 1918 for conspiracy with Frank Little. They were all imprisoned or disposed of. Many of the publications that Lucy Parsons had contributed to were destroyed at the printing site, confiscated, were denied access to the mails, and their publishers, jailed. The Palmer raids in 1920 burned tons of books and literature. In this year the I.W.W. leadership was dead or jailed and therefore it was extinguished as a mass organization.

During a May Day rally in 1930, Lucy Parsons addressed 25,000 workers in Chicago. At age 80 she spent days walking the Chicago Loop selling pamphlets and engaging people in analysis of the economic-political conditions they were facing. She defended Angelo Herndon who led 10,000 Blacks protesting depression severities in Atlanta and the Scottsboro Boys. On the 50th anniversary of the execution of her husband, Lucy Parsons spurred listeners to continue the militant struggle for workers' rights. She had accumulated over the years a 1500 volume library. She was blind now. On March 7, 1942, Lucy Parsons died when a wood stove overheated and started a fire in her small home.

This book sparks a lot of thought and inquiry. It also provokes in one the hope that a publisher will make available to us the writings and speeches of Lucy Parsons. Because of Carolyn Ashbaugh's research, because of the exemplary life of Lucy Parsons, we have more reason to be proud and to bear forward!

SPARTAKUS AND MARS

Spartakus and Mars
Went for a walk by the sea
To ponder 'bout the furure.

"My God," said he
The enslaved one
"Of what of me I've done?"
Said Mars to Spart
"It's far apart,
Your deeds and what you need,
For what is done
Has not been done
For but is what is need?"

"Masks," said Mars
"To hide the sight
Of those who cannot see
March for might
With swords drawn bright
Before the dreaded thee
And know that you
Will come to be
The Jovian national heart.

And soon it passed
Passed past and class
And Spartakus said to Mars,
"Meet my sight,
My right, my might
And all I behold I am
Tis not the truth
That runs in root
That thee art just like thou?"

It need but took
More than half history
And half of what is left
Said Mars to Spart,
"Spartakian one
For what is life but thou?
You run round and round
From stone to blip
To see that thou art thee!"

If lessons are from history
And more than what I say
Find out what class
Produced this poem
And help it on its way.

THE CAMBRIDGE COURT DANCERS AND PLAYERS

Sackbut, krummhorn, shawm, lute -- sound Tolkienese? Actually, these are the names of instruments popular during the late Middle, Renaissance, and Baroque eras, On the eve of Nov. 6, in Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall, the Cambridge Court Players buzzed, plucked, thumped and blew life into these precursors of modern-day instruments, accompanying the lavishly dressed and tressed Cambridge Court Dancers in an authentic recreation of the court music and dance of Italy, France, Spain and England from the early 15th to 18th centuries.

The music was full of lilting melodies and pleasant, balanced harmonies urged ever-onward by the steady beat of a drum or lute. The dances were of many styles and types: the ceremonious, processional 15th century bassedanse and 16th century Pavane, characterezed by elegance, quiet nobility and an uninterrupted, gently rocking flow of movement close to the ground; the intricate, ornamental or story-telling turn and leap dances such as the 15th century Italiian balli and 16th century Gaillard; the circles, open lines, symmetries and mixing patterns in the Branles and Balletti; and the simple, countryish English ballroom dances of the 17th century.

A few of the dances had charming motifs. For example, in one dance, each of the dancers carried a candle while mingling and meandering to-and-fro until, on a cue from the music, they each raise their candles to light the face of the partner they have ended up with; they dance a bit, bow, and move on, but not before the man plants a bold kiss on the woman's neck. Another is a "boys against the girls" dance of competitive toe-tapping and stamping brilliance. Particularly amusing is a dance in which the men appear to be kneeing the derrieres of the women as they lift them straight into the air while turning.

Dr. Ingrid Brainard, musicologist, dance historian, teacher and performer of historical dance, founded the Cambridge Court Dancers in 1969. They are, like their noble predecessors, an ensemble of well-trained, literate, musical people from many walks of life, brought together by a lively interest in the art of dancing and its history. Strict attention is paid in their dances to accuracy of steps and movements, manner and style, and costume. Their chief sources of informantion are the dance instruction books of each of the different historical periods, meticulously compiled by professional dancing masters at the extravagant coutrs of Europe.

The Cambridge Court Players are directed by Sheila Beardslee and are a youg professional ensemble of musicians specializing in performance of early music on authentic instruments.

The performance, which was presented by the Amherst College Department of Music, was an interesting, enlightening and satisfying event. It is hoped that more events such as this will follow.

"My Fair Lady"

The curtain rose at 3:30 pm. From then on, "My Fair Lady" was a delight.

The cast of characters headed by Edward Mulhare (Henry Higgins) and Anne Rogers (Eliza Doolittle) are all veterans of the theatrical stage. With their multitude of backgrounds the Fine Arts Center stage at the University of Massachusetts was simply another place for these performers to display their excellence.

"My Fair Lady" is the adaptation of Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion". The film version, produced by Gabriel Pascal starred Rex Harrison and Audrey Hepburn. It first premiered on Broadway in 1956, and has since been highly acclaimed in England and Russia as well.

Alan Jay Lerner wrote the book and lyrics, and Frederick Lowe composed the music for this rendition of "My Fair Lady". It was meticulously constructed, and stood alone as a highly polished, professional array of talent.

Briefly, a poor, illiterate flower-selling mishap (Ms. Rogers) is taken in by an educated, English scholar (Mr. Mulhare). Henry Higgins proposes to transform ill-mannered Eliza Doolittle into a "lady" of social grace and verbal eloquence. His success is achieved through painstaking, verbal exercises that are very funny.

Edward Mulhare (many may remember him from the television series "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir") is a fine actor. His regal, statuesque appearance accompanied a performance backed by motivation and talent. His determination was believable; his anger was forceful; his comical exploits were laughable; and his mere presence on the stage was a joy.

If Anne Rogers couldn't act, she'd more than compensate with a beautiful voice. But she can act, and she can sing. She can even make me rise from my seat at the end of the show for a standing ovation. Ms. Rogers was a "lady" whether she wiped her nose with her sleeve, danced across the stage, or accidently yelled "C'mon Dover, move yourbloomin' ass!"

The robust Ronald Drake did a find job as Colonel Pickering, as did Thomas Bowman playing the lovable Cockey, Alfred P. Doolittle. Marie Paxton (Mrs. Higgins), Joyce Worsley (Mrs. Pearce), and Kevin Dearinger (Freddy Eynsford-Hill) also gave memorable performances.

Often, in a stage production, it is difficult to depict the passage of time. In a clock-like rhythm, the servants sang of a time elapse on the dimly lit stage. The audience could "feel" the long hours of pronunciation exercises that Eliza Doolittle and Henry Higgins practiced. The effect was fantastic. When the stage re-lit, we were ready for a new speech lesson.

The transitions from scene to scene were so tight and organized, I didn't feel the least bit uncomfortable with the sudden changes. One such effect was when Eliza said a breathy 'H'. The candle blew out at the same time as the stage lights. Beautiful.

The choreography was sublime, and the costumes were lovely. A grey, black, and white color scheme of the elite joined with a mechanical dance at the races that was a visual feast. A rather drawn out pause in this scene was unnecessary. Nonetheless, the comedy was evident. In Act II, the dance number for "The Embassy Waltz" was similar to the Ernest Flatt style often seen on "The Carol Burnett Show."

Whoever worked the spotlight must have been high. It was most distracting. Not only was the timing inaccurate, the placement and size of the light was off, too. The person responsible for this should become an usher in a movie theatre. Perhaps operating a flashlight is a more suitable line of work.

My biggest complaint about "My Fair Lady" is that it was only at UMass for two performances. Anyone who missed it, for whatever reason, was deprived of an aesthetic experience. Alas, there will always be plays, and there will always be audiences. Wouldn't it be loverly if all musicals were as delightful as "My Fair Lady"?

UMass Music Theatre Guild

A lively musical comedy that won a New York Drama Critecs Circle Award in 1972, 'Two Gentlemen of Verona' will be performed in Bowker Auditorium of Stockbridge Hall, November 17, 18, 19, and 20, at 8 p.m.

Director Ben Marshall and his UMass Music Theatre Guild cast have been rehearsing this musical adaptation of Shakespeare's play for seven weeks. The blatant alterations in Shakespeare's text are less injurious not only because it is one of his earliest and lesser plays, but because the underlying message of love and fellowship clearly shows through.

A pricniple change is that Shakespeare's Verona to Milan setting becomes San Juan to New York City in this musical version of 'Two Gentlemen of Verona'.

The plot remains almost completely the same as Shakespeare outlined it. It involves a perennial shuffle of love affairs and courtly advances which result in a charming picture of love in full bloom.

A flagrantly fickle Proteus (Eugene Niles) falls flat for a meek Julia (Leslie Fleming Mitchell) who quickly becomes metamorphosized by him. Proteus' bosom buddy Valentine(Luis Benitez) leaves Verona for Milan to seek his fortune, and Proteus soon follows him after being ordered to do so by his father, Antonio (Robert Novak). Left behind, Julia and her faithful friend and consultant Lucetta (Joyce Abdun-Nabi) proceed in search of Proteus, clad as two gentlemen.

Meanwhile, in Milan, Proteus now loves a lusty and weak-willed Silvia (Cathy Carlston) but her father, the Duke of Milan (Peter Tolan) wishes her to wed a wealthy blockhead named Thurio (Brian Murphy).

Silvia and Valentine fall in love. When Valentine is banished, the deceitful and devious Proteus thinks he has Silvia, but her former lover Eglamour (Brian Kelly) steps in before they wed.

Eglamour whisks her away to the forest. The outcome is that Valentine returns from exile to win Silvia, Proteus regains Julia's love, Thurio chooses Lucetta, Proteus' servant Launce (David Farman) woos a milkmaid (Heidi Winer) and the show ends on a theme, 'love has driven me sane'.

Galt Macdermot's music is a combination of rock, lyricism, and Latin patter. John Guare's lyrics mingle Shakespeare with hilarious sensual connotations.

'Two Gentlemen of Verona' was brought from the open air of Central Park, to the Broadway stage of the St. James Theatre. It opened Dec. 1, 1971, and ran for 800 performances.

Clive Barnes of 'The New York Times' wrote, 'What I relly love about 'Two Gentlemen of Verona' is its simplicity...there are real people living and loving. Mr. Macdermot's music is more subtly shaded and more varigated than his score for 'Hair'. Mr. Guare's lyrics have a brusque toughness that is admirable, and his rhymes are occasionally as acerbic and rugged as his sentiments'.

Brendan Gill of the 'New Yorker' wrote, 'At the end of the opening night performance of 'Two Gentlemen of Verona', it seemed likely that nobody would ever consent to leave the theatre - neither the merry band of marvelous young people on stage, nor the audience that stood applauding'.

Musical Director of this oncoming performance is Judy Brown. Choreography is being done by Kerrie Lipsky and Ben Marshall. Tickets are now on sale at the Bowker Box Office. Students - $2.00, others - $2.50. For reservations, call 545-0783.

The Learned Ladies

Smith College will present The Learned Ladies in theater 14 Thursday, November 10-Saturday, November 12 at 8:00 p.m. The play is set in the late seventeenth century France, and parodies the fawning pseudo-intellectuals of the day, those who professed a love of knowledge solely to further their own reputations as scholars.

The Learned Ladies, a household triumvirate of mother, elder daughter, and sister-in-law, fancy themselves the enlightened women of their day but spend their time idly philosophizing and making plans to form their own school of intellectual thought.

The Learned Ladies is not only one of Moliere's last but perhaps best of his comedy-of-character plays. So effective was the playwright's parody, that audiences of the day recognized the very individual Moliere mocked.

Richard Wilber, distinguished American poet and translator, has been on the Smith campus throughout the rehearsal period of this production, as he is writer-in-residence in the Smith English Department this year.

The director of this production, Tina Packer, trained as an actress with the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. Seven years ago she truned to directing at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. She subsequently formed her own touring theater troup, Shakespeare and Company. While at Smith, Ms. Packer is also teaching a workshop in Shakespearean acting for five college students.

Smith's production has been entered in the American College Theater festival, presented by the John F. Kennedy Center for the performing Arts and the Alliance for Arts Education. This competition, which each year brings together the best of college theater, begins at each show's home institution. If the production passes this initial judging it will be produced at the regional festival in January at UMass.

Tickets may be purchased by visiting or calling Smith College Theater box office, 584-2700, ext. 840. A reduced rate is offered to students and senior citizens.

Jonah: Worker Alienation and more...

JONAH WHO WILL BE 25 IN THE YEAR 2000

directed by: Alain Tanner written by: Alain Tanner and John Berger

Jonah is a personal film which exposes the many difficulties that people encounter in capitalist society today. The film is the latest work of the Swiss director Alain Tanner, and is set in modern industrialized Geneva. Through the lives of eight characters, Tanner unfolds and examines the situation of people living in a society composed of institutions which alienate and frustrate them in the workplace, while at the same time fragments their family structure.

The characters are trying to realistically deal with their social situation so they can merely survive within it. In all of their cases, there is a severe gap between the world in which they live and their perception of what it should be. Unfortunately, in most cases, the real world barbarically circumvents their attempts for social change.

Matthieu is an unemployed factory worker who has been blacklisted because of his Marxist philosophy and union militancy. Mathilde, his spouse, works in a factory, and would like to have a child, but can't until her husband finds a job. Matthieu searches for work, and is hired by Maguerite and Marcel to shovel manure on their vegetable farm (a work situation that allows him to escape the industrial blacklisting.) Marcel is a naturalist-romantic who spends a lot his spare time painting pictures of animals, while Maguerite's prime concern is the farm. As this is happening, we meet Max, a Trotskyite who works as a proofreader. He has somewhat retired from any political activity, but rises to the occaision to foil a bank's attempt to acquire land and build "luxury slums." With the help of one of the bank's secretaries(whose name is Madeline and also Max's tantric lover) he acquires the names of all the people whose land the bank is trying to buy. He then visits all of the potential sellers to inform them of the bank's plan for their land. While doing this, he meets Marcel and Maguerite. Marco, a highschool history teacher, is the neighbor of Maguerite and Marcel. He falls in love with Marie, a supermarket cashier, whose own political activity is giving away food to the poor and the elderly. She is jailed for her charitable efforts, while Marco loses his teaching position for introducing anti-capitalist attitudes in the classroom. The film goes on to tell the story of the relationships amongst these characters and their dreams for society which ultimately are embodied in Mathilde's and Matthieu's newly born child Jonah.

Jonah, for whom and about whose future Jonas qui aura vingt-cinq ans dans l'an 2000 is named

One of the major concentrations of the film concerns the systematic oppression of the worker in society today. This is shown through: Matthieu's blacklisting, Marie's jailing, and Marco's firing. The worker, whether he/she works in a factory, store, or school must conform to the present system or be eliminated. Tanner is telling us that personal creativity and beliefs have no place even in our schools. As Tanner says: "Even if the factories aren't like those in Victorian England, the relationship between the worker and his work has not changed." This concept of worker oppression is further exemplified by the strategic placement of news footage in the film of the 1932 worker demonstrations in Switzerland where 13 people were killed by the Swiss army. Tanner comments: " I wanted to show how the Swiss army has never fired a shot in anger, except against the workers." Matthieu comments in the film: "from the day you learn to read or walk 'til the day the police and army fire on thousands like you."

Jonah is a film that has much to teach us, much more than I could ever write about in an article of this size. It shows characters in a remarkably real and personal way. We see them deal with situations that are common to many people in our own society. We see how they encounter their problems and hardships, while at the same time retaining humor and the hope of something better to come. The film at the same time beckons us to re-evaluate our present lives and aspirations. If one looks at the film another way, one might say what the New York Times said of Tanner's earlier film La Salamandre; "it's a dangerously appealing movie." My only reply to this is in the form of a question: "Dangerous to what--dangerous to whom?

Chaplin's Work

A WOMAN OF PARIS and SUNNYSIDE
both directed by Charlie Chaplin (1924)

For those of you who are long-time appreciators of the genius of Charlie Chaplin the re-release of these two films is a momentous occasion. At the time of their original release, the films greatly influenced other silent film directors, such as Ernst Lubitsch, for Chaplin was making significant innovations in silent film technique. He was the first to innovatively use visual images to tell his stories. He captured psychological factors; facial and eye expressions, the movement of hands and feet-instead of relying on titles to explain action in the film.

Chaplin, being involved in the Red Scare politics of the 1920's, withdrew these films from theaters for political reasons as he fled to England seeking political asylum. After a few years he moved to Switzerland where he still lives and composes today. It is only within the past two or three years that he composed the soundtracks for "Sunnyside" and "A Woman in Paris", preparing them for their re-release into sight-sound cinemas.

The first film shown is Sunnyside, a short. In the course of a day's work and love's labour, "Charlie the hotel-farmhand, etc., etc.," avoids his alienating labor and expresses himself in his day-dream fantasies. He had a delighful frolic with river nymphs while bringing the cows out to pasture, and then, after registering a rich city-gentleman to the hotel, he dreams of the loss of his lover (Edna Purviance, the leading lady in most of his early shorts) to the sophisticated dandy. He wakes in a jealous fury to find his love secure and his happiness with life and love intensified. This is a simple story of passion communicated in Chaplin's exquisite style that transcends the time and society in which it was contrived.

A Woman in Paris is the story of a woman, Marie St. Clair (Enda Purviance) who, abandoned by her father and disappointed by her fiance, Jean (Adolfe Menjou), goes to Paris, where "love is fickle and a woman gambles with life". She shares company with Pierre Revel, the richest bachelor in Paris, who supports her in a style to which few people are accustomed. He becomes engaged to an heiress of equal econonic stature, but wishes to keep Marie as his mistress. Marie becomes depressed and distraught. That same night she accidentally meets her old lover, Jean, who has moved to Paris with his widowed mother. The scene is set for all sorts of classic conflicts. Marie must decide between the happiness of marriage and the comforts of wealth. Jean must decide between his love for Marie and his devotion to his mother. The flame that sets this passion play on fire is the mother's possessive and manipulative relationship to her son. Chaplin keeps us in suspence with his strange and ironic juxtapositions right until the end, which is not all together unhappy.

Apportioned Action

Sidney Poitier and Bill Cosby in their new film "A Piece of the Action."

A PIECE OF THE ACTION
Directed by Sidney Poitier
Cast: Sidney Poitier, Bill Cosby,
James Earl Jones, Denise Nicholas,
Tracy Reed, Hope Clarke

Once again the talented team of Sidney Poitier and Bill Cosby have put together an hilarious and entertaining film designed not only to bring chuckles to your lips but ideas to your brain. This time the film is for everyone and is as much a Sunday afternoon family treat as a Saturday night date out. Produced by First Artists Productions an artist owned company whose principles include Poitier, Steve McQueen, Dustin Hoffman, Paul Newman, and Barbara Streisand, A Piece of The Action is the best Hollywood team-effort so far.

The film centers around the exploits of cat-burglar Bill Cosby and con-man Sidney Poitier whose careers in crime are nipped in the bud by retiring detective, Joshua Logan Burke, played with ease and effectiveness by James Earl Jones. Threatening to turn them over to the police, Burke forces these two hustlers to put their talents to work at the Benjamin Banneker Community Development Center educating and training young jobless black children and finding them legitimate jobs. Turning chaos into fun and deprivation into an educational experience, Cosby and Poitier turn the Center upside down as they assist social workers Denise Nicholas and Hope Clarke in providing these youngsters with hope in a hopeless society. All is not fun, however, when syndicate leader Bruno (Tito Vandis) settles the score with our heroes for their "pre-reform" exploits. Kidnapping Poitier's girlfriend, Tracy Reed, the mob leader hopes to make his money back in ransom, but runs into trouble when Burke teams up with the ex-hustlers for one last caper.

The film incorporates clever performances on the part of all the actors with scathing social criticism dispensed in a subtle comic way assuring mass market palatability. Directed by Sidney Poitier, A Piece Of The Action is another example of the social responsibility of the artist, functionally respectful of the identity and integrity of the audience. Be you black or white, or any color in between, this film will set you thinking and laughing at the same time and is every bit worth of the admission price to see.

The music to the film was composed by Curtis Mayfield and rendered capably by Mavis Staples, one of the Staples singers. The soundtrack recording is available on Curtom Records and the only complaint this critic has with it is that it does not capture the humor of the film, only the music. Some people may find that enough; I don't. See the picture first before deciding on any additional money to be spent.

Mt. Farms Four

Ticket Prices: 2.50-adults, 1.25 children, 50 cent discount for students and senior citizens with the purchase of a discount card (regular shows only), 1.25 twilight shows (all early shows).

The Mt. Farms Four Theater complex located in the Hadley Mall is the area's commercial multi-cinema unit. This theater is part of the second largest chain in the country, and it reflects this image. Despite this major handicap, the theater is a good place to see a film. The advantage of a multi-unit cinema is the variety; at least one in four must be worthwhile. At this theater, like at Holiday Inns, you get no surprises. Film fare here is usually commercial current release items with an occasional cult film thrown in.

There are a few things about this theater which must be mentioned. First off, the concession stand has the widest variety of junk food and the most reasonable prices of any of the local theaters. In addition to this, the lobby areas are often decorated with film momorabilia and props from current films. This serves to break up the somewhat bland atmosphere found within. These extras and the low Twi-lite price make the Mt. Farms 4 a healthy alternative to the alternative cinema found in the Five College area.

The Calvin

Ticket Prices: 2:50 adults, 1.00 seniors and children, Mon. & Tues. are dollar nights on selected films.

The Calvin is the Amherst Cinema's sister theater in the Western Mass. chain. It is located on on 19 King St. in the center of Northampton. Unlike the the Amherst Cinema this theater runs films of commercial nature and tries to attract much of the non-student audience from in and around the Northampton area. This theater is a large old house seating 1313 (very lucky)- combined floor and balcony. The atmosphere here is friendly and reminiscent of many of the old city theaters dedicated to entertaining the viewer.

Archie Shepp

ARCHIE SHEPP. THE RAMOS DANCERS. AND ANDREW SALKEY TO PERFORM IN BENEFIT CONCERT TONIGHT AT FINE ARTS CENTER

UMass Professor of Music Archie Shepp will perform in a benefit concert for the Che-Lumumba School with Jamaican poet Andrew Salkey and the Theater Dance Ensemble under the direction of Diana Ramos at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall this evening at eight.

Shepp, a gifted tenor saxophonist, has been one of the foremost figures in creative Afro-American music since the mid-sixties, having studied under the tutelage of tenor saxophonist and colossal innovator John Coltrane before fully developing his own style, which now (more than ever) is one that embraces the vast richness of various styles that have develped through the history of Afro-American music. He has been a major innovator in his own right, and has played a leading role as an apostle of both "free music" and of the incorporation of more indiginously African properties into current Afro-American music. This musician has always had a strong sense of social responsibility and has performed many benefit concerts and has recorded many albums dedicated to the liberation struggles of people throughout the world, those of Black people in particular. Professor Shepp has just returned from Europe where he was on a month's tour of France, Italy and Belgium.

The Theatre Dance Ensemble, under the direction of Diana Ramos, will perform a collaborative work, and Ms. Ramos will perform a solo dance piece to the accompaniment of the poetry of John Williams and a piano composition by Marion Brown. Ms. Ramos is a very talented dancer with much experience and has a strong sense of social commitment.

Andrew Salkey is currently Associate Professor of Writing at Hampshire College and teaches poetry and fiction workshops. He will be reading poetry for tonight's program. He has joined his Carribbean counterparts in seminars and performances all over this country, in Europe and Latin America.

Shepp shall be joined by Charles Mageed Greenlee on trombone, Siegfried Kessler on piano, Cameron Brown on bass, and Charles Jarv is on drums. Shepp's compositions, as well as those of other Black musicians of great reknown, will provide music dedicated to the Black and Third World Unity.

The Che Lumumba School, for whom the concert is being performed, is an organization based on campus that provides accredited, alternative, and Third World education for its students.

This promises to be an inspirational concert put on by talented and dedicated artists of a more than worthwhile cause. We advise you to attend it. There is a two-dollar donation at the door.

MARY WHITE

FRIDAY

'Mary White,' an 'ABC Theatre' special inspired by Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist William Allen White's legendary editorial, will be presented on ABC-TV Friday, Nov. 18.

Starring as White is the double Emmy Award-winning actor Ed Flanders. Kathleen Beller portrays the pivotal role of White's daughter Mary, whose tragic death in a horseback riding accident at the age of 16 led to the famous, poignant editorial.

Much of the program was filmed in the home where Mary and her family actually lived. This moving testimony to love and to life itself focuses on the complex but deeply affectionate relationship between White, one of the nation's most influential newspapermen, and his daughter Mary. When she was killed accidentally, White immortalized her memory in one of the most moving editorials ever printed. In a recent poll of journalists and journalism students, it was named one of the three best-known editorials in the history of American journalism.

Report implies tax evasion

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The UMass president's office yesterday released an independent report of all "discretionary monies" controlled by top University officials which left open the possibility of income tax evasion by two campus chancellors.

Non-monetary income in the form of housing allowances was cited by the firm of Hurdman and Cranstoun, certified public accountants, as "in fact, compensation and subject to federal and Massachusetts income tax withholding" for both Worcester Chancellor Roger J. Bulger and Boston Chancellor Carlo L. Golino.

The report did not make clear if the two chancellors are paying taxes on the allowances, termed "perquisites" by the University.

Bulger, in a telephone interview yesterday, said his $500 per month housing allowance is reported to the Internal Revenue Service each year.

Golino, who receives $800 per month for housing, said in a telephone interview yesterday that "it's not anybody's business" if he reported those allowances to the IRS.

"That's between myself and the IRS," he said.

UMass President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery do not receive any "perquisite" income.

The report, requested by Wood during the summer to establish total compensation for the president and the three chancellors including both state and non-state monies, was released to the Board of Trustees 10 days ago.

Wood, in a telephone interview yesterday, said he requested the report in order for those involved in the search process, including applicants for the position of UMass president, would know exactly what compensation each senior officer receives. Wood will step down as president Jan. 1.

Perquisite income, as defined in the report, is "something of value or benefit provided to an official in addition to regular salary. They are customarily associated with recognition of status or special privilege and are provided on a regular basis."

Money for the allowances Bulger and Golino receive comes from a discretionary account, money which is accrued from the investment of student fee-based trust funds, of which a large portion is set aside for DURHAM, N.H. — The Beanpot is back in Amherst.

After a five-year leave of absence, the trophy, awarded to the Yankee Conference champion, returned to campus Saturday following the UMass football team's hard-earned, 19-6 victory over defending champion New Hampshire before more than 20,000 at Cowell Stadium. The win gives UMass sole possession of the Beanpot for the first time since 1972, and assures the Minutemen a berth in the Division II playoffs.

"This has to be my biggest game ever," said elated UMass coach Dick MacPherson. "This one was for all the bananas and we won it."

The Minuteman offense clicked for a first quarter touchdown by Billy Coleman, and added fourth quarter scores by Hank Sareault and John Romboli to provide the margin of victory. But it was the defense, sparked by Dave Croasdale's three interceptions and a stiff goal line stand that ultimately determined the outcome.

The key to the game, concurred both coaches, occurred early in the second half with the Minutemen holding a 6-0 advantage. On its first possession of the third quarter, the UNH offense, which had been stifled in the first half, began to assert itself.

Behind the running of halfback Bill Burnham and three pass completions by quarterback Jeff Allen, the Wildcats marched the football from their own 12-yard line to UMass' seven in 12 plays. Two runs put the ball on UMass' one. But two successive carries by Burnham on third and fourth down fell short and UNH's best scoring opportunity was stopped.

"The key was that goal line stand," said MacPherson. "All I was thinking was we gotta stop them here. After stopping them and then getting that second touchdown, they had to go to a catchup offense. That was the ball game."

"We had two downs and one yard to go, but couldn't make it," said UNH coach Bill Bowes. "They have a great defensive squad and when you get an opportunity to score you have to take advantage of it. We didn't."

Charthel Arthur of the internationally known Joffrey Ballet displays her mastery of the art of dance. The company is celebrating its 21st year under the directorship of Robert Joffrey and will perform its New England premiere at UMass Nov. 15, 16, and 17.

In celebration of its 21st anniversary, the highly acclaimed Joffrey Ballet Company will hold New England premiere performances Nov. 15, 16, and 17 at the Fine Arts Concert Hall.

At a recent luncheon meeting at the Lord Jeffrey Inn, sponsored by the Fine Arts Council, Joffrey Ballet star Charthel Arthur and company publicist Ken Martini spoke with members of the press about the company.

Arthur, who has been with the Joffrey for 12 and one half years discussed the background of the company as well as some of her experiences as a professional dancer.

Both Arthur and Martini agreed that the Joffrey is doing quite well this year, and that the National Endowment of the Arts gave them $450,000. Arthur said, "The audiences accept us as a dance company now." Martini added, "The repertory of the company is widespread."

Apparently, many other dance companies across the globe want to use the works created by Gerald Arpino, assistant director and chief choreographer of the Joffrey. Arpino has had several offers to work on Broadway plays and for other dance companies; but refuses so he can devote all of his time to the Joffrey.

Arthur described Arpino as working mutually with the dancer in choreographing. "He's very good at seeing what looks good on a person. He makes you look your best. If he feels that a piece should be longer, he'll extend the music," she said.

Nevertheless, the Joffrey Ballet repertory includes the works of other artists such as George Ballanchine, Twyla Tharp, Agnes B. DeMille, and the late Jose Limon. Robert Joffrey, founder of the company likes to recreate ballets done by others.

Arthur, who is married to Joffrey dancer Robert Estrur, obtained her early training in Pasadena, Calif. Upon high school graduation, she studied in Canada with Winn Show. It was Shaw who recommended Arthur to Robert Joffrey, who was looking for new dancers at the time.

After receiving a scholarship to the Joffrey School, she became an apprentice in six months. She said that approximately 60 to 70 per cent of the Joffrey Ballet Dancers have come through the school, and into the Joffrey II company first.

Since Arthur is expecting a baby, she is not presently performing. When asked about future plans, she said, "If I feel at ease and comfortable staying at home with my family, then maybe I'll stay there...But I'll probably go back to the company."

Arthur was impressed with the scope and diversity of the five-college dance department. She had this to say to prospective professional dancers, "Go to New York, and study at the different schools, because that's the way to be seen. You never know, some director might like you enough to take you on."

Arthur agreed the training and performance experience that could be acquired at in the five-college dance department was invaluable to the dance student.

Tickets are now on sale for the performances at the Fine Arts Council Box Office.

Workers' group helps out women

By JANET HOEBING
Collegian Staff

Are you a woman suffering from low-pay, job discrimination, sexual harassment, or just plain boredom? If you are, and are interested in meeting others who share your "gripes", you may be interested in the 12-1 Clerical Workers organization ("12-1").

This support and action group by and for women office workers emerged out of a workshop last fall, when groups of clerical workers met over lunch (12-1 p.m.) to discuss common complaints, said Florence Estes, committee member of "12-1".

12-1 offers workshops for all concerned women to come and discuss problems. Since 90 per cent of all clerical jobs on campus are held by women, there are undoubtedly many frustrated people out there, said Estes. Currently, there are hundreds of interested women, and about 50 working members, she said. It is a volunteer organization, and everyone contributes their thoughts; there is no hierarchy, Estes said.

Susan Hammond, one of the core of about 10 women making up the steering committee, urges women to take advantage of the program. "We are here to point out avenues of change that are open to them," she said.

Judith Kinney, also a committee member, said there are many women who do not realize men are getting higher pay than they are. Most women are not evern aware of the organization, said Kinney.

Jane Fleishman, another committee member, describes 12-1 as being a "take-off" from the clerical group in Boston known as 9-5. "We are daughters of 9-5, and we are starting a regional network of clerical workers," she said.

Fleishman and Kinney recently appeared at a meeting in Boston to represent 12-1 in demanding implementation of affirmative action laws.

Kinney said they appeared before Walter Parker of the Employment Standards Administration and William Richardson of the Office of the Federal Contract Complaince Program, to present statistics on employment inequities at UMass. Richardson said UMass' Affirmative Action plan was not a "bona fide" one, and he agreed with the Health, Education, and Welfare administration that forceful action had to be taken.

The 12-1 women were excited that the government realized their needs, but it was stated at the meeting that action will be delayed due to a review by HEW of Affirmative Action at UMass. "However, we have been noticed, and they know we are not kidding," said Kinney.

A questionnaire has recently been devised by the staff and has been distributed to all the campus clerical workers to measure their personal experiences, said Estes. So far 30 per cent have been returned. "There is a real need to find out their true feelings," she said, "and anyone else who would like to receive a questionnaire is urged to stop by the workshop."

Workshops are being held at 901 Campus Center, Tuesdays from noon to 1 p.m. Fleischman urges women to come and share frustrations about their jobs. "We cannot do anything alone; our greatest gift is our numbers," she said.

Lawrence Swamp studied

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

For the second time in four weeks, Amherst Town Meeting members will be asked to consider a $63,000 engineering study as a starting point in developing Lawrence Swamp as a possible future water source.

Reconsideration of the Lawrence Swamp test proposal, along with five new articles, is scheduled for consideration at the special Town Meeting tonight at 7:30 in the regional junior high school auditorium on Chestnut St. The meeting will be broadcast live by WMUA, 91.1 FM.

The Lawrence Swamp test well proposal, one of three "water articles," was defeated by Town Meeting on Oct. 14. The assembly at that time voted to further consider offers to purchase water from the town of Hadley and the Metropolitan District Commission.

A majority of the Board of Selectmen, however, said after the meeting they felt the proposal had not been adequately explained to Town meeting members, placed the proposal on the agenda for tonight's meeting. A fall special town meeting is regularly scheduled by the selectmen, who have the authority to ask the assembly to reconsider any article.

Board members Diana H. Romer, Nancy B. Eddy, and Nathaniel M. Reed have backed the proposal on the grounds that testing will be beneficial to the town in the future, even if the supply is not immediately developed.

Selectmen William C. Atkins and Roger Q. Jaques have opposed the testing. They claim the test is wasteful, and that the offer from Hadley, coupled with existing water supplies, would be a more logical solution.

A recent study by consulting engineers Tighe and Bond showed that water usage had increased to the point where additional supplies are needed to insure an adequate supply in the future to come.

OHAG treasurer resigns

Orchard Hill Area Government Treasurer Jeff Cohen last night announced his resignation of that post and said he will assume the position of co-chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Budget Committee.

In a motion written by Cohen, it was suggested that $500 be donated to the Jeff Cohen Center for Political Relief considering the fact that he has "promoted only the highest ideals and contributed exhausting hours" throughout his eight-month career. The motion was defeated.

Concerning candidates for the position, a meeting will be held next Sunday at 7 p.m. in room 103, of Dickinson house to discuss the role of treasurer with the executive body. Nomination papers can be picked up outside of room 103.

OHAG last night voted to grant signature power to one person from each center whose budget exceeds $750. This power can only be used by each person for their respective categories and will be revoked if any fiscal report is not submitted on time.

★ Tax evasion implied

Boston Chancellor Golino, Amherst Chancellor Bromery, and University President Wood. Golino, who recently resigned his post, along with Worcester campus Chancellor Bulger may be cited for possible tax evasion.

providing services to the University which cannot be paid for by state monies.

For the current fiscal year, these funds amount to $675,000 for the University. Currently, this money is being used to finance a day care center at the Boston campus, scholarships, recruitment and entertainment by University officials, to name a few.

Currently, President Wood has a salary of $51,789, receives no perquisite income, has the use of a state car and receives $20,000 in discretionary funds each year.

Bromery also has use of a state car, receives a $44,443 salary and $16,000 in discretionary money.

Golino leases his car on a monthly basis, receives a $43,330 salary, his $800 housing allowance included in his $25,000 in discretionary funds.

Likewise, Bulger leases a car, has a salary of $50,850 and has his $500 per month housing allowance included in the $16,500 discretionary allowance he receives each year.

Howard White, director of University Relations, stressed in a cover letter accompanying the report that "it was not intended to be a transaction audit."

Wood said the firm was called in to certify that the "process, procedures, controls and documentation" were adequate for discretionary accounts and its expenditures.

Wood said if there was any mishandling of the money "it wasn't seen" by the firm.

Hurdman and Cranstoun have completed similar audits on discretionary funds for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University, Wood said, and it is the firm's "informal judgement" that UMass rates "a poor third in the way we manage this."

As far as the chancellors reporting their perquisite income to the federal government, Wood said, "I'm taking the position if you trust the chancellors with millions of dollars of expenditures at the campuses, they'll settle their own financial situation.

"I'm not going to ask them for income tax receipts," Wood said, although he said he does require the three chancellors and himself to submit a budget to the Board of Trustees each year and a detailed summary of how the money was expended.

Wood said that as each chancellor was hired, the University made clear that the housing payments could not be a source of personal gain if they decided to sell their homes and buy new ones.

The chancellor "can't gain by it," Wood said.

Bromery is the only University official to live on campus in a house owned by the state.

In a telephone interview last night, Bromery described his job as a "24-hour" one.

"If anything major ever comes up," he said, "campus security has orders to call me."

Bromery said one of the major problems has been reconciling his house to what the other two chancellors are getting in housing payments. Worcester and Boston are not 24-hour campuses, he said.

Wood said, "The important thing to remember, is that these (payments) evolved over the years; we tried to build a system.

"We're trying to get the total compensation package known, so people won't fix on the new president as having a great bundle," Wood said.

He said the differences in the amounts the different chancellors receive represents some "rough judgements" on his part as to the "character and extent of University activities."

Wood said he had to consider cost of living, the different character of the campuses and differences in entertaining in setting up the packages for the chancellor.

Bulger said he used to have a state car, but it was "bad publicity" for the University if he was seen in it at any time other than 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, so he leased a car with discretionary monies instead. Bulger said he did not consider the car taxable since he only uses it for University business.

Golino said, "The money is accounted for down to the last penny." He referred to the discretionary monies controlled by senior level administrators as "peanuts" when compared to other colleges and universities in the United States.

The firm reviewing the accounts also recommended that the discretionary accounts, now in the names of the three chancellors and the president, be put in the name of the University, and that the accounts "be reconciled" by persons outside the immediate staffs of the officers, a procedure already followed.

The report also urged the continuation of budgeting for the discretionary accounts, and that a statement of policy be drawn up by the trustees.

Currently, Wood's discretionary money is held in Barclay's Bank in Boston, Bromery's in Northampton National Bank, Golino's in the First American Bank and Bulger's in the Peoples Savings Bank.

Criticism levied at course guide

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The course and teacher evaluation guide which hit the campus early last week was met with both negative and positive responses by faculty, administration, and students.

The Provost's Office received complaints about the guide, concerning some of the graphics depicting several departments and many teachers felt their evaluations were not representative of the total number of students in their classes.

Student Government Association co-President Jon Hite received student and faculty complaints on the guide. The complaining parties referred to the graphics as being crude, racist, derogatory and disgusting. Hite apologized to the Faculty Senate at their Thursday meeting, but did not apologize for the guide. "For any one who was offended I apologize for the graphics," he said. "I feel there were definite high spots, and we should continue with this guide as long as we iron out the rough parts. A higher response rate from students is needed to make it a success," Hite said.

The evaluations were compiled from a survey in the Collegian last semester, and a survey sent out by Whitmore. For the future, Hite is trying to come up with a system to use five questions, and rate the teachers on the basis of the replies.

The SGA talked about such a guide for the past four years, Hite said, and he feels the guide should be less political and more straight forward. The best way to get to every student, he suggested, was to send a letter by bulk mail to on and off campus students. The letter would have questions to evaluate each teacher and hopefully result in a more complete evaluation.

Hite said he feels the guide has a great future. "The course description guide is from the faculty, it is based on what they think they will teach but not actually what students did or did not get out of the course. The course and teacher evaluation guide will keep students informed before they take the class," he said.

The reason all teachers were not evaluated, according to Hite, is because the SGA sent letters asking faculty members to release their own evaluations. They were told the evaluations were not public information, so all records could not be looked into, he said.

Hopefully, Hite said, the book will be more consistent in the way it evaluates the faculty. A grading system and comments below would be most effective. This would incorporate the two methods used, he said.

Hite explained that this first issue is a rough version. The quality and readability of the guide will improve with the issues as did the course description guide, he said.

The graphics that were most offensive seemed to be the ones used in the German Dept. and the French-Italian Dept. Ingrid Buauschinger, German Dept. chairman, said in reference to the graphic, "I thought it was apparently done by a young person that did not know the full meaning the picture represents. It shows inexperience and youth, and I suggest this person might take a German History course to learn what the symbol means."

French-Italian Dept. Chairman Micheline Dufau said in response to the graphic representing her department, "I think it's

Ed King—unclear on higher education

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Democrat Edward J. King announced his candidacy for governor of Massachusetts two weeks ago, and by his own admission needs to work on some of the issues, particularly that of state support of public higher education.

King calls himself a "proven administrator." An ex-pro footballer of Buffalo Bills fame, he has held a variety of administrative positions including executive director of the Massachusetts Port Authority from 1959-1974, assistant director and comptroller of the Museum of Science, and his present position, president of the New England Council.

Speaking before a small group of local democrats at the Amherst Town Hall Thursdays, King said he was not aware Massachusetts was 48th in per capita support of public higher education, but added he would look into this issue.

A Collegian interview earlier in the day with King revealed that on the issue of Gov. Dukakis' reorganization plan for higher education, he was also uninformed.

King did point out, however, that Massachusetts boosted its support of all education by approximately $3 million.

"I'm interested in anything to be done in controlling that cost, but yet getting equal or better education. If we could better match our general needs, cracking the theme that

Mayor dumps arrested cops

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — In the wake of the arrest of another Northampton policeman, Mayor David W. Cramer Friday announced the plans to put additional men on the force.

Patrolman William M. Mazuch Thursday pleaded not guilty in Hampshire County Superior Court to the charge of kidnapping James L. Robinson, then a Northampton resident.

According to District Attorney John M. Callahan, on Jan. 13, 1975, Mazuch drove Robinson to Holyoke and assaulted him severely enough to send Robinson to Providence Hospital in Holyoke for 13 days. Mazuch was on duty and in uniform at the time of the incident.

Judge George Hayer ordered Mazuch released on $10,000 bail and scheduled a hearing for Nov. 28.

Police Chief James J. Whalen had told the ad hoc committee investigating the police department he did not think there would be any more incidents. Whalen later said he knew of the district attorney's investigation of Mazuch when he met with the committee.

Prior to Mazuch's hearing, patrolman Lucas F. Scanlan pleaded not guilty to 21 charges of breaking and entering while on duty. Among these indictments is the charge that Scanlan had stolen $36,000 from Caldor's on Dec. 6, 1976.

Both Scanlan and Mazuch are on indefinite leaves of absence.

The department is operating with a shortage of 13 men, requiring many officers to work overtime. Several beats in the city cannot be covered. During the week some of the shifts do not include an on-duty sergeant, according to Whalen.

Mayor Cramer plans to meet with Civil Service and public safety officials to discuss the possibility of appointing six or seven permanent patrolmen to the department.

Over 30 people stood on Amherst Common yesterday morning for one and one half hours amid snow flurries in an effort to let the area residents know who Karen Silkwood was. "Over 1000 vigils like this one were held nationwide to commemorate Karen's death," said Rick Dodge, a UMass student. All these people felt close to Silkwood, although none of them knew her. Why are so many concerned that she died?

The story of Karen Silkwood, the anti-nuclear activist, began in 1972. It ended in 1974 with her death at age 28. The events that surrounded her death resulted in congressional hearings that to this day have remained closed.

"It's scary to see the enormous amount of power behind the people who are for nuclear energy," said Jeffrey Carlson, a participant of the vigil. "If they are the people who have kept the proceedings of her hearings closed, what are they afraid of?" he said.

Silkwood, a member of the Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers International Union, was working for the Kerr-McGee plutonium plant in Crescent, Okla. when she met her death. She had been involved in the investigation of health and safety violations, and the possibility of falsification of quality control methods used in the production of plutonium fuel rods at the plant.

In November of 1974, Silkwood discovered she had been exposed to high levels of contamination from plutonium. After it was determined that this wasn't a result of her job, she found that her apartment was also highly contaminated. All her personal possessions then had to be buried as a result.

About a week later while on her way to a meeting to disclose the information she had gathered against Kerr-McGees' supposed violations to a New York Times reporter and an OCAW official, she was killed instantly as her car crashed just down the road from the Kerr-McGee plant. Police report that before the accident, Silkwood had fallen asleep at the wheel.

Investigation by a private firm has determined that her car had been struck from behind before the crash. The documented evidence against Kerr-McGee, which witnesses have testified she had with her as she left for the meeting, were never recovered.

In a performance by local musicians Tex LaMountain and Pat DeCou at the vigil, they sang "No one would listen and believe if not for tragedies." LaMountain later said they became interested in Silkwood because "she connected all our goals in her struggle against the hazards of nuclear power."

"The main purpose of the vigil was to inform people. If it reached only 10 or 20 people, it will have been worthwhile," said Stephan Cohen, organizer of the Amherst vigil that was sponsored by the Alternative Energy Coalition of Hampshire County.

When asked why people hadn't heard more about Silkwood, Dodge said, "She's only a small part of the whole nuclear question." Freddi Perry, a UMass student said, "It's encouraging to see so many people out here to let everyone know what's going on."

The feeling that Silkwood was close to everyone through her work for the OCAW was summed up by Rob Wilson-Okun, an AEC member, when he said, "I feel a personal loss in her death, she could've been a friend, or a sister. That someone worked so hard to educate people is really inspiring.

Chicken wire has great 'scope'

Twenty miles east of Amherst, four bowl-shaped structures made of chicken wire are catching radio signals from outer space. They are part of the Five-College Radio Astronomy Observatory, a cooperative project run by five-college students, professors, and a small in-house staff of technicians.

The observatory is located in a remote area near the Quabbin Reservoir. It is within the watershed management area which has restricted public access. This isolated site is ideal because radio telescopes are sensitive to interference from cars, radio stations, aircraft, and sometimes home appliances.

While touring the observatory, UMass Professor Nick Scoville explained that the four bowl-shaped structures are meter-wave radio telescopes. They are 120 feet in diameter and 30 feet high. Radio waves from various directions in space are reflected off the wire dish to a receiver located above it at a focal point.

The data is then recorded by computer on magnetic tapes. These four telescopes are currently being used to study pulsars, exploded stars that emit bursts off radio waves.

The observatory's other equipment includes a fifth, more sensitive radio telescope enclosed in a 60-foot white dome, and a one story laboratory building which houses computer equipment and reference material.

The construction of the observatory, which began in 1969, was done almost entirely by the staff. Students did carpentry work, wiring, poured concrete, and put up antennas.

Inside the lab building three of four technicians work silently, assembling electronic equipment. They are nearing the completion of the fifth telescope, a millimeter-wave telescope. It will be far more sensitive than the other four and must be protected from the weather by the dome. There are only three other telescopes like it in the world, according to Scoville. "This is the largest antenna for high frequency radio astronomy in the world," he said.

The millimeter-wave telescope was prefabricated and is made of aluminum panels assembled to form a dish 45 feet in diameter. The telescope is mounted so it can be rotated to face any direction. It is expected to be in operation within a few months.

A number of projects are planned for the millimeter telescope. Astronomers from Germany and other countries will be visiting the observatory with its unique telescope, Scoville said. He and the other observatory researchers will use this new telescope to study gas clouds in space. It is within these pockets of condensed gas that new stars are formed. They hope to learn more about this process, Scoville said.

Deadline for final grades advanced by FacSen

By MEGAN O'REILLY

Faculty may have to cut showr their New Year's celebrations this year as the Faculty Senate unanimously voted last Thursday to advance the date for final submissions of grades to noon on Wednesday, Jan. 4, 1978.

Previously there was no specific final date for the submission of grades, according to Peter Manning, chairman of the Space and Calendar Committee, and grades were being submitted as late as Jan. 9, interfering with Data Processing, which is the final step before grades are sent to students.

James Shaw, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, explained at the senate's bi-weekly meeting that this move will provide approximately 1,000 students not reinstated because of poor academic standing, with five to seven more days to make necessary adjustments to their new status and allow the deans more time for the evaluation of their academic records.

Questions were raised by various senators as to the faculty's ability to abide by the new regulations. In past years, some students had received their grades over the phone because they were submitted well into January. Faculty will still have a minimum of two weeks to comply with final grading.

Chairman of the Rules Committee David Yaukey said the committee will accept an invitation to meet tomorrow with its student counterpart, the Executive Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate. Jon Hite,

★ Business 'king' according to Ed

Massachusetts excells in scientific knowledge, we could keep the Data Generals from leaving the state," said King.

After questioned as to how he voted on last year's bottle bill, King replied there was no substantiated reason to show the bill would not hurt the economy.

"We cannot stand any dent to hurt the economy...the perception by business is that it's an anti-business measure. Rather than cause any more damage, let's leave it alone," he added.

King's major concern is to cool off the "anti-business climate" which he claims has been perpetuated by the performance of the Dukakis administration and has resulted in a "vicious circle of economic stagnation."

"Without investment by the private sector to create new jobs," reads his campaign literature, "there is no way to alleviate unemployment and welfare and the increasing taxpayer burden. And there can be no improvement in the quality of our social, educational, and health care services."

King's answer to the "anti-business climate" is a dual proposition; cabinet appointments based on the criteria of promoting business in the state, and, solving the welfare and unemployment problems.

"We need people who have a commitment to a well thought out plan and will not simply throw it out and forget all about it when questions are asked and leadership is needed," he states in his campaign literature.

At the base of King's "well thought out plan" is solving the state's energy problem, and if questioned on nuclear power, the answer from King is, "I support it."

While discussing the nuclear power issue at the Amherst Town Hall, King said he realized this area was not a "citadel of nuclear power support" but nevertheless, nuclear power is a reality "if you want employment and social benefits."

According to King, the cost of energy is the underlying weakness of the state's economy. King informed those present at the Town Hall that the average cost of energy in New England is 31 per cent higher than the average cost in the rest of the nation, and in Massachusetts the figures are the highest because we depend more on imported oil.

King also said he supports offshore oil drilling, coal conversion if economically and environmentally feasible, and solar power.

Of the latter, while president of the New England Council, he secured a grant from the U.S. Energy Research Development Agency in 1975 which resulted in the New England Solar Energy Center being built in Cambridge.

King loaned $20,000 of his own money to fund his campaign but has raised much over that in recent weeks. Last week a fund raising event brought in $41,000 for the King campaign which is shooting for $300,000 by Jan. 1.

When asked if most of his funding comes from the business sector, King replied, "Mostly, but you should understand that business is people."

Schedule pamphlets available

Schedule Pamphlets for spring semester will be distributed today. The pamphlet will include Undergraduate, Graduate, and Stockbridge course listings.

For undergraduate students, the pamphlet will be available at noon on the Campus Center Concourse.

For graduate students, the pamphlets will be available in the appropriate departments.

For faculty, the pamphlets will be distributed by the Calendar and Schedule Office to departments today and tomorrow.

Students who fail to obtain a Schedule Pamphlet today may pick one up tomorrow at the Calendar and Schedule office in Whitmore after 9 a.m., as long as the supply lasts.

The number printed permits the distribution of one per person. Please take only one and retain it for use through the spring semester.

Fusion energy power source

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Physicists at Johns Hopkins University are studying atomic particles on earth to find a way to reproduce the kind of energy — called fusion energy — found in the sun and the other stars.

Funded with a $625,000 grant by the U.S. Department of Energy, the group is using a fusion machine it hopes will one day provide an abundant and relatively cheap supply of power.

Experimental fusion machines designed to trigger and sustain fusion reactions have been built in the United States, Japan, the Soviet Union and Europe.

Headed by Dr. H. Warren Moos and Dr. Lloyd Armstrong, the program is focusing on impurities in the fusion process — small amounts of oxygen, nitrogen, carbon and other substances that reduce the effectiveness of the fusion reactions.

Fusion, or the joining of atomic particles to release energy, requires temperatures of 60 million degrees to 90 million degrees Celsius in a gas-like mixture called the plasma.
